JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

SIR R. COUCH:—The suit in this appeal was brought by the respondent against the wife of the appellant Syed Nurul Hossein, Mussummat Bibi Saidan, who died pending the appeal, and is represented by the present appellants. The plaint prayed for the determination and adjudication of the right of the plaintiff to and for possession of mauza Bhadar Khord, pargana Pachlakh, said to be acquired by Dwarka Lal, great-grandfather of the plaintiff and husband of Mussummat Parbati Koer, with his ancestral money. Dwarka Lal died in 1819, intestate and childless, leaving Parbati Koer his widow, who entered into possession of his estate. On the 30th May 1865, Parbati Koer, described as widow and heiress [4] of Babu Dwarka Das, deceased, executed a mokhtarnama, by which she appointed Parsotim Das, described therein as son of the late Juggernath Pershad, deceased, and her own adopted son, her general mokhtar, with power to alienate or sell any moveable or immoveable properties for any consideration. On the 15th May 1868 Parsotim Das executed a deed of sale, by which, in consideration of Rs. 9,575, he sold the whole of the mauza Bhadar Khord to Mussummat Bibi Saidan absolutely. He is described in the deed as "general mokhtar and executor under the will dated the 6th June 1853, and adopted son of Mussummat Parbati Koer, widow of Babu Dwarka Das, deceased, by virtue of a general power-of-attorney," and the deed contains the following passage:—"My client, the vendor, and her heirs and representatives, and I as mokhtar, who am the general mokhtar, adopted son, and executor under the will of the vendor, and my heirs and representatives, have now no claim, right, demand, or contention in respect to the property sold and the said consideration money against the vendee and her heirs and representatives. I as mokhtar have made a general renunciation of the same. Such renunciation is legal and valid."

Parbati Koer died on the 21st June 1879. The heir of Dwarka Lal, or Dwarka Das as he was sometimes called, then entitled to succeed to his estate, was Lokenath, the grandson of Dindyal Ram, the paternal uncle of Dwarka Lal. Lokenath died on the 21st September 1881, leaving Parsotim Das, who was the grandson of Behari Lal, his paternal uncle, and the respondent and his five brothers, who were great grandsons of Behari Lal, surviving him. On the death of Lokenath a dispute arose between Parsotim and the respondent and another person as to the right to succeed to his estate, the respondent claiming to do so on the ground of Lokenath having brought him up as his son. Petitions for a certificate under Act XXVII 1860 were presented by the parties, and pending the decision of the case a compromise was come to, which is stated in a petition to the Court dated the 18th February 1882 of the respondent and Parsotim. A division was thereby made of the estate, and the material part for the present suit is in the 4th paragraph. That states that Parsotim Das "has and shall have nothing to do with anything that may be acquired" by means of a suit which had been instituted by Lokenath to obtain [5] possession of another mauza which had been sold, "or any other case instituted by virtue of the right of inheritance to the estate of Dwarka Lal, but that Sheosahai Lal alias Matru Lal alone shall derive benefit or suffer losses from the same." The first Court properly decided that the plaintiff was not the heir to Lokenath. They also held that he could not have any right, in consequence of the relinquishment of Parsotim Das in his favour, to recover possession of the property in dispute, on the ground that he executed all the documents relating to the alienation by Parbati Koer, that it was made with his full consent, and as the reversionary heir of her husband he could not sue to have it set aside and recover possession from the purchaser, and also that the relinquishment was collusive. The suit was accordingly dismissed.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, which decided upon the evidence that the instrument of compromise was executed for a bona fide purpose, and was not collusive. Their Lordships think this decision cannot be questioned. The High Court pointed out that, on the death of Parbati Koer, Lokenath, as the next heir, succeeded to the property, and that the first Court was in error in thinking that Parsotim was the reversionary heir of Dwarka Lal. They said they were of opinion that the first Court was in error in holding that the effect of the admission in the bill of sale would be to deprive Parsotim of the right which, as heir of Lokenath, he had of questioning the validity of the bill of sale. They also held that there was no proof of any necessity that would sanction the sale, and reversed the decree of the first Court, making a decree for possession by the plaintiff of the property claimed, except a small portion which the plaintiff admitted the defendant was not in possession of. From this decree the present appeal was brought, and it has been heard ex parte.

The learned counsel for the appellant took several objections to the judgment of the High Court. The first was founded upon the judgment of this Committee in Eshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto (1), where it is said (p. 20) that the determinations in a cause should be founded upon a case, either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made, and (p. 24) that the equities and ground of [6] relief originally alleged and pleaded by the plaintiff should not be departed from. Several cases were referred to as illustrating the application of this rule. Their Lordships fully affirm it, but the substance of the case in the plaint in this suit is that the sale by Parbati Koer was invalid beyond her interest in or power over the estate. The plaint, indeed, states that the plaintiff was the heir of Lokenath, and so entitled to raise the question. He was not the heir, but it was proved that he had the right of the heir, and the defendant was allowed to take the same objections as he might have taken if Parsotim had been the plaintiff. Moreover, it may fairly be inferred from the judgment of the first Court that this objection was not taken at the hearing before it. If it had been, the plaint and the issues might and ought to have been mended. It is very unlikely, if it were taken and overruled, that there would be no notice of it in the judgments of either of the lower Courts. Their Lordships are of opinion that there is no weight in this objection.

The next objection was, that no right passed from Parsotim to the plaintiff by the solehnama or instrument of compromise; that property was not meant to be dealt with by it. The intention of the 4th paragraph, which has been quoted, appears to be that Parsotim should release or convey to Sheosahai his right of inheritance to the parts of Dwarka Lal's estate which had been sold by Parbati Koer, and for which one suit had been instituted and others might have to be. The words are sufficient to effect that intention, and to enable the plaintiff to institute this suit.

(1) 11 M.I.A. 7.

The third objection was that Parsotim was estopped from bringing the suit by his execution of the deed of sale of the 15 May 1868, and consequently the plaintiff was also estopped. The law in India on this matter is in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. Section 115 of that Act says:—"When one person has, by his declaration, act, or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing." What then is the declaration or representation in the deed? Parsotim is described as general mokhtar and executor under the will, and [7] adopted son of Parbati Koer, widow of Babu Dwarka Das, deceased. The purchaser thus had sufficient notice to make it his duty to inquire as to what Parbati had power to sell. Parsotim says:—"I have, as mokhtar, sold absolutely, without any reservation, the whole of 16 annas milkiut and malguzari of mauza Bhadar Khord," and in the passage which has been quoted, "I, as mokhtar, and my heirs and representatives, have no claim, right, demand, or contention in respect to the property sold, and I as mokhtar have made a general renunciation of the same." There is no allusion to any right of Parsotim as heir of Dwarka Lal, which he was not, either then or when Parbati Koer died. The fair construction of the deed is that Parsotim, as agent, was only selling what his principal had power to sell. There is no representation that Parsotim was selling on his own account, and the plaintiff is not denying the truth of any fact which is represented in the deed. The words "and my heirs and representatives have now no claim, &c." must be read with the context, and refer to the character of mokhtar. The transaction was the ordinary one of a sale by a Hindu widow, and their Lordships are of opinion that there was not any representation by Parsotim which would prevent the plaintiff from bringing the present suit.

Lastly, the learned counsel referred to the Indian Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s. 43 of which says that "where a person erroneously represents that he is authorized to transfer certain immoveable property, and professes to transfer such property for consideration, such transfer shall, at the option of the transferee, operate on any interest which the transferor may acquire in such property at any time during which the contract of transfer subsists." This is not applicable. Parsotim did not represent that he was authorized to transfer any other interest than that of his principal, Parbati Koer, and he did not profess to transfer any other. None of the objections to the decision of the High Court can, in their Lordships' opinion, be sustained, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the High Court and to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

BIRJ MOHUN THAKUR AND ANOTHER (Petitioners) v. RAI UMA
NATH CHOWDHRY AND OTHERS (Objectors).^{*} [23rd June, 1892].Sale in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 311, 313, and 622—Application by auction-purchaser to set aside sale on ground of his having been deceived as to extent of estate sold—Remedy of auction-purchaser—Superintendence of High Court.

A purchaser at a Court sale, alleging that he had been misled by a misrepresentation as to the extent of the estate which he had believed to be put up for sale, obtained, on his petition before confirmation, a summary order setting aside the sale.

Held, that the High Court had rightly cancelled this order, exercising its authority under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that the purchaser, though he would have his remedy, on his taking the appropriate one, if he had been induced by fraud to pay a larger price than he otherwise would have offered, had no right to apply under either s. 311 or 313 of the Code of Civil Procedure (as they provided only for the particular cases to which they referred); and that s. 312 in the absence of cases falling within those sections required that the sale should be confirmed.

APPEAL from a decree (30th January 1888) of the High Court, reversing an order (21st January 1887) of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore.

At a Court sale (6th July 1886) under s. 284 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in execution of a decree (16th September 1885), obtained by Sibchunder Panday and others against Umanath Chowdhry and others on a mortgage for Rs. 20,118, an 8-anna share of a mauza named Colgong in the Bhagulpore district was put up for sale and bought by Hurris Mohun Thakur and the other appellant for Rs. 33,000. Before the sale was confirmed the purchaser applied to the Court by petition that the sale to them might be set aside on the ground that they had been under a misapprehension as to what was to be sold, supposing that the whole of the judgment-debtor's mahal was to be sold, and not only half of it; and alleging that in consequence of this mistake they had paid much more than the true value of the property. They gave evidence to show that a mis-statement had been made to them [9] on this point by, or on behalf of, the judgment-debtors. This application was opposed by the judgment-debtors and by the decree-holders. The Subordinate Judge made the order asked for. He was of opinion that the allegations of fact made by the applicants were established; and that "every Court had an inherent power to see that no party in proceedings before it, and which it was called on to confirm, was induced by fraud or misrepresentation of the other party to do an act which otherwise he would not have done."

Against the order so made the judgment-debtors appealed, making the auction-purchasers, who had obtained it, respondents; the latter appeared, but the decree-holders, who were also made respondents, did not appear.

A Division Bench (WILSON and MACPHERSON, JJ.) gave judgment as follows, cancelling the order:—

"We think that s. 313 has no application to this case. The operation of that section is in express terms limited to cases in which the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the property sold. In the present case the complaint is not that the judgment-debtor had not a good title to the property sold, but that the purchaser was led into a mistake as to what he was buying. Section 311 has no application, for it empowers no one but the decree-holder, or one whose property has been sold, to seek the intervention of the Court. As to the inherent power of Courts to prevent one party to the proceedings before it from taking unfair advantage of another by fraud or misrepresentation, it is unnecessary to say anything beyond this, that a Court can in general make orders in a suit only as between parties to the suit. A purchaser at an execution sale is not a party to the suit, and the only case in which the Court is empowered summarily to set aside a sale at his instance is that provided for by s. 313. We express no opinion as to whether the view taken of the facts by the Subordinate Judge is correct, or whether, if so, the purchaser has any remedy. We only hold that the summary order made in this case could not properly be made.

"A point was made as to our power to interfere on appeal. The Subordinate Judge gives several grounds to justify his order. If it be regarded as an order under s. 311 or s. 313, an [10] appeal lies. If it be regarded as an order made under the inherent power of the Court apart from specific statutory enactment, we have power to set it aside under s. 622. And under the circumstances, we think we ought to exercise that power.

"In the interest of all those who are concerned, we set aside the order complained of, not only as between the parties to this appeal, but as between all the parties to the order."

On this appeal,

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellants, argued that the order of the Subordinate Judge was final, as there was no right of appeal from his decision made, in reference to s. 312, and refusing to confirm a sale. He acted rightly in conducting an inquiry into the facts as to the alleged misrepresentation before confirming the sale, and his judgment declining so to do was sound.

Regarding applications to set aside sales, Mian Jan v. Man Singh (1), Hira Lal v. Karimunnisa (2), and Doorga Sunderi Devi v. Govinda Chandra Addy (3); and as to the High Court's power under s. 622, Civil Procedure, Muhammad Yusuf Khan v. Abdul Rahman Khan (4) and Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Buksh Singh (5) was referred to.

The respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

to "the decree-holder or any person whose immoveable property has been sold," which the present appellant is not. Section 313 applies to the purchaser, and its scope is limited to the case of a person whose property is purported to be sold, and who had no saleable interest therein, which is not this case.

Here there was an order for sale, and the property was put up for sale, but there was no order confirming the sale. Under [11] s. 312, if no such application as is mentioned in s. 311 is made, there is only one duty left to the Court, namely, to pass an order confirming the sale as regards the parties to the suit and the purchaser. The Subordinate Judge refused to do that, and set aside the sale, and directed the purchase money to be refunded on certain terms. In so doing he declined to exercise a jurisdiction which he had, and exercised one which did not belong to him, and consequently his judgment was liable to be reviewed by the High Court under the 622nd section of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It does not, however, follow that the appellant is without remedy, but he must select the appropriate remedy. Not having a remedy under the Code, which provides only for the particular cases named therein, he still has the right to have the sale set aside, if it be true that he has been induced by fraud to pay a larger sum for the property purchased than he would have had to pay if he had not been so deceived.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed.

KEDAR PROSUNNO LAHIRI (Defendant) v. PROTAP CHUNDER

[23rd April, 1891.]

Minor—Suit in substance against Minor—Sale certificate, irregular description in—Decree against widow representing her minor son—Decree, sale of infant's share under—Representation of minor in suit.

A sale certificate expressed a rent decree to have been made against R, the widow and heiress of K, and the mother of a minor son, name unknown.

[12] Held, that this description, though irregular, showed that in substance the suit was against the infant, and that the infant's share was sold under the decree.

Hari Saran Maitra v. Bhubaneswari Debi (1) and Suresh Chunder Wum Chowdhry v. Jugut Chunder Deb (2) followed.

THE plaintiffs sued to recover a 1 anna 15 gundas share in a certain patni taluk held by them under Mohini Nath Bishi and others, alleging that originally they were the owners of a 3 annas 10 gundas share of the taluk, but that a moiety was sold in satisfaction of a decree for rent obtained by the landlords, and was purchased by the original defendant Grish Chunder Lahiri, since deceased, in the name of his mokhtar Bhugwan Das. The plaintiffs further stated that they had held possession of the 3 annas 10 gundas share jointly with the defendant, but were dispossessed of the share in suit by the defendant in the month of February 1879.

Grish Chunder Lahiri in his written statement alleged that the minor plaintiff's interest in the taluk, was sold in execution, and acquired by him in the name of his servant Digamber Nag on the 2nd May 1874, that he and the father of the major plaintiff then held the taluk as co-tenants, and that he subsequently purchased the entire 3 annas 10 gundas share in the name of Bhugwan Das on the 28th October 1876 at an execution sale, and had ever since held exclusive possession. On the death of Grish Chunder, his son Kedar Prosunno Lahiri was made a party defendant to the suit in his stead, and he denied that either the minor plaintiff or the father of the major plaintiff had any interest in the patni at the time of the execution sale.

The Court of first instance held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove possession within twelve years of the institution of the suit, and that whatever right, title, or interest the plaintiffs might have possessed passed from them by the execution sale. The suit was therefore dismissed.

Upon appeal the claim of the major plaintiff was abandoned, the sale certificate, Ex. A, showing that the interest of his father was acquired by Bhugwan Das at the sale of the 28th October 1876. It was contended, however, on behalf of the [13] minor plaintiff, that he was no party to the rent suit, as his name did not occur in Ex. B, the sale certificate of the 6th July 1874. With reference to Ex. B, the lower appellate Court observed as follows :—

"That document expresses the rent decree to have been pronounced against Rajmoni Dabi, the widow and heiress of Kristo Sunder Talukdar, and the mother of a minor son, name unknown (sic), and against Jadub Chunder Talukdar.

"Kristo Sunder and Jadub Talukdar were the sons of Ram Kristo Talukdar, who, though long since deceased, continues the sole registered tenant of the taluk; and the decree of Ex. B was for a fraction of the arrears of the rent of the patni, that is, for arrears of the fraction payable to some of the co-proprietors. The tenure was not and could not be sold, but merely the right, title, and interest of the debtors. So much Ex. B expresses. Who then were the debtors, or to put the question in another form, was the minor plaintiff a party to the rent suit? Indisputably he is the only son of Rajmoni and Kristo Sunder Talukdar and the boy alluded to in Ex. B. He and not his mother inherited Kristo Sunder's moiety of the patni. Admittedly, he was not properly described as a party to the suit. His mother was not represented to be his guardian. Of her appointment to be his guardian for the purposes of that rent suit, there is neither averment nor proof. She acted and was treated apparently as if she and not her son had inherited and represented the estate of her husband. Was that sufficient to bind the minor? The case of Ganga Prosad Chowdhry v. Umbica Churn Coondoo (1) is undistinguishable from this case, and on its authority I must hold that the minor plaintiff was no party to the rent suit; that his mother Rajmoni was erroneously impleaded in his place; that she has not and never had any interest in the patni; and that the sale evidenced by Ex. B did not operate to pass the minor plaintiff's moiety thereof. He is entitled consequently to recover such moiety."

From this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court.

The judgment of the High Court (PIGOT and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

We think, after having heard this matter debated with great care by the learned Counsel on both sides, that the view taken by the learned District Judge was erroneous as to the effect of the irregularity in the description of the infant in the sale certificate, Ex. B of the 6th of July 1874. It is not necessary to enter upon a minute examination of the authorities which relate to the subject. It is enough to say that the effect of them, and notably of the Privy Council case Hari Saran Moitra v. Bhubaneswari Debi (1) and the Full Bench case Suresh Chunder Wum Chowdhry v. Jugut Chunder Deb (2) must at least be this, that if we are of opinion that substantially the infant was sued, and that substantially execution was against the infant's share, the proceedings were binding against that share, and having regard to the terms of Ex. B and to the description under which he appears and his mother appears in that document, we think it impossible to doubt that substantially the suit was brought against the infant as co-defendant through his mother and natural guardian (supposing, as is probable, that she had not then been appointed under Act XL of 1858), and that the sale was of the infant's share in pursuance of the decree. We think that the mode of description of Rajmoni as heiress (which she was not, as her son was alive) must be taken to show that she was in a representative capacity when placed on the record. She is there described as mother of her infant son, name unknown, as well as widow and heiress of her deceased husband, and we think that, highly inaccurate and irregular as that description was, upon the old authorities as to the Code of Procedure of 1859 it must be taken that that was sufficient to bind the estate of the infant, and that we are not entitled on the ground of technical irregularities [15] of this description to release his estate. In substance the suit was brought against the infant, the infant's share was sold under the decree, and we think, therefore, that the decision of the District Judge was, on this point, erroneous, and that it must be set aside and the decree of the lower Court restored. The appeal will be allowed with costs throughout.

Will—Duress—Forfeiture—Condition of residence.

A testator by his will directed that if any of the female members of his family, either from misunderstanding or from any other cause, should live in any other than a holy place for more than three months, except for the cause of pilgrimage, they should forfeit their rights under the will. The plaintiff, a widowed daughter-in-law of the testator, and a minor, was removed from his house by her maternal relations and brother with the aid of the police, and resided for more than three months with her mother:—Held, that under the circumstances the plaintiff's absence did not work a forfeiture. Clavering v. Ellison (1) referred to.

THE plaintiff, the widowed daughter-in-law of one Sookhmoy Dass, and a minor, sued by her mother and next friend to have the will of Sookhmoy Dass, her father-in-law, construed and her rights declared. She alleged that the defendant, the widow and executrix of Sookhmoy, compelled her by ill-treatment to leave the family dwelling-house, and that under the circumstances she had not forfeited her rights under the will.

The will provided that if any of the female members of the family, either from misunderstanding or from any other cause, [16] should live in any other than a holy place for more than three months, except for the cause of pilgrimage, they were to forfeit their rights under the will. The defendant contended that the plaintiff having voluntarily left the family dwelling-house had incurred a forfeiture under the terms of the will.

The Court of first instance held that the prohibition in the will should be strictly construed, that it was clear that every female member of the testator's family was strictly enjoined to remain at his dwelling-house, and that the testator must be presumed to have known that the plaintiff was a minor; his object would therefore be frustrated by condoning the plaintiff's absence, especially as she had been taken away by her maternal relations and brother by the aid of the police. The lower appellate Court found there was no evidence that the plaintiff was ill-treated by the defendant, but that there was nothing to show that the plaintiff or her friends knew of the prohibition in the will; that the fact of the plaintiff leaving the house before the will had been established by probate, and before she knew what the conditions of the bequest were, could not work a forfeiture; and that although three months had elapsed since probate was granted, yet the plaintiff was a girl of fifteen and ignorant of reading and writing. The testator must therefore be held to have meant that desertion of the family-house, when the plaintiff had arrived at years of discretion and was her own mistress, should cause a forfeiture, and that in order to work a forfeiture during her minority it must at least be shown that her guardians knew of the condition and allowed her to break it. The Court therefore held that the plaintiff had not incurred a forfeiture, but that she was not entitled to the property claimed by her until she complied with the condition of residence. [17] The judgment of the High Court (PIGOT and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

In this case we think we must affirm the judgment of the lower appellate Court, and dismiss the appeal, not upon the first of the grounds stated by the District Judge, as to the ignorance of the plaintiff of the prohibition in the will, but upon the other ground, namely, upon the construction of the will, and upon certain circumstances in this case, which we shall presently advert to. We agree with the learned Judge in thinking that upon a fair construction of para. 7 of the will, which provides that "if any of the members of my family, either from misunderstanding or for any other reason, live in any other than a holy place for more than three months, she will be deprived of all my properties"—it would appear that what was contemplated was a wilful, deliberate, and intentional leaving. Now, in this case, there are very special circumstances apart from the fact of the girl being still a minor, for it is found by the first Court, and as we understand, not questioned, that the girl was removed with the assistance of the police. How or in what manner the assistance of the police came to be granted does not appear; but we are bound to infer that it was properly and legally given. There was therefore a plain case of duress at the time of the leaving, and we see no reason why in this case, having regard to the fact that the girl is an infant, we should not treat it as accounting for the absence of the girl from the house where the testator directed her to live. We may here refer to the judgment of Lord Campbell in one of the cases cited before us, Clavering v. Ellison (1), in which is to be found the following passage :—"Had the children been included in the arrest, I conceive that their residence abroad under continued duress would not have worked a forfeiture, and if their residence abroad may be fairly ascribed to the imprisonment of their father by Napoleon, the forfeiture might be saved on this ground, were there a necessity to resort to it." We think that under the circumstances the absence of the girl, although in contravention of the direction of the testator, ought not to be treated as working the forfeiture, as contended for before us. It is perhaps going a long way, having regard to the fact [18] that the absence was for such a protracted period as nine months, but we think we are at liberty in this case not to treat her as a free agent at the time or subsequently. We are, however, not to be understood to hold as matter of law that mere legal infancy as such would entitle her hereafter to continue to live away from the house where she is bound to live under the will, and we think those interested in her welfare, relatives or others, with whom she has lately been, would be acting very unjustly by her were they, by in any way further delaying her return to the house, to risk the forfeiture by her of the benefits to which she is entitled under the will. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Where money is borrowed by the manager of a joint Hindu family on his personal security for purposes of necessity, his right to contribution arises when he expends the money, and limitation runs against his claim from that date, and not from the date on which he repays the loan and releases his security.

THE plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs. 905-15 from the defendants, by way of contribution to the amount of three money decrees obtained against him upon certain promissory notes executed by him for the alleged purpose of raising money for the joint family expenses. The plaintiff and the defendants were the sons of one Kashi Nath Mukhopadhyaya, who died in the month of Joisto 1280 (May 1873). The plaintiff alleged that he and his [19] brothers lived in commensality as a joint Hindu family until Choitro 1289 (March 1883), that the brothers afterwards separated, and the defendant No. 3 brought a suit, No. 66 of 1886, in the Court of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs against his brothers, for partition and adjustment of accounts, in pursuance of which the property was partitioned and the brothers received possession of their respective shares; that while the brothers were living jointly, the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 managed the joint estate and the household business between the month of June 1873 and the month of September 1882, and during this period money being required for the payment of Government revenue and other joint expenses, the plaintiff borrowed from his wife Mukshoda and her uncle Durga Das, the sum of Rs. 400 upon certain hand-notes dated respectively the 1st Assar 1287 (14th June 1880) and the 10th Assar 1289 (23rd June 1882), these debts being recognized as family debts in the adjustment of the accounts upon partition, and that subsequently in June 1888 decrees were obtained against him in respect of the amounts due, and he was forced to pay the whole amount Rs. 1,081-12. annum, amounting to Rs. 905-15. The first defendant did not enter an appearance. The other defendants denied their liability, and alleged that there was no necessity for borrowing, and that the decrees were collusively obtained.

The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff had shown necessity for incurring a debt on behalf of the joint family; that accounts had been taken and filed in the partition suit, and the joint liability of the defendants had been recognized in that suit, the debts being specified in certain petitions filed on the 6th and 22nd June 1887; that the plaintiff by making a part payment upon the promissory notes in Bysack 1292 (April 1886) to Mukshoda and Durga Das had prevented limitation from running, and that there was no fraud or collusion on the part of the plaintiff or of Mukshoda and Durga Das, and that the defendants were therefore legally bound to reimburse the plaintiff.

The lower appellate Court affirmed this decision, holding that the main questions in the case were practically disposed of in the partition suit; that there was no reason to doubt the bona fides [20] of the transaction; that the obligation had been kept alive by the payment of interest in 1292, and that the money having been borrowed for the benefit of the estate, the defendants must recoup the plaintiff. The question of limitation was not argued in either Court.

The defendant No. 2 appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Trailokhya Nath Mitter and Baboo Umakali Mukerji, appeared for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and MACPHERSON, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

These are appeals from an appellate decree. The plaintiff and the defendants are the sons of Kashi Nath Mukhopadhyaya, who died in 1280. From 1280 to 1289 the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 were managers of the family. Plaintiff alleges that in 1287 and 1289 he raised money to pay certain necessary family expenses, including Government revenue and municipal taxes. This money he says he raised on promissory notes, two made in Assar 1287 and one in Assar 1289; the aggregate amount of them is stated in the plaint at Rs. 400, one of those in Assar 1287 being in favour of plaintiff's wife, Mukshoda; the other two being in favour of Durga Das, her uncle.

The holders of these notes sued the plaintiff on them in 1888 and obtained three decrees against him for the amount of the notes interest and costs, being the sums mentioned in the schedule to the plaint, amounting in the aggregate to Rs. 1,081-12.

The plaintiff then brought this suit, claiming from each of the defendants a 4-anna contribution to the amount paid by him under these decrees with interest from the date of the decrees, viz., June 6, 1888.

The appellants in the two appeals before us, namely, defendants 2 and 3, denied their liability, denied that the money was raised for family purposes, denied that the decrees against plaintiff were obtained in good faith, and denied that any money would be due to plaintiff on accounts being taken of his management. They did not set up limitation in either of the lower Courts.

[21] Both the Courts below decided against the defendants on the merits, and gave the plaintiff a decree. In the appeal before us it is contended that the plaintiff's claim, if any, is barred by limitation.

The cases of Ram Kristo Roy v. Muddun Gopal Roy (1) and Sunkur Pershad v. Goury Pershad (2) were cited to show that where money is borrowed on the personal security of the manager of a Hindu family for family purposes, and is applied by him to those purposes, his right to contribution arises when he expends the money, and limitation runs against his claim from that date, and not from the date at which he pays the person from whom he borrowed, and thus releases his security.

It seems to us that the question is not merely one of limitation, but that a question in the case also arises as to the nature of the plaintiff's right of action. It seems to be the plaintiff's case that if the money was borrowed for necessary family expenditure it follows that the plaintiff, if he raised the money on his personal security, was entitled, by reason of his discharging that debt, to claim contribution; that is to say, that his personal debt, if contracted to enable him to defray expenses common to him and the other members of the family, became thereby a family debt itself. We do not think that this notion is right: it is inconsistent with the authorities just referred to.

No doubt the members of the family might have agreed with the plaintiff that if he should raise the money in this manner, they would contribute towards the discharge of the liability so incurred by him; but in the absence of such an agreement, or of any adoption by them of his act as their own, we are unable to see that any obligation was created on their part towards him, by reason of his having satisfied the decrees under which he was alone liable.

We do not think that the proceedings in the partition suit, No. 66 of 1886, can be held to have had the effect of making any of the parties to that suit liable to recoup the plaintiff as adopting as their own (as between them and him) the debt under his promissory notes. There was no adjudication in that suit as to the debts [22] referred to in the petition of the 6th June 1887, amongst which, no doubt, those of Assar 1287 were included. It would be giving too strict an interpretation to the terms of that petition to hold that thereby the parties to it other than the plaintiff adopted and ratified as their act the making of the notes. It lay on the plaintiff to show that this was the meaning and intention of the defendant Aghore Nath when he joined in that petition. By itself, it is too ambiguous to justify us in attributing that effect to it; it may have been a mere oversight that the amount then due for interest on the notes was included as part of the family debt.

But we think that, apart from this, the plaintiff had no authority to bind the defendants by the part payment of 1886 so as to prevent the notes from being barred, and so render a decree against him possible.

The result is that, except so far as the plaintiff did pay any of the money raised by him for family necessities, he has no cause of action; it is admitted that such payment (if made) was made so long ago that any claim founded upon it is long since barred by limitation. The suit therefore wholly fails, and the appeal must be allowed. We set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and dismiss the suit with costs in all the Courts.

Execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 257 (a)—Agreement sanctioned by Court executing decree—Enforcement of agreement in execution.

An agreement, which has received the sanction of the Court of execution under s. 257 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code, that money due under it [23] should be realized as in execution of decree rather than by recourse to a separate suit, may be enforced in execution, the Court which would try the regular suit brought upon such an agreement being the same Court which would execute the decree to enforce its own terms.

THIS appeal arose out of an order for the execution of a decree dated the 2nd February 1878.

On the 14th November 1887 an agreement was made between the judgment-debtors (appellants) on the one hand and the decree-holders (respondents) on the other, by which the former agreed to pay interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree instead of 6 per cent., the rate allowed by the decree, in consideration of the decree-holders giving the judgment-debtors six months' time to enable them to raise money in order to satisfy the amount of the judgment debt. The agreement was sanctioned by the Court on the 17th November, and, in accordance with it, the sale of the judgment-debtors' properties was postponed until the 15th December.

On the 11th April 1890 the decree-holders applied for execution. It was objected on behalf of the judgment-debtors that the decree-holders could not be allowed to recover the higher rate of interest in execution of the decree, and that if they wished to enforce the agreement they would have to bring a separate suit for that purpose.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that it was quite clear from the agreement that it was the intention of the parties that the higher rate of interest should be recovered in execution, and that the decree-holders were induced to grant time by the promise of the judgment-debtors to pay the higher rate of interest. Relying upon the Full Bench case of Sita Ram v. Dasrath Das (2), he disallowed the objection and ordered execution to issue.

On appeal the District Judge upheld this order.

The judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

We think that this case is concluded by the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (1). The agreement entered into between the parties is not on the record before us, but it has been found by the first Court, and this finding has not been questioned in any further proceedings taken in the case, that the parties intended by the agreement arrived at that the higher rate of interest should be recovered in execution of a decree, that is to say, in the present case that in consideration of abstaining from bringing the properties attached to sale, the judgment-debtors agreed to pay to the decree-holder interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree, instead of 6 per cent., the rate allowed by the decree, and also the parties intended that the money recoverable under this agreement, that is to say, the sum due on calculation of the interest at the higher rate, should be recovered in execution of the decree. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case referred to held, on the authority of Pisani v. The Attorney-General for Gibraltar (2), that the parties should be held to the agreement that the questions between them should be heard and determined by proceedings quite contrary to the ordinary cursus curiæ; that is to say, applying this to the case before us, that the parties having come to an agreement which received the sanction of the Court of execution under s. 257 (a), Civil Procedure Code, that the money due under that agreement should be realized as in execution of decree rather than by recourse to a separate suit, the execution court is competent to realize the money on the application of the judgment-creditor in the manner agreed upon, the Court which would try the regular suit brought upon such an agreement being the same Court which would execute the decree to enforce its terms. The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Sale for arrears of rent—Priority of auction-purchasers—Sale set aside by an ex parte decree and afterwards confirmed—Notice.

The plaintiff and the defendant purchased the same tenure at successive sales, held in execution of two decrees under the provisions of s. 59 of Act VIII of 1869, for arrears of rent due in respect of different periods. Defendant's sale was first in point of time, but was set aside on the judgment-debtor obtaining an ex parte decree against the defendant. The suit was, however, restored and ultimately dismissed, and the defendant's purchase remained undisturbed. In the meantime, however, after the ex parte decree, but before the dismissal of that suit, the tenure had been again sold for further arrears of rent which had accrued before the defendant's purchase, and was bought by the plaintiff.

Held, that the defendant's title must prevail, being prior in point of time, and that the defendant was under no obligation to discharge the arrears of rent for which the second decree was obtained, or to give notice of his purchase to the plaintiff.

[D., 22 A. 168 = 20 A.W.N. 31.]

THE plaintiff sued to obtain possession of 23 bighas of land appertaining to a jama of Rs. 47 standing in the names of the defendants 10 and 11 and of one Hamid Gazi, and to have his right thereto declared by virtue of his purchase at an auction sale on the 9th August 1884.

It appeared that the jama had previously been sold by the landlords in pursuance of a decree obtained by them against the tenant for arrears of rent for a period preceding 1288, and was purchased by the defendant No. 1 on the 13th November 1883. In May 1884 the defendants 10 and 11 and Hamid Gazi obtained an ex parte decree setting aside the sale, and shortly afterwards the jama was again brought to sale by the landlords in pursuance of another decree for arrears of rent due for the years 1288 and 1289, and the plaintiff purchased at that sale. An objection on the part of the judgment-debtors was disallowed on the 7th February 1885.

[26] On the 28th February 1885 an application on the part of the defendant No. 1 to have the ex parte decree of May 1884 set aside was rejected, but this order was on appeal reversed and the case was remanded for trial on the merits on the 21st April 1885. On the 20th July 1885, however, the plaintiffs in that suit (the defendants 10 and 11 and Hamid Gazi) withdrew the case, so that the purchase of the 13th November 1883 remained undisturbed; the defendant No. 1 then entered upon the land and obtained rent decrees against several tenants of the mehal.

In consequence of this dispossession the plaintiff sued to establish his title under the sale of the 9th August 1884. The defendant No. 1 claimed priority by virtue of his purchase of the 13th November 1883, and charged that the decree, in execution of which the plaintiff purchased, was collusively obtained.

The Court of first instance decided in favour of the plaintiff's purchase, principally upon the ground that the defendants appeared to have been privy to a fraud of the judgment-debtors by reason of which the suit to set aside the sale of 1883, at which the defendant No. 1 purchased, was withdrawn. The lower appellate Court upheld this decision upon another ground, observing:—"I am of opinion that the purchasers at the first sale should be taken to have constructive notice of the second decree; and that they, having neglected to protect the tenure from the second sale by depositing the decree-money, cannot now deprive the plaintiff, apparently a bona fide purchaser for value, of the fruits of his purchase. The defendant should have enquired as to whether the landlord's dues in respect of 1288 and 1289 had been paid, or whether the landlord had obtained a second decree or not. Such an enquiry, if prosecuted with ordinary diligence, might have presumably led them to the discovery of the real state of things, that is, that the tenure was to be sold in execution of a second decree, and enable them to protect it from such a sale. Having failed to do so, they should not be considered to have, in the eye of equity, obtained a right superior to that of the plaintiff."

The defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Srinath Das and Babu Hara Prasad Chatterjee appeared for the appellant.

Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter appeared for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit between two purchasers of a tenure at successive sales for arrears of rent. The tenure was sold on each occasion under the provisions of s. 59 of the Rent Act (VIII of 1869); and the question is which of the two purchasers has the preferential title. The facts are shortly these. The landlord obtained a decree against his tenant for arrears of rent for a period preceding 1288. Subsequently he obtained another decree against the same tenant for the arrears of 1288 and 1289. In 1883, in execution of the first decree, he caused the tenure to be sold, and it was purchased by the defendant No. 1, who is the appellant in this Court. The tenant, the judgment-debtor, then obtained an ex parte decree against the auction-purchaser, by which that sale was set aside; and after it had been so set aside the landlord, under the second decree referred to above, caused the tenure to be again sold in execution, and it was on this occasion purchased by the plaintiff. Subsequent to the last sale the auction-purchaser, the defendant No. 1, on an application to the Court, got the suit in which the ex parte decree had been made against him restored, and after restoration it was dismissed in consequence of the judgment-debtor, who was the plaintiff in that case, withdrawing the claim.

It has been found that both the plaintiff and the defendant, the purchasers respectively under the two decrees, were bona fide purchasers, and that there was no fraud or collusion on the part of the defendant appellant in connection with the ex parte decree either as to his allowing it to be made in the first instance, or as to the restoration of the suit in which it was made, or as to the subsequent withdrawal of the claim in that suit.

The lower appellate Court has decided in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that even if the first sale had been actually subsisting at the time when the second sale took place, as the rent was a charge on the tenure, the purchaser at the first sale, who must be presumed to have had notice of the second sale, ought to have paid into Court the amount that was due under the second decree, and had the sale stayed, and on that ground the Subordinate Judge considered that the plaintiff had an equitable right superior to that of the defendant.

[28] We are unable to concur in the view taken by the Subordinate Judge. The effect of the subsequent dismissal of the suit to set aside the sale was the same as if it had been dismissed in the first instance, and as if the first sale had never been set aside. We must take it that the ex parte decree was made without the knowledge of the auction-purchaser, the defendant No. 1, and that the suit in which it was passed was properly restored, there being no evidence to the contrary, and the Court below having found that the defendant was not guilty of any fraud or collusion in the matter. If, therefore, the first sale must be regarded as subsisting, it seems to us clear that the tenure could not be sold a second time in execution of a decree for rent which became due, not during the time of the purchaser, the defendant No. 1, but at a time antecedent to his purchase. The title vested in the purchaser at the first sale, which was afterwards duly confirmed, and he bought the tenure free of any charge which lay upon it at the time of the sale. We think that the defendant, even assuming that he had notice of the subsequent decree and of the sale in pursuance of it, was not bound to discharge the arrears of rent for which that decree was obtained, and by so doing to protect the property.

It has been argued before us that the decision of the lower appellate Court ought to be upheld for the reason given by the Subordinate Judge that the equitable consideration in favour of the plaintiff ought to prevail.

It is said that if the defendant had taken possession under his purchase that might have afforded notice to the plaintiff, and might have had the effect of preventing him from purchasing; or that if after the second sale had taken place the defendant had intervened, the plaintiff might have got the sale at which he purchased set aside, and at all events recovered the money he had paid. But conceding that the defendant might have done that, we do not think that he was in any way bound to take that course; and it does not at all follow that he had any notice of the second decree or of the sale which took place in pursuance of it. We cannot say that there is any higher equity in favour of the plaintiff, and we think that as the first purchaser of the tenure the defendant is the person in whom the title is vested.

[29] Under these circumstances we must allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Courts, and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

RAJBULLUBH SAHAI (Decree-holder) v. JOY KISHEN PERSHAD alias JOY LAL (Judgment-debtor) AND KHOOB LAL (Objector).^{*}
[29th July, 1892.]

Limitation—Execution of decree—Application for transmission of decree—Step-in-aid of execution—Proceedings bona fide in Court without jurisdiction—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 14, para. 3.

On the 2nd March 1887, S obtained a mortgage decree against P in the Court of the Munsif of Hajipore. On the 9th September 1887 S applied for execution, and on the 7th November 1887 the mortgage property was sold by the Hajipore Court. On appeal, on the 2nd September 1890, the High Court set aside the sale on the ground of want of jurisdiction. Thereupon, on the 6th September 1890, S applied to the Hajipore Court to transfer the decree for execution to the Munsif's Court at Muzaffarpur. On the 19th December 1890 S applied for execution to the Muzaffarpur Court. L, who had meanwhile purchased the mortgaged property from P, objected that the application was barred.

Held that the application was not barred, as the application of the 6th September 1890 was a step-in-aid of execution, and also as s. 14, para. 3 of the Limitation Act, clearly applied to the facts of the case, and under it the decree-holder was entitled to a deduction of all the time occupied in executing the decree in the Court having no jurisdiction, the application having been manifestly made in good faith.

ON the 2nd March 1887, Rajbullubh Sahai obtained a mortgage decree against Lala Joy Kishen Pershad in the Court of the Munsif of Hajipore. The decree directed that if the [30] mortgage money were not paid by the 2nd September 1887, the mortgaged property should be sold. On the 9th September 1887, the decree-holder applied to the Munsif of Hajipore for execution, and the mortgaged property was sold on the 7th November 1887. On appeal the High Court set aside the sale on the 22nd September 1890 on the ground that the Munsif's Court at Hajipore had no jurisdiction. The decree-holder then applied on the 6th September 1890 to the Hajipore Court to transfer the decree for execution to the Court of the Munsif at Muzaffarpur, and on the 19th December 1890 made his present application for execution to the Muzaffarpur Court. The respondent Khoob Lal, who had meanwhile purchased the mortgaged property from the judgment-debtor, Lala Joy Kishen, objected that the application was barred. The Munsif held that the application of the 6th September 1890 was a step-in-aid of execution, and, having been made within three years from the application of the 9th September 1887, was within time. He also held that the decree-holder was entitled under the Law of Limitation to deduct all the time from the 9th September 1887 to the 2nd September 1890, if not the 6th September 1890, in computing the period of limitation. He therefore disallowed the objection and ordered execution to issue.

On appeal, the District Judge held on the authority of the case of Nilmony Singh Deo v. Birressur Banerjee (1) that the application for transfer of the 6th September 1890 was not a step-in-aid of execution, and that the application of the 19th December 1890 would be out of time, even if the period from the 9th September 1887 to the 7th November 1887, the date of the sale, were deducted, as having been spent bona fide in making another application for the same relief which the Court for want of jurisdiction could not entertain. He therefore reversed the order of the Munsif and dismissed the application for execution.

The decree-holder applied to the High Court.

Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee, Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey and Baboo Satish Chunder Ghose, for the appellant.

[31] The Court (PRINSEP and BANERJEE, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT

It has been held by the District Judge in appeal that execution of the decree in this case is barred by limitation.

It would seem that execution of this decree was deferred until the 2nd of September 1887, time having been granted to the judgment-debtor up to that date. The decree-holder applied for execution on the 9th September 1887 by sale of the mortgaged property by the Court of the Munsif of Hajipore. The sale was accordingly held; but on appeal to the High Court it was held on the 2nd September 1890 that the Hajipore Court had no jurisdiction. The decree-holder then applied on the 6th September 1890 to the Hajipore Court, which was the Court which passed the original decree, to transfer it for execution to the Court having jurisdiction. Application to execute this decree was next made on the 19th December 1890 to the Court of Muzaffarpur.

On these facts the District Judge has held that execution is barred by limitation. He has calculated the period from the 9th September 1887 as most favourable to the decree-holder for a starting point in calculating the period of limitation, and he has next found that the application for execution being made on the 19th December 1890, was made after the period of three years allowed by the law, and was barred. The Munsif whose judgment was under appeal had held that the application made by the decree-holder on the 6th September 1890 to the Court which passed the decree to transfer it for execution to the Court which had jurisdiction to hold the sale was an application within the terms of the law of limitation, and was a step taken in aid of execution of the decree, and that consequently execution of the decree was not barred by limitation. The District Judge on appeal set aside this order on the authority of the case of Nilmony Singh Deo v. Biressur Banerjee (1).

We think that the District Judge has misapplied this case, which relates to an entirely different matter. It was there held that the application to transfer the decree for execution to another Court was not an application to execute the decree. But it was [32] not held in that case, nor was it any part of that case, that it was not an application amounting to some step taken in aid of execution of the decree. Consequently, that case is no authority for the order passed by the District Judge. There are cases on the other hand in which an application for the transfer of a decree for the purpose of execution has been considered to be a step-in-aid of the execution [see the cases of Latchman Pundeh v. Maddan Mohun Shye (2), Collins v. Maula Bakhsh (3), and Krishnayyar v. Venkayyar (4)]*.

We would also observe that under any circumstances the execution of the decree in this case was not barred by limitation, for the case clearly comes within s. 14, para. 3 of the Law of Limitation, and the decree-holder is entitled to a deduction of all the time occupied in executing the decree in the Court having no jurisdiction, it being manifest that such application was made in good faith to the Court, which only in second appeal to this Court was found not to have jurisdiction. The order of first Court must therefore be restored, and the appellant will be entitled to his costs in this Court and also in the lower appellate Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 244 (c), 257-A, 258.—Adjustment of decree out of Court—Instalment bond.

A kistbundi or instalment bond was executed by way of adjustment of a decree, but this was not certified to the Court in accordance with the provisions of ss. 257-A and 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held [33] that a Court executing the decree was not competent to take cognizance of the kistbundi under s. 244 of the Code, and that the decree must be executed, notwithstanding the adjustment.

RAM DOYAL BANERJEE, the appellant, applied in the Court of the Munsif for execution of a money-decree against the judgment-debtor Ram Hari Pal. The latter filed a petition of objection, stating that he had executed a registered kistbundi or instalment bond in favour of the decree-holder for the amount of his claim together with costs, and claimed to be absolved from all liability under the decree. The kistbundi was not certified to the Court.

The decree-holder denied all knowledge of the kistbundi, but admitted that he had authorized his gomastah Kunj Behari, who had since absconded, to take steps to recover the amounts due on decrees. The Munsif held that the instalment bond had been executed by the judgment-debtor, and that the decree was thereby satisfied. He held accordingly that the decree-holder could not be allowed to proceed with the execution of the decree.

The decree-holder on appeal contended that the kistbundi, not having been made with the sanction of the Court, was void under s. 257-A of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Judge held, upon the authority of Jahbar Mahomed v. Modan Sonahar (1), that this contention must fail, and upheld the order of the lower Court. From this decision the decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

decree-holder for the amount of his claim, and that therefore the decree could not be executed. It [34] appears that this satisfaction or adjustment of the decree, whatever it may be called, was not certified to the Court, but, notwithstanding this, both the Courts below have held that, by reason of the kistbundi having been executed, it is not open to the decree-holder to execute the decree.

It seems to have been contended before the Judge of the lower Court that the instalment bond, not having been made with the sanction of the Court, was void under s. 257-A of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the learned Judge overruled that contention, relying upon a decision of this Court in Jhabar Mahomed v. Modan Sonahar (1). It appears upon the proceedings in this case that the arrangement which resulted in the execution of the kistbundi in question was come to, not between the plaintiff and the defendant, but between his servant Kunj Behari and the defendant, and there was some discussion before the Court of first instance whether the act of Kunj Behari was binding upon the decree-holder.

The Munsif determined this question in favour of the defendant, and it does not appear that any question of that sort was raised before the Appellate Court. The only question therefore that we have to determine in this appeal is, whether by reason of the execution of the kistbundi the decree-holder is precluded from executing his decree.

Section 257-A of the Code provides that "every agreement to give time for the satisfaction of a judgment-debt shall be void, unless it is made for consideration and with the sanction of the Court which passed the decree, and such Court deems the consideration to be under the circumstances reasonable.

"Every agreement for the satisfaction of a judgment-debt which provides for the payment, directly or indirectly, of any sum in excess of the sum due, or to accrue due under the decree, shall be void unless it is made with the like sanction."

Section 258 provides:—"If any money payable under a decree is paid out of Court, * * * or if any payment is made in pursuance of an agreement of the nature mentioned in s. 257-A, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment [35] to the Court whose duty is to execute the decree. * * * Unless such a payment or adjustment has been certified as aforesaid, it shall not be recognized as a payment or adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree."

In the case quoted by the learned Judge, Jhabar Mahomed v. Modan Sonahar (1) it would appear that after the plaintiff had obtained his decree, a compromise was come to by the parties out of Court, and in accordance with this compromise an instalment bond was executed in favour of the plaintiff; but the fact of the decree having been thus satisfied was not certified to the Court, and subsequently the plaintiff brought a suit to recover the money due on the bond, and the questions that were referred to the High Court were, first, whether s. 257-A would bar the institution of a separate suit on the instalment bond; and second, whether the non-satisfaction of the judgment-debt constituted a valid consideration for the bond, and the opinion of the High Court was that the instalment bond upon which the suit was brought was not an agreement to give time for the satisfaction of the judgment-debt within the meaning of s. 257-A, and that the provisions of that section were only intended to prevent any binding agreement between the judgment-debtor and creditor for extending the time for enforcing the decree without the sanction of the Court, and that these provisions were not intended to prevent parties from entering into a fresh contract for payment of the judgment-debt by instalments, and that any such fresh contract could only be enforced by a fresh suit.

There is no question before us as to whether a fresh suit would lie upon this instalment bond. The only question that we have to determine is whether the adjustment of the decree (for we think we ought to take it that the execution of the instalment bond was in fact an adjustment of the decree) not having been certified to the Court in accordance with s. 258, it is open to the judgment-debtor to contest the right of the decree-holder to execute the decree in accordance with the Procedure Code.

The last paragraph of s. 258 provides that "unless such payment or adjustment has been certified as aforesaid, it shall not [36] be recognized as a payment of adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree." This paragraph was in substitution of the last paragraph of s. 258 as it stood in Act XII of 1879: "No such payment or adjustment shall be recognized by any Court unless it has been certified as aforesaid."

With reference to the expression "any Court" which was used in the old Act, there were many conflicting rulings of the different High Courts upon the effect to be given to payment or adjustment of decrees, which had not been certified to the Court charged with the execution of decrees,—see Poromanand Khasnabish v. Khepoo Paramanick (1), Hormasji Dorabji Vania v. Bujorji Jamsetji Vania (2), Haji Abdul Rahiman v. Khoja Khaki Aruth (3). It was in consequence of these conflicting rulings that the Legislature found it necessary to alter the last paragraph of s. 258 and to substitute in its place the paragraph as it now stands.

This alteration was made by s. 27 of Act VII of 1888.

It was argued before us that under s. 244 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court executing the decree is bound to take cognizance of the adjustment of the decree by the kistbundi bond as a question relating to the execution, discharge, and satisfaction of the decree; but it will be observed that the last paragraph of s. 258 expressly declares that any Court executing the decree shall not recognize any payment or adjustment out of Court which has not been certified to the Court. Reading therefore s. 244 with the last paragraph of s. 258, it seems to us that the Court executing the decree is not competent to take any cognizance of the Kistbundi said to have been executed by the defendant by way of adjustment of the decree.

That being so, we think that the order of the Court below must be set aside, and the case remanded to the Court of first instance, with a direction that that Court should execute the decree in accordance with law. The costs will abide the result.

Probate—Person claiming interest in the estate of the deceased—Interest sufficient to support application to revoke probate—Revocation of probate—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 69.

Where the heir ab intestato of a deceased person has entered into a contract to sell the property of the deceased, and has received the greater part of the consideration money, the purchaser from such heir is a person claiming to have an interest in the estate of the deceased within the meaning of s. 69 of the Probate and Administration Act, and is entitled, upon a will being set up and proved at variance with his interest, to apply for revocation of the probate of the will so set up.

Komollochun Dutt v. Nilrutton Mundle (1) followed.

[Appr., 28 C. 587 ; R., 8 C.W.N. 748.]

HURRO MOHUN SIRCAR died on the 28th June 1890 (15th Assar 1297), having (as was alleged) on the previous day made and executed his last will. On the 12th July 1890 Muddun Mohun Sircar applied for probate of the will under the provisions of Act V of 1881, stating in his petition that he had been appointed the sole executor under the will on behalf of all the legatees, and that he was willing to act. On the 4th August 1890, Bishtu Charn Sarma Sircar, who was one of the heirs ab intestato of the testator, appeared and filed a caveat alleging the will to be a forgery, and prayed for a month's time to put in his objections to the application for probate, and the 4th September was accordingly fixed for the hearing of the suit. On the 25th July 1890, Bishtu Charn had executed in favour of Kali Churn Dey and Srinath Dutt a byana patra or deed of earnest money agreeing to sell to them a portion of the property which in the event of an intestacy would come to him, for the sum of Rs. 300, out of which the document recited that Rs. 220 had actually been paid. The byana patra also recited the fact that Muddun Mohun Sircar had set up a spurious will which the executant Bishtu Charn being a poor man had no means of opposing, and he had therefore [38] fixed upon selling his share in the properties mentioned in the schedule, promising to execute a kobala on receiving the balance of the purchase money. Bishtu Charn further covenanted not to oppose any steps which the purchasers might take to have the will set aside. On the 29th August, however, Bishtu Charn, without the knowledge of the purchasers, filed a petition of compromise, relinquishing the rights of himself and his heirs in the properties left by Hurro Mohun Sircar, on the ground that he had come to know that the will was genuine, and on the 30th August probate was issued to Muddun Mohun Sircar ex parte.

On the 6th September 1890, Kali Churn Dey and Srinath Dutt filed a petition, praying for revocation of the probate on the ground that a fraud had been practised upon them by Bishtu Charn, who had withdrawn his opposition to the will four days before the date originally fixed for the learnt that the matter had been disposed of on the 30th August, and alleging at the same time that a fraud had been practised upon them both by Bishtu Charn and the applicant for probate. The learned Judge of the [40] District Court, however, so far as one can gather from the record, instituted no enquiry as to the genuineness of the byana patra transaction, and without any evidence assumed that the byana patra was true, and acting upon that assumption and upon such materials as were then before him, he came to the conclusion that a fraud had been practised upon the respondents, and that the probate must therefore be revoked. He accordingly revoked the probate and fixed a day for the hearing of the matter in the presence of both parties. The present appeal is by the applicant for probate, Muddun Mohun Sircar; and the main ground that has been urged before us by the learned vakeel on his behalf is, that the respondents Kali Churn Dey and Srinath Dutt have no locus standi in this matter, and that the order made by the District Judge recalling the probate is therefore illegal.

The argument that has been addressed to us turns upon s. 69 of the Probate and Administration Act (1), which states that "in all cases it shall be lawful for a District Judge or District Delegate, if he thinks fit, to examine the petitioner in person upon oath, and also to require further evidence of the due execution of the will, or the right of the petitioner to the letters of administration as the case may be, and to issue citations calling upon all persons claiming to have any interest in the estate of the deceased to come and see the proceedings before the grant of probate or letters of administration," and so on.

It has been contended before us that the respondents Kali Churn Dey and Srinath Dutt did not acquire, by reason of this byana patra, supposing it to be genuine, any such interest in the estate of the deceased as to entitle them to come in and oppose or apply for revocation of the probate. In the case of Komollochun Dutt v. Nilrutton Mundle (2) a Divisional Bench of this Court was of opinion that a purchaser from the heir of a deceased person has an interest within the meaning of this section, entitling him to come in and apply for revocation of the probate of a will said to have been executed by the deceased, and the opinion thus expressed has never been dissented from; and I may say that I agree with it. The principle of this ruling applies to the present case, and it seems to us that if it be found upon enquiry by the District Judge—an [41] enquiry which has not yet taken place—that Bishtu Churn actually entered into a contract to sell the property of the deceased to the respondents, and received the greater part of the consideration money, the respondents have acquired an interest in the estate, such as would entitle them to come in and ask for a revocation of probate, if it were improperly granted. As matters stand at present, there is no evidence on the record to show that this deed of byana patra is true, or that any consideration really passed under it.

We think, therefore, that the order of the District Judge must be set aside and the case sent back to him with directions that he should determine upon evidence which the parties may adduce, whether or not this byana patra is true, and whether the earnest money mentioned in it passed, before he proceeds to determine the question as to the authenticity of the will propounded by the petitioner. The costs will abide the result.

THE plaintiff sued to recover damages as compensation for malicious prosecution, alleging that the defendant and others had [42] instituted criminal proceedings against him in the course of which he was sentenced to a term of imprisonment, that upon appeal he had been honourably acquitted by the Sessions Court, that he had been put to great expense in engaging Counsel to defend him, and that the cause of action accrued on the 6th May 1889, the date of his acquittal. The plaint was filed on the 6th May 1890, but was insufficiently stamped, and on that day the Munsif ordered that the amount of the deficient Court-fee should be paid within seven days. The amount of the stamp duty was paid on the 12th May 1890, and the plaint was duly registered, but the period of limitation prescribed by art. 23 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) had by that time expired. On this ground a preliminary objection was taken by the defendant at the hearing in the Court of first instance. The Munsif held, upon the authority of the case of Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Nath Tiwari (1) and the interpretation there placed upon s. 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the plaint must be taken to have been presented on the day the deficient stamp was paid, and dismissed the suit upon the ground of limitation. This decision was reversed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge, who distinguished the ruling of the Allahabad Full Bench, and remanded the case for trial on the merits. From this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Solaiman and Moulvi Mahomed Yusuf, appeared for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and GHOSE, J.) was as follows:—

LATE

CIVIL.

This is an appeal against an order of remand passed by the Subordinate Judge of Dacca on the 19th June 1891. It appears that the plaint in this case was presented in the Court of first instance on the 6th May 1890; but, it being found that it was insufficiently stamped, the following order was recorded :—"The plaint having been filed insufficiently stamped, ordered that the deficient court-fee be paid within seven days." Within the time appointed, the plaintiff paid the deficient Court-fee stamp, and the [43] plaint was duly registered; but it so happened that during that time the period within which the plaintiff was bound to institute his suit under the law of limitation had expired, although, upon the date that the plaint was originally presented, it was within time.

Objection having been raised by the defendant on the score of limitation, the Munsif held that the plaint should be regarded as having been filed not on the 6th May 1890, but on the subsequent date when the deficient Court-fee was paid, and that therefore the suit was barred by limitation. He relied on the Full Bench case of Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Nath Tiwari (1), which deals with a memorandum of appeal that was presented to the Allahabad High Court.

The Subordinate Judge, upon appeal by the plaintiff, has held that the suit is within time, and that it should be taken to have been instituted on the 6th May 1890, when the plaint was first presented, and he has accordingly directed that the case should go back to the Court of first instance for a trial on the merits.

The present appeal is by the defendant against this order. We think that the Sub-Judge has taken a correct view of the matter. By clause (b) of s. 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is provided that the plaint shall be rejected "if the relief sought is properly valued, but the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so."

Now, in this case the plaint was not rejected by the Munsif, and he could not do so because the law requires that the Court shall call upon the plaintiff to supply the requisite stamp within a fixed time, and it is only if the party fails to comply with the order of the Court that the plaint is to be rejected. The plaintiff did comply with the order of the Court within the time appointed, and the plaint was duly registered.

We think that under these circumstances the suit should be taken to have been instituted on the day that the plaint was presented, that is to say on the 6th May 1890, to the proper officer, [44] as provided by s. 4 of the Limitation Act (2). This is the view that was adopted in the case of Mussumat Begum v. Syud Yusuf Ali (3), and this also is the view that was expressed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Skinner v. Orde (4). In this latter case, the question that was raised was, whether a person who had asked for leave to sue as a pauper, but who subsequently, pending the inquiry into his pauperism, paid in the requisite Court-fee, should be taken to have instituted his suit on the day when he filed his pauper petition, or on the day when the Court-fee being paid the plaint was numbered and registered as a plaint. It was held by the Judicial Committee that the suit must be admitted to have been instituted when the application to sue as a pauper was filed, and they observed as follows (1):—"Although the analogy is not perfect, what has happened is not at all unlike that which so commonly happens in practice in Indian Courts, that a wrong stamp is put upon the plaint originally, and the proper stamp is afterwards affixed. The plaint is not converted into a plaint from that time only, but remains with its original date on the file of the Court, and becomes free from the objection of an improper stamp when the correct stamp has been placed upon it." And the same view was practically taken in the case of Mengur Mundar v. Hurree Mohun Thakoor (2).

(1) 12 A. 129.

(3) 6 N.W.P. 139.

We think that the order that was made by the Court on the 6th May 1890 may well be regarded as an order of amendment of the plaint within a given time, and in that class of cases it has been held that the return of a plaint for amendment, and its subsequent presentation and acceptance by the Court, would not constitute a fresh institution of the suit. See Ram Lal v. Harrison (3), Greesh Chunder Singh v. Pran Kishen Bhattacharjee (4) and Ram Coomar Shaha v. Dwarkanath Hazra (5).

The learned pleader for the appellant relied strongly upon the Full Bench decision in Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Noth Tiwari (6); but that had reference to a memorandum of appeal which perhaps [45] stands on a different footing from a plaint dealt with under s. 54 of the Code, and we may observe that the view of the Allahabad High Court, as expressed in that case, has not been adopted in this Court. In the case of Syud Ambur Ali v. Kali Chand Doss (7) it was held that "The Deputy Registrar has no authority to make an order returning a petition of appeal when the stamp fee paid upon it is insufficient. The right course for that officer, if his requirements as to stamps are not complied with, is to lay the matter before the Court. But if the appellant is ready to pay what is required, then, whether the time for filing the appeal has expired or not, the Deputy Registrar is bound to receive it if it was originally presented in time." And in a recent case [Moti Sahu v. Chhattri Das (8)] decided by Prinsep and Banerjee, JJ., on the 10th May last, this Court did not follow the decision of the Allahabad Court, and it was held with reference to a plaint, and in circumstances similar to those in the present case, that the suit should be regarded as having been instituted on the day that the plaint was originally presented, and that it was not barred by the law of limitation.

Upon these considerations we think that the decision arrived at by the Court below is right, and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT:

Lords Watson and Morris, Sir R. Couch and Lord Shand.
[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]MANICK CHAND (Defendant) v. HIRA LAL (Plaintiff).
[24th May, 1892.]

Partition—Partition among shareholders in zemindari villages—Construction of agreement—Custom.

On a dispute among proprietors of shares in zemindari villages as to the respective amounts of the holdings till then undivided, to which they were entitled, a compromise made by their common ancestor's five sons, of [46] whom the plaintiff's father was the eldest, had been filed in proceedings prior to this suit. This was construed to have assigned to the plaintiff's father an additional share, according to a custom recorded in the khewut at settlement, in virtue of which the eldest brother was entitled to a share greater than that allotted to the others, —a right termed "hakh jethansi."

APPEAL from a decree (5th April 1888) of the Judicial Commissioner, modifying a decree (31st December 1886) of the District Judge of Sitapur.

The suit was brought in 1885 by the present respondent against his two brothers, all three being sons of Janki Pershad, who died in June 1882, and against two uncles, Janki Pershad's brothers, and two cousins, sons of the latter. The plaintiff sued to establish his right to a one-fifth share of four villages formerly belonging to Khushal Ram, his grandfather. The villages were, as the khewuts on the record showed, zemindari, or those in which ancestral right was the measure of the amount of the undivided holding of each co-sharer. As to the villages mentioned in their Lordships' judgment, the plaintiff alleged that by a custom, which also was recorded in the khewuts of the villages, a special share had descended to his father Janki Pershad as eldest of the sons of Khushal Ram, and that by agreement among the co-sharers certain villages were set apart as representing this special share. The District Judge found in favour of that condition. The Judicial Commissioner considered that one of the villages had been allotted to Janki Pershad as the portion of the eldest son in "hakh jethansi" but that the plaintiff was not entitled to the others.

The custom recorded in the khewut was that the eldest member of family had a right on partition to "jethansi" (1), which was calculated by setting apart for him five per cent. of the whole property to be divided, and then apportioning the residue equally among the sharers, per stirpes; and, in practice, as far as possible separate villages were given by way of the extra portion. Janki Pershad was the eldest son and managing member, who had also added to the property. After his death disputes arose as to partition, and a suit was brought in 1882 in the Court of the [47] Extra Assistant Commissioner in Sitapur, in the course of which deeds and a petition containing the terms of a compromise, dated 9th November 1882, were filed by the parties.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellant, argued that the decision of the first Court was correct.

The respondent did not appear.

(1) Wilson's Glossary, p. 237, gives "Jethans" as meaning "the share or portion of the eldest born."

JUDGMENT.

SIR R. COUCH.—This case has reference to a dispute between two brothers, the sons of one Janki Pershad, as to the right of the younger brother, the respondent, to a half share of three villages called Bairampur, Ichna, and Dubawan. The District Judge decided that the elder brother, Manick Chand, was entitled to all the three villages, to the exclusion of his younger brother, Hira Lal. Upon appeal the Judicial Commissioner reversed that decision so far as it related to two of the villages, Dubawan and Ichna, and decided that Manick Chand was entitled to one village, Bairampur, as jethansi, and that Hira Lal was entitled to share in the other two villages.

The case depends upon the effect of a family arrangement which is stated in a petition presented on the 8th November 1882 to the Court of Hazari Lal, Extra Assistant Commissioner of Sitapur, and in the proceedings thereon on the 9th November. In order to explain the nature of the arrangement it should be stated that Janki Pershad was one of five brothers. One of them, Atma Ram, is now represented by Lalta Pershad; another is Bhawani Pershad; the third, Thakur, is represented by Saonlai Lal, who was adopted by him, but who was a son of Janki Pershad; the fourth is Chote Lal.

The questions which were the subject of the compromise had arisen in the lifetime of Janki Pershad, who died in June 1882, a few months before the compromise was actually entered into. This is important, as showing that what the parties were agreeing about was, not the right of Manick Chand as the eldest son of Janki Pershad as against the other members of the family, but the right of Janki Pershad and the claim which he had upon the other members of the family on account of his services in managing the property, and in acquiring other property, and so increasing the value of the family estate.

[48] The petition states that a dispute having arisen between Bhawani Pershad, Chote Lal, and Lalta Pershad, on the one side, and Manick Chand, Hira Lal, and Saonlai Lal, on the other side, and a case about the matter being before the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner of Sitapur, the above named parties had, at the request of their kinsmen and of certain neighbouring zamindars, settled the matter amongst themselves upon the terms, that "out of the whole lot of zamindari and mortgaged villages in parganas Chandra and Aurangabad, two entire villages, viz., village Ichna . . . and village Dubawan . . . shall be given with proprietary right to Manick Chand, the eldest son of Maharaj Janki Pershad, deceased, to the exclusion of others and over and above his shares . . . As to the rest of the villages in parganas Chandra and Aurangabad it has been determined that jethansi dues shall be levied in them at the rate of 5 bighas per Rs. 100, or at the cash rate of Rs. 5 per cent. on the revenue, the village Bairampur . . . becoming included in Bai Kuian pargana Aurangabad. The revenues and profits of this village shall be at the disposal of Manick Chand, no other property shall have anything to do with it. Should the area of Bairampur be found wanting in payment of jethansi dues at the rate of 5 bighas per Rs. 100, the deficiency shall be made good from other villages in the manner to be proposed . . . mentioned above."

The question is, what was meant by the statement that the villages, Ichna and Dubawan, were given "with proprietary right to Manick Chand, to the exclusion of others, and over and above his shares." On reference to a subsequent passage in the petition, it is clear that the shares there alluded to were the shares of Manick Chand, as representing his father Janki Pershad, and the shares of the other four brothers. It says: "All the rest of the land belonging to each village . . . shall form one whole, and shall be divided into five equal shares amongst the undermentioned shareholders: 1. Bhawani Pershad; 2. Chote Lal; 3. Lalta Pershad; 4. Manick Chand, Hira Lal; 5. Saonlai Lal." There is no allusion to any question having arisen between Manick Chand and Hira Lal regarding their respective shares in the property of their father Janki Pershad.

[49] Further on, in the petition, the following important statement that Hira Lal, named there as Hazari Lal, but evidently in mistake for Hira Lal, "states that he has a share in the entire share of Manick Chand, including the jethansi right, and Manick Chand states that he (Hazari Lal) has no share in jethansi, he has share in other properties." Hira Lal claimed there more than he was entitled to because the jethansi being the right of the elder brother he could have no share in it, but the importance of the statement lies in the fact that Manick Chand said that Hira Lal had no share in the jethansi, but that he had a share in other properties. These words would apply to the two villages, Ichna and Dubawan, which are not stated to be given as jethansi to Manick Chand, but as in proprietary right. That the parties were not dealing with any rights, as between Manick Chand and Hira Lal, in the two villages which were given in proprietary right really on account of Janki Pershad the father, is apparent from another passage in the petition, where it is said:—"Every co-sharer should repay the debts in proportion to his share, or should become responsible for its payment, according to his share, which, in the case of Manick Chand, would include jethansi. The debts due to co-sharers, including jethansi, might also be divided out in proportion to shares, that is to say, in calculating the proportion, the jethansi and other villages awarded to Manick Chand, in excess of other shares, will be taken into account." The words "in excess of other shares" must mean, not in excess of any share which Manick Chand had as between himself and Hira Lal, but in excess of the shares of the other four brothers, showing that what the parties were dealing with in the compromise was not a question between Manick Chand and Hira Lal as to their shares, but the division of the property between the five brothers, one being given to the sons of Janki Pershad as representing him, and entitled to succeed to the property as his sons.

This view is further supported by another petition, presented to the Court on the 8th November 1882, but in the heading dated by mistake the 8th January 1882, in which it is said, in almost similar language to that quoted above: "A dispute regarding division of shares in all villages held in zamindari right, and by mortgage in village, pargana, and tahsil Chandra, all villages [50] belonging to Bai Kuian, grant in pargana Aurangabad, tahsil Muhamdi, having taken place among the parties, viz., Bhawani Pershad, Chote Lal, sons of Khushal Ram, and Lalta Pershad, son of Atma Ram, on one side, and Manick Chand and Hira Lal, sons of Janki Pershad, and Saonlai Lal, adopted son of Thakur Pershad, * * * on the other side, a suit is pending in the Court of Munshi Hazari Lal, Extra Assistant Commissioner, district Sitapur." That shows that even before this compromise a suit had been commenced, and was pending, between the representatives of three of the sons on the one side and Manick Chand and Hira Lal, sons of Janki Pershad, and Saonlai Lal, the adopted son of Thakur Pershad, on the other side, and obviously pointed to the nature of the dispute which had arisen, and which was to be compromised.

The construction of the arrangement come to by these petitions appears to their Lordships to be that it was not intended thereby to deal with the rights of Manick Chand and Hira Lal as between each other, but with the rights of Manick Chand and Hira Lal as representing their father Janki Pershad, and the rights of the other brothers. The Judicial Commissioner appears to have rested his judgment upon Manick Chand's statement that Hira Lal had no share in jethansi, but had a share in other properties. Probably it would not be correct to give so much effect as he has done to that statement; but it is in accordance with the contents of these petitions, and their Lordships are of opinion that the decision of the Judicial Commissioner, that Hira Lal was entitled to a share in the two villages, is the right decision, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 10, and sch. II, arts. 62 and 120—Act XI of 1859, s. 31—Suit to recover surplus sale proceeds of a sale for arrears of Government revenue.

In a suit brought for the residue of the sale proceeds of an estate sold under the provisions of Act XI of 1859 against the Secretary of State for India in Council, the defence was raised that the suit was barred under art. 62 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Held by the Full Bench that art. 60, sch. II of the Limitation Act, did not apply, and that the case was governed by art. 120.

Held, by PIGOT, J., that the sale proceeds became vested in the defendant in trust for a specific purpose within the meaning of s. 10 of the Limitation Act, and that therefore the Limitation Act had no operation [52] in the case; but that, assuming that the Limitation Act was applicable the case was governed by art. 120.

Secretary of State for India in Council v. Fazal Ali (1) overruled.

[R., 6 C.L.J. 535 (539); 11 Ind. Cas. 58=5 S.L.R. 82 (85); D., 8 O.C. 166 (169).]

A REFERENCE was made to the Full Bench in these three cases in which the same points arose for decision.

In two of these cases (Nos. 913 and 1161 of 1890) the reference was made by PIGOT and BEVERLEY, JJ.; in the remaining case (No. 1001 of 1890) the reference was made by PIGOT and MACPHERSON, JJ. The orders of reference were precisely similar in each case, so that it is only necessary to set out that in the first case (No. 913 of 1890), which alone was fully argued. The order of reference in that case was as follows:—

"This suit is brought for the residue of the sale proceeds of an estate sold under the provisions of Act XI of 1859. The plaintiff claims to be entitled under s. 31 of the Act.

"The question in the case is whether the plaintiff's claim is barred. If art. 62 of the Limitation Act applies, the claim is barred; if s. 10 of the Act applies, or if art. 120 applies, the claim is not barred.

"It has been held by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Fazal Ali (1) that art. 62 applies to a suit for the residue of sale proceeds claimed under s. 31 of Act XI of 1859. We doubt the correctness of that decision, and we therefore refer this case to the Full Bench.

"We should be prepared to hold that s. 10 of the Limitation Act applies to the case. But we are of opinion that were that section not to apply, then art. 120 of the Limitation Act would govern the case, as has been held by the lower appellate Court.

"The questions we refer to the decision of the Full Bench are as follows:—

First.—Whether the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Fazal Ali (1) was rightly decided.

Second.—Whether s. 10 of the Limitation Act applies to the case of a suit against the Secretary of State for the residue of [53] the sale proceeds of an estate sold under Act XI of 1859, having regard to the provisions of s. 31 of that Act?

Third.—If not, whether art. 120 of the Limitation Act applies to such a suit?

Fourth.—Whether the suit is barred by limitation?"

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) [with him the Officiating Standing Counsel (Mr. L. P. Pugh) and Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee] for the appellant in appeal No. 913 of 1890.

Dr. Rashbehary Ghose (with him Baboo Tara Kishore Chowdhry, for the respondent.

The Advocate-General.—I rely on the decision in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Fazal Ali (1), and it is unnecessary to recapitulate the authorities there cited. The Secretary of State is incapable of becoming a trustee,—see Lewin on Trusts, 8th Ed., pp. 29, 30. Kinloch v. The Secretary of State (2),—and is a mere name for the purposes of bringing a suit.

(1) 18 C. 234.

(2) L.R. 7 Ap. Ca. 619.

Dr. Rashbehary Ghose, for the respondent.—Article 62 of the Limitation Act was not intended to cover all cases of money had and received; if so, there would be no necessity for art. 97. Section 33 of Act XI of 1859 provides that no person shall contest the legality of a sale after receiving any portion of the purchase money. If art. 62 be applied to the present case, the period of limitation would run against the former owner from the date of the Collector's receiving the purchase money. An action for money had and received is substantially an action on an implied contract. The difference between the Collector's position and that of a banker is that the banker may use the money, while the Collector cannot. This distinction is pointed out in Lyell v. Kennedy (1) by Lord Macnaghten. The money here is payable under a liability created by statute, and the case is therefore not covered by any particular article of the Limitation Act, and in this view of the matter art. 120 would apply. Again, if the Collector had no right to use the money, he is holding it as a trustee. It is the right of the parties to be paid, and if the words "on demand" [54] did not occur in the section, the Collector would still have to pay. The words "on demand" ought to have some meaning attached to them. Article 62 deals with a certain class of actions, for money had and received and has no application to the present case. The matter has been discussed in Gurudas Pyne v. Ram Narain Sahu (2), which case was followed in Muhammad Habibullah Khan v. Safdar Husain Khan (3). As regards the law in England, see Bullen and Leake, 4th Ed., Pt. 1, p. 280. The case comes under art. 120, or if not, under s. 10. If the Collector is a trustee, then an action for money had and received would not lie against him. The case of Kinloch v. The Secretary of State (4) will be cited against me, but that case turned upon the construction of a particular warrant, and Lord O'Hagan points out at p. 630 that the Secretary of State may well, under certain circumstances, be described as "trustee for the Crown." The present case is different from that of banker and customer, Foley v. Hill (5), where the money is the money of the bank.—Ishur Chunder Bhaduri v. Jibun Kumari Bibi (6). A mortgagee may be constructively a trustee for the mortgagor when he has an ascertained surplus in his hands,—Banner v. Berridge (7). In Cator v. The Croydon Canal Co. (8), the company were held trustees of the purchase money for the real owner. For the case of an agent, see Burdick v. Garrick (9). The Collector, I submit, cannot make use of the money and would have to replace it if he lost it. The case last cited was followed in Lake v. Bell (10). In the case of a receiver it has been held that he cannot plead limitation, Seagram v. Tuck (11), even though his accounts have been passed. Money held in a fiduciary character, though not as a trustee, can be followed into a banker's hands, even if the property cannot be identified.—In re Hallett's Estate (12). I rely on the remarks of Jessel, M. R., in that case, see also Thackersey Dewraj v. Hurbhum Nursey (13). I contend that [55] the word "vest" in s. 10 of the Limitation Act is not a term of art, and the technical meaning should not be applied in a case of this kind.—Kherodemoney v. Durgamoney (14), Sethu v. Subramanya (15). In Banner

OPINIONS.

[56] The following opinions were delivered by the Court (PETHERAM, C. J., PRINSEP, TOTTENHAM, PIGOT, and GHOSE, JJ.).

In No. 913 of 1890.

PETHERAM, C. J.—My answer to the first question is, that the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Fazal Ali (7) is not rightly decided.

To the second, that s. 10 does not apply to such a case.

To the third, that art. 120 does apply.

To the fourth, that the suits are not barred by limitation.

The terms on which the residue shall remain in the hands of the Collector, and the conditions on which the proprietor or proprietors of the estate sold are to be entitled to receive it, are laid down in s. 31 of Act XI of 1859, and are as follows: "holding the residue, if any, in deposit, on account of the late recorded proprietor or proprietors of the estate or share of an estate sold, or their heirs or representatives to be paid to his or their receipt on demand in the manner following: to wit, in shares proportioned to their recorded interest in the estate or share of an estate sold, if such distinction of shares were recorded, or if not, then as an aggregate sum to the whole body of proprietors upon their joint receipt. And if before payment to the late proprietor or proprietors of any surplus that may remain of the purchase money the same be claimed by any creditor in satisfaction of a debt, such surplus shall not be payable to such claimant, nor shall it be withheld from the proprietor, except under precept of a Civil Court."

When these conditions have been fulfilled, if the money is not paid over, I think a liability arises, to enforce which the Secretary of State in Council may be sued, it being in the words of Sir Barnes Peacock in The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company v. The Secretary State for India (1), a liability with which the revenue of India would be chargeable and the only question is, what is the nature of the cause of action which comes into existence in favour of the owner of the residue of the money if it is not then paid to him.

FULL

[57] The meaning of the words "holding the residue in deposit on account of the late recorded proprietor" is, I think, that any residue at and from the time of its receipt belongs to the proprietor of the estate sold, who is to have credit in the books of the Collectorate for the amount, and if there were nothing more, I think that the cause of action would be what is called an action for money received, which is an action of debt on the promise which the law implies, whenever money, which in justice belongs to one man, has got into the hands of another, and this, in my opinion, is the case with the money in question. But the section goes on to direct that this money shall be paid out on certain terms and conditions, and there being a statutory provision how and when the money is to be paid, I think that the implication of a promise to pay, which would arise if the statutory obligation did not exist, is rebutted, and that the liability to pay out the money is that created by the statute, and that an action to enforce it must be, not on any implied promise but upon the statutory obligation, and as by the terms of the statute that obligation does not arise until a demand has been made by persons, who are in a position to give the required receipts, I think that no suit could be maintained until a demand had been made by some person who was in a position to give the necessary receipts.

The Limitation Act does not prescribe any period of limitation for money due under a statutory liability to pay it, so the suit is, I think, within art. 120; in other words, the period of limitation is six years, which begin to run from the time when a demand for the money is made by persons who could give the receipts required by the section. As, in my opinion, the money in the hands of the Government always remains the property of the proprietor of the estate which has been sold, and should always stand to his credit in the books of the Collectorate, it never, I think, vests in any one but himself, and therefore I do not think the case can be brought within any of the definitions of trusts to be found in the English reports, but even if it could, it is, I think, equally within the ordinary definition of an action for money received, and I do not think it desirable in such a case as the present, where there is certainly nothing of the nature of a trust or confidence in fact, to apply the law of trusts unless we are compelled to do so, and for [58] the reasons I have mentioned, I do not think we are under any such obligation in the present case.

In Special Appeals 913 of 1890 and 1161 of 1890, in which the defendant is the appellant, the appeals will be dismissed; in Special Appeal No. 1001 of 1890, in which the plaintiff is appellant, the appeal will be decreed; in each case the successful party will get his costs.

TOTTENHAM, J.—I agree in the Chief Justice's judgment.

PRINSEP, J.—I agree in the terms of the answers which it is proposed to give. I desire, however, to state the reasons why I have arrived at that conclusion.

(F.B.).

The moneys in these suits are surplus sale proceeds after liquidating the Government dues of the recorded defaulting proprietors of the estate sold, and the law, s. 31, Act XI of 1859, declares that the Collector shall hold them in deposit on the account of these persons to be paid on demand to a proper receipt.

It has been said that these moneys are what is termed money received on behalf of the defaulting proprietors of the estate sold, which, but for the terms of the Revenue Sale Law, were kept under an implied promise to pay them to these persons. The manner in which the payment of these moneys has been made and the process by which the residue, termed surplus sale proceeds, has become the property of the defaulting proprietors, seem to prevent our holding that they were received by the Collector on account of the defaulters. In the first place, the law requires that the purchaser at the public sale shall immediately deposit 25 per cent. on his bid. That this sum cannot be regarded as money received on account of the defaulting proprietors is clear from the fact that a resale takes place if the full amount of the bid is not paid on the 30th day from the sale, and that, on such default, the amount deposited is forfeited to Government. Moreover, the sale itself may be annulled if the defaulters satisfy the superior revenue authorities or the Government of hardship or injustice thus caused, and the estate will then be restored to the defaulters "on such conditions as may appear equitable and proper." The purchase money would, in such an event, be paid to those by whom it had [59] been deposited. In the next place, even when the balance of the purchase money has been paid by the purchaser, as just stated, the estate does not pass to him. The sale is not confirmed and does not become final until the 60th day from the day on which it was held, and not until then is the purchaser entitled to claim a certificate of title. The money realised by the sale, however, remains all along with the Collector and if the sale is subsequently set aside, the entire purchase-money is repaid to the purchaser with interest, which may be payable by Government [Section 32.] I cannot, therefore, agree that the money held by the Collector, under such possible conditions, has been received by him on account of the defaulting proprietors.

It is only when after the sale has been confirmed and an account has been made of the moneys due to Government by the defaulting proprietors, which are rarely represented by the actual default for which the sale took place, and a surplus is shown by this account, that any money can be said to belong to the proprietors. The law [Section 91] then says that any surplus money shall be held in deposit by the Collector on account of the defaulting proprietors, and it is only at this stage of the proceedings that it can be regarded as money belonging to the defaulters and held by the Collector, under an obligation to pay it to these persons, and then only on their demand with a proper receipt. Even if there were not this condition of demand made and receipt tendered, I think that art. 62 of the Limitation Act would not apply, for the money was not received by the Collector for the plaintiffs' defaulters' use; and next, it would be impossible to apply the provisions of that article in so far as they fix the time from which the period of limitation in a suit to recover such money commences to run. Article 62 declares that limitation in such a suit commences to run from the time when the money was received for the plaintiff's use. It would be impossible to determine this. It can scarcely be said that the money was so received by the Collector, at the time it was placed in deposit to the credit of the defaulters, when the money has been held by the Collector for some time previously, first, but in part only, as earnest money after the sale, then as the proceeds of the sale, and after an interval ultimately as the property of Government, with a contingency that there may be [60] a surplus after paying all dues to the defaulting proprietors whose estate had been sold.

I apprehend, too, that the Legislature did not have in contemplation that it should be in the power of one of the parties to a suit to determine the period from which limitation in a suit against him should run, and that this should be fixed unknown to the plaintiff, that is to say, when the Collector may have adjusted the account of Government against the defaulting proprietors.

Lastly, as was pointed out in the course of argument, if limitation in a suit to recover surplus proceeds be regulated by art. 62, it may frequently happen that if the defaulting proprietors bring a suit to set aside the sale, the limitation for which is, as in art. 62, three years, and fail, his right to sue to recover the surplus sale proceeds will be barred. The result of this would be that if they sue to set aside the revenue sale and fail, they will lose not only their property but money which undoubtedly belongs to them, and which they could not take without forfeiting their right to bring that suit. This cannot have been intended by the Legislature.

All these considerations lead me to conclude that a suit brought to recover money held in deposit by the Collector, under s. 31 of the Revenue Sale Law, is not governed by sch. II, art. 62 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

I am next of opinion that the suits before us are not within the terms of s. 10 of the Limitation Act. The position of the Collector is in many respects that of a trustee, but, inasmuch as the money so held is payable to the particular parties only on their demand with a receipt tendered, it seems to me that the obligation to pay would be only when such demand coupled with tender of a proper receipt shall have been made. Such a case has not been specially provided for by the Limitation Act, and it therefore would be governed by sch. II, art. 120.

I agree in the terms of the orders which it is proposed to pass in the second appeals before us.

PIGOT, J.—This suit is brought to recover Rs. 907 6-3, the amount of surplus sale proceeds of plaintiff's estate sold under the provisions of Act XI of 1859. The estate was sold by the [61] Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet on the 11th November 1885. The amount claimable by Government for rent, cesses and talabana was Rs. 5-11-5, the balance, the sum claimed, being kept in deposit according to the provisions of s. 31 of the Act.

The plaintiff's right to the money, as owner of it, is quite clear.

The plaintiff is an owner of some, and assignee of the rest, of the shares in the surplus proceeds of his co-proprietors, and they have, as is stated in the plaint, given notice of the assignment under the Transfer of Property Act. No question was raised as to this, and the argument proceeded upon the footing of his right under s. 31, save as affected by limitation.

But the defendant, the Secretary of State, defends the suit on the ground that the claim is barred by limitation; and, this contention having been rejected by the two lower Courts, has appealed to this Court. The Division Bench which heard the appeal referred the case to the Full

Bench. [His Lordship then referred to the order of reference above set out and proceeded.]

If the Limitation Act does apply to the case, I agree with the other members of this Bench that art. 62 of the Act (which was held in the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Fazal Ali (1) to govern this question) does not apply: but that art. 120 applies, if the Act applies at all. In this case, the suit was actually brought within six years from the sale itself, and within a far less period from the time of demand.

The second question referred, namely, whether s. 10 of the Limitation Act applies to the case, raises the question whether the Act governs this case at all. I am of opinion that it does not, and that that question should be answered in the negative. In what I have to say, I shall deal with this question alone, as to which my opinion differs from that of the other members of the Bench.

There is no doubt whatever that the money which the plaintiff claims is his money, and that the Government has no right to it, or interest in it, of any kind. This is not denied on the part of Government, but it is contended that there is no trust of the money shown, under s. 10 of the Limitation Act, and that [62] therefore it can avail itself of the Act, as a defence to the plaintiff's suit; of course if not, there is no defence to the suit at all.

I think the money in this case did, within the meaning of s. 10 of the Act, "become vested" in Government "in trust for a specific purpose," that is, to be handed over to the person described in s. 31 of Act XI of 1859, and that the plaintiff's suit cannot be barred by time.

The first question I shall deal with is as to the effect of the words in s. 31, which are said to create a trust. Assuming that Government can, under the law of this country, be a trustee, are the words of s. 31 such as to give rise to a trust in respect of the surplus proceeds?

Section 31 is as follows:—

"The Collector shall apply the purchase money, first, to the liquidation of all arrears due upon the latest day of payment from the estate or share of an estate sold; and, secondly, to the liquidation of all outstanding demands debited to the estate or share of an estate in the public account of the district; holding the residue, if any, in deposit on account of the late recorded proprietor or proprietors of the estate, or share of an estate sold, or their heirs or representatives to be paid to his or their receipt on demand in manner following; to wit, in shares proportioned to their recorded interest in the estate or share of an estate sold, if such distinction of shares were recorded, or if not, then as an aggregate sum to the whole body of proprietors upon their joint receipt. And if before payment to the late proprietor or proprietors of any surplus that may remain of the purchase money the same be claimed by any creditor in satisfaction of a debt, such surplus shall not be payable to such claimant, nor shall it be withheld from the proprietor, except under precept of a Civil Court."

Now, if the words "holding the residue, if any, in deposit on account of the late recorded proprietor . . . or their heirs or representatives to be paid..." were contained (substituting "mortgagor" for "proprietor") in a power of sale in a mortgage deed empowering the mortgagee to sell, I think they would create an express trust of the surplus proceeds after sale under the power, [63] within the decisions on s. 25 of the English Act.—Charles v. Jones (2). It is practically the same provision as that which in powers of sale in mortgages, has been held to have that effect. The absence of the word "trust" is immaterial.

(1) 18 C. 294.

I see no reason why the intention should not be imputed to the Legislature, when it used those words, of giving to the proprietor whose estate has been sold the fullest security and protection possible in respect of the proceeds of his estate. The Revenue Sale Law is a law of the utmost stringency: the present case is a sufficient illustration of this, for an estate (not encumbered, so far as appears) for which nearly Rs. 1,000 has been once realized is sold for arrears, the exact amount of which does not appear, but which, with cesses and talabana, came to less than Rs. 6.

I think the words may properly be construed as intended to impress on the surplus proceeds the character of monies held in trust for the late proprietor. I think that when the residue is ascertained, it becomes trust money held for him by the Collector under the Act, the Collector acting in this respect for, and representing, Government.

The case of Kinloch v. Secretary of State in Council (1) was cited, as showing that the Secretary of State in Council could not be a trustee: that the Government of India could not be a trustee: and that the whole foundation of the claim, as based on a trust, must entirely fail.

I do not think that that case has any bearing whatever upon the present, except as to one dictum of that great Judge, Lord Justice James, in the course of his judgment, to which I shall presently refer.

The decision rested principally on this, that upon the proper construction of the Queen's Warrants, notwithstanding that the instrument was so worded as "to give and grant" to the Secretary of State in Council the booty, the subject-matter of the suit, "in trust for the use of" the persons on whose behalf the suit was brought, the warrant did not create a trust cognizable in a Court of Equity at all, as Vice-Chancellor Hall had held that it did: the intention of the Crown as shown by the terms of the warrant [64] being plain, to exclude anything of the sort: and the power of the Crown to do so, being clear.

That case was appealed to the House of Lords. The judgments of the House of Lords are reported in L. R., 7 Ap. Ca. page 619.

The judgment of the Lord Chancellor makes it, I think, clear that, so far as the position of the Secretary of State in Council was dealt with in that case, it was dealt with on grounds wholly inapplicable to the present question. At p. 622 his Lordship says:--

"With respect to the Secretary of State for India in Council, I entirely agree with what seems to have been the opinion of the Court of Appeal. He is here sued as a Corporation. It is not the individual who now happens to fill that office who is sued, but it is the officer bearing that description; a remarkable and special description, derived evidently from s. 65 of 21 and 22 Vict., Chap. 106; which simply enacted that suits to establish rights, which if that Act had not been passed would have belonged to the East India Company, and for which they might have sued, and again suits to establish claims, which if that Act had not been passed, would have been proper to be made in actions at law or suits in equity against the East India Company, might be brought by or against the Secretary of State for India in Council. The enactment seems to proceed on the same principle on which in Banking Acts public officers are authorized to sue and be sued as representing the person really entitled or liable. This is, no doubt, a very high public officer; and the designation

Whatever the reason for that may have been, the enactment is limited as I have expressed it; and this is clearly not a suit brought against him as representing the late East India Company, or which can by any possibility be described as a suit which, if the India Government Act had not been passed, might have been brought against the East India Company. Therefore, so far, there seems to be no ground for suing the Secretary of State for India in Council in the manner in which he is here sued.

[65] "It is said, and I dare say rightly said, that for some other purposes, under particular Acts of Parliament which define those purposes, he may be in like manner sued. But it has not been alleged that any of those Acts of Parliament extend to the subject matter of this action."

It seems to me that the question whether or no, in a particular case in which the Secretary of State is defendant, there is any trust, is to be decided upon the principles laid down by Peacock, C.J., in The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company v. The Secretary of State for India (1), and that the question really is whether, to use the Lord Chancellor's words in the passage just cited, if the India Government Act had not been passed, a suit could have been maintained against the East India Company by the plaintiff for these monies as having become vested in the Company in trust for the specific purpose set out in s. 31 of Act XI of 1859, namely, that the monies should be paid to the plaintiff on his demanding them. The right to a receipt, such payment being made by the Collector, is expressly given by the section. That right is, of course, an incident of every trust.

It need not be discussed whether or not the East India Company could be a trustee. It is certain that it could be and often was.

"But the Government of India is not, it appears to me, capable of being a trustee," et seq.

I do not understand the Lord Justice to decide by this expression of opinion that in cases coming within the provisions of the Government of India Act the Government of India could not be a trustee, or the Secretary of State could not be liable to be sued as a trustee, as representing it, and I do not think he can have meant so to decide, as he does not refer to the effect of that Act at all, as the Lord Chancellor did in the House of Lords. In truth it would be difficult to reconcile this opinion, if the Lord Justice had expressed it, with the case of the Clive Fund—Walsh v. Secretary of State in Council (2), in which the representatives of [66] Lord Clive were held entitled to recover from the Secretary of State in Council under the provisions of the deed, whereby the East India Company was made trustee of the fund handed over to them by Lord Clive in 1770. No doubt it was on the liability created by the covenant entered into by the Company, that the Secretary of State was held bound in that case to repay the money; but it was a liability binding on the Company as trustee, and as such binding on the Government of India in respect of the Indian revenues, and on the Secretary of State, as I understand, as being bound by the trust as representing the Government.

Then it is said that these monies have not become "vested" in the Government within the meaning of the section.

(2) 10 H. L. Ca. 367.

The Account Code showing the practice of the department with respect to surplus proceeds held under the Act was referred to by both sides in argument. In Chap. XXV, ss. 11 and 12 are as follows:—

"11. Deposits not exceeding one rupee unclaimed for one whole account year, balances not exceeding one rupee of deposits partly repaid during the last year, and all balances unclaimed for more than three complete account years, will, at the close of March in each year, be credited to Government by means of transfer entries in the Accounts Office. Of deposits or balances thus lapsing the treasury officer must submit to the Accountant-General, immediately after 31st March, a list showing date of receipt, number of deposit, and balance at credit."

"12. Deposits credited to Government under this rule cannot be repaid without the sanction of the Accountant-General, but this sanction will be given, as a matter of course, on ascertaining that the item was really received, was carried to credit as lapsed, and is now claimed by the person who might have drawn it any time before the lapse. The amount of a lapsed deposit refunded will, however, be charged in the cash-book as a refund, and not debited to deposits. But the application for refund and the payment of the deposit should be recorded in the district register of receipts, so as to guard against a second repayment."

It appears to me that, upon the ascertainment of the surplus the money became "vested" in the Government in the hands of its [67] servant, the Collector (in this case the Deputy Commissioner). I am not aware of any definition of the expression "vested" save that of Markby, J., in Kherode-mony v. Doorgamoney (1). But I do not see how it can be contended that these monies have not become vested in the Government. They are now, as against all the world but the owner, the property of the Government. They were so from the moment they were paid, and even before the surplus was ascertained; and this, quite apart from any question which need not be discussed here, as it was not at the bar, whether or not they ought to have been when the surplus was ascertained, not merely ear-marked, but held separately and not mixed in the general funds of the State, as of course they have been. They are in the hands of the Government, and so effectually vested in its hands, that the owner of them has failed to get them, and has been refused them when he demanded them. Possession, with all the indicia of property in respect of them, so far as regards third persons, is had by the Government. I think this must be "vesting" of this moveable property, within the meaning of the section.

I think this is made more clearly to appear upon looking at the practice under the rules read to us both by the pleader for the appellant and by the Standing Counsel. For three years, according to the practice, surplus proceeds of sales remain to the credit of the persons entitled under s. 31 of the Act; after that date they are credited to Government by means of transfer entries in the Accounts Office. I do not see how it can be contended that (at any rate after this last transfer is effected) the monies do not become "vested" in Government.

The word "become" seems to cover every possible manner in which the vesting could take place.

I think, too, that the fact that the monies are, up to that time, quite properly credited to the person or persons entitled under the Act, bears upon the character in which they are held, when read by the provisions of the section: they are up to that date avowedly held for him. I may

I think, therefore, first, that the words of s. 31 satisfy the expression "trust for a specific purpose" in s. 10 of the Limitation Act; secondly, that the monies have "become vested" in Government within the meaning of those two words; and thirdly, they have become vested in it in trust for the specific purpose, which in the present case is payment to the plaintiff.

The effect of the Act is, I think, to place Government in the same position as a mortgagee after exercise of his power of sale, in ordinary form, in respect of the surplus proceeds. I cannot see that the fact that the sale is in invitum, under a power created for the advantage of the State and not under a power created by him, ought to place him in a worse position than that held by an ordinary mortgagor. In effect, the Revenue Sale Law hypothecates land held under the State for the payment of the revenue and the sale is the exercise of a power of sale in enforcement of the hypothecation. It is made by the law one of the terms of the contract or transaction between the Government and its tenant, under which the latter takes and holds his land. In fact, in Regulation X of 1793, s. 19, the relation is actually described as that of mortgagor and mortgagee.

I also think that when, in the exercise of its authority over the Collector, Government causes a transfer of the monies from the credit of the proprietor to its own credit, it must be treated (apart from the question of its being a trustee through him before that time) as taking over monies which then, at any rate, become vested in it, which monies are, when taken over, impressed with a trust for a specific purpose; and at that time, even if not before it, become vested in Government on that trust.

The opinion of the entire Bench, that limitation runs from six years from date of demand, renders the answer to the question as to s. 10 of little practical importance in cases like the present; but the general question as to the possible liability of Government as a trustee is one of considerable importance; none the less so by reason of the high prerogative view urged on us on behalf of Government, and for which some of the [69] expressions in Kinloch's case (2) were used, not for the first time. I own that I think it would be very unfortunate if those views were well founded in law; any tendency to withdraw the acts of the Government and of its servants from the cognizance of the Courts of justice would be a very serious thing, and I certainly do not think the Courts should be astute for the purpose of aiding that object.

In this country, the relations of the Government with the individual subjects of Her Majesty are of almost infinite variety and extent; partly arising from the trading operations to a vast amount necessarily carried on by it, and partly from the multitude of enactments, the number of which is steadily augmenting, which bring Government in close relations with the subject in respect of his private rights of property.

I am well aware that the opinion which I have formed on this question is one which, during the many years in which the Revenue Sale Law has been in operation, is for the first time expressed in a Court of Justice. That is a formidable argument; perhaps, against the soundness of my opinion. Still, I cannot discover that the occasion has ever before arisen. I am aware of no reported case in which limitation has ever been set up by Government as an answer, and the sole answer as in this case it has been in this Court, to a claim by the owner of surplus proceeds of sale.

GHOSH, J.—I agree with the Chief Justice in the answers he proposes to give to the questions that have been referred to the Full Bench.

According to the Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), immediately upon the conclusion of a sale, the party declared to be the purchaser has to deposit a portion of the purchase-money (25 per cent.), and the balance before sunset of the thirtieth day; but the sale does not become final and conclusive before the sixtieth day, or before the appeal, if any be preferred to the Commissioner, is dismissed. Upon the sale becoming final, the Collector applies the purchase-money, first, to the liquidation of the arrear for which the estate was sold, and then, to the liquidation of all outstanding demands debited to the estate in the public [70] accounts; and if there be any surplus left, it is to be paid to the recorded proprietor or his legal representative.

It seems to me therefore that the purchase-money when paid by the purchaser is not money received by the Collector to the use of the owner of the estate; but a portion of it, i.e., the surplus, if there be any, may possibly assume that character some time afterwards. The 62nd article of the second schedule of the Limitation Act says:—

"For money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use, three years, when the money is received."

When the law says "when the money is received" it means, I take it, the time when it is actually received, and not the time when after the Collector has applied the purchase-money to different purposes, it is ascertained that there is a surplus due to the proprietor. I do not think it could have been the intention of the Legislature to lay it down that the cause of action of the defaulting proprietor would arise on the day that the money is received by the Collector. The law allows him two distinct remedies: first, he may appeal to the Commissioner; and second, he may bring a suit to contest the legality of the sale. And the prosecution of these remedies may take him more than three years. If he is bound to sue for the surplus within three years, under art. 62, he may have to give up his suit to contest the sale; for s. 33 of the Revenue Sale Law provides that "no person shall be entitled to contest the legality of a sale after having received any portion of the purchase-money." In other words the results may, in some cases, be that the defaulting proprietor must either receive the money within three years from the date when the purchaser pays it into the hands of the Collector, or he must give up his right to contest the sale.

I do not think that the Legislature could have intended such a result, and to provide art. 62 for such a case as the present. The claim of the plaintiff for the surplus is either a claim which arises upon the statute (s. 31 Act XI of 1859), or it is an equitable claim for the money in the hands of the Collector; but in either case, it seems to me, it could not fall within art. 62 [71] (see in this connection the decision of the Privy Council in Gurudas Pyne v. Ram Narain Sahu (1)).

As regards the other question that has been raised in this case, and which has been discussed at considerable length before us, viz., whether the suit falls within s. 10 of the Limitation Act, it is, I think, a difficult one. But after giving the matter my best consideration, I am inclined to think that it is not governed by that section—at any rate, it is not clear that it is so.

Section 10 of the Limitation Act provides that no suit against a person in whom property has vested in trust for any specific purpose, for the purpose of following such property in his hands, shall be barred by any length of time.

The question for our consideration is, whether the surplus sale proceeds has vested in the Collector in trust for the defaulting proprietor.

Now, what is it that vests the surplus in the Collector as a trustee for the defaulting proprietor? So far as the defaulting proprietor is concerned he is not a party to the sale held by the Collector: there is no confidence reposed by him upon the Collector, and we are not aware that under the engagement that the plaintiff or his predecessor in title executed for the payment of the Government revenue fixed upon the estate, he authorised the Collector to sell the estate in the event of a default in payment of the revenue and to receive the surplus for him. There is no fiduciary relation between him and the Collector; and herein, I think, lies the distinction between the position of the Collector in the present case and that of a mortgagee, who, when he is authorized by the mortgagor to sell, receives on behalf of the mortgagor the surplus sale proceeds. It was strongly argued before us upon the authority of certain cases in England, and more especially upon some of the observations in the case of Banner v. Berridge (1), that the mortgagee is a trustee for the mortgagor in respect of the surplus, and that on the same principle, the Collector should be regarded as a trustee for the specific purpose of handing over the surplus to the recorded proprietor. But it seems to me that the analogy does not hold good when it does not appear that the proprietor, when he entered into [72] an engagement for the Government revenue, authorized the Collector to sell the estate and receive the surplus for him. The power to sell an estate for arrears of revenue is, I take it, only given by the law; and we have simply to determine what was the intention of the Legislature when they passed that law. Was it their intention to make the Collector a trustee for the defaulting proprietor in respect of the surplus? I hardly think that it was so. Section 31 of the Act provides that "the Collector, after applying the purchase-money to the liquidation of all arrears and demands of Government, shall hold the residue, if any, in deposit on account of the late recorded proprietor or proprietors of the estate or share of an estate sold or their heirs or representatives, to be paid to his or their receipt on demand in manner following," etc., etc. The section here casts upon the Collector a duty which he is bound to perform in the manner prescribed therein; but nothing more. On turning to Regulation XI of 1822, I find that the words used in the corresponding section (22) were "the residue shall belong to the defaulter or defaulters, and be payable to his or their receipts upon demand." I hardly think that these words could be construed as the creation of a trust in the hands of the Collector. There was a slight change in the wordings in the subsequent Act, XII of 1841, s. 21, they being the same as we find them in s. 31 of the present Sale Law; but I do not think that the Legislature, if they did not intend in 1822 to make the Collector a trustee, intended to make him so by the words that they used in 1841. I think what the Legislature meant to say was that the surplus shall belong to the recorded proprietor, and shall stand to his credit in the Collector's books until a demand is made and receipt is tendered, when the Collector will be bound to hand it over to the recorded proprietor or his representative. No doubt, no technical words are necessary to create a trust, but we must be satisfied that the Legislature by enacting s. 31, Act XI of 1859, intended to constitute the Collector a trustee for the proprietor in respect of the surplus. I do not think that this was their intention, and I am not aware of a single case since the passing of the Sale Law in 1822 in which the Government has been regarded as a trustee in similar circumstances.

[73] If then s. 10 does not govern the case, there is no other section applicable; and the result, therefore, must be that the limitation prescribed is that in art. 120. Under that article the right to sue for the surplus does not accrue until, as provided by s. 31, Act XI of 1859, the demand is made.

In No. 1001 of 1890.

PIGOT, J. (PETHERAM, C.J., PRINSEP, TOTTENHAM, and GHOSE, JJ., concurring).—The sale took place in January 1883. The suit was brought in December 1888. Under divers precepts of the Civil Courts, the proceeds were attached, and the Collector was, of course, entitled to refuse payments until they were disposed of; this has been properly held to be so by the lower Court, and the plaintiffs have been properly ordered to pay the costs of the Secretary of State in that Court on that ground, but as the attaching creditors abandoned their claim at the hearing the plaintiff obtained a decree, which was set aside by the lower appellate Court on appeal by the Secretary of State on the ground alone that art. 62 of the Limitation Act governed the case. This being held not to be so, the decree of the lower appellate Court will be set aside, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored. Plaintiff will have his costs in this Court and the lower appellate Court.

In No. 1151 of 1890.

PIGOT, J. (PETHERAM, C. J., PRINSEP, TOTTENHAM and GHOSE, JJ., concurring).—In this case the Secretary of State appealed from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, who held that art. 120 of the Limitation Act applied. The appeal on that ground must fail.

But the plaintiff brought his suit in respect of his share of the surplus proceeds of the mehal. His name is duly registered, but his lands and the jama, are not specified: he therefore could not recover; but this objection was waived in the written statement filed on behalf of Government provided the other parties interested should appear, and the plaintiff's claim should be established in their presence; a very fair and considerate course. The issues raised must be read with reference to this written statement.

[74] It has been found that the plaintiff's claim has been so established in the presence of the other parties interested, so that in truth the question before the lower Court of appeal was only that of limitation; and the fourth paragraph of the memorandum of appeal to this Court does not arise.

The Secretary of State was properly given his costs in the original Court.

But he appealed on the ground of limitation alone to the lower appellate Court, and from that Court to this.

Article 120 applies and as the objection under the concluding portion of the first paragraph of s. 31 was waived in the written statement of Government, the case must be treated as though the demand was duly made on behalf of all the sharers; and if so, it was within time.

The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

BIR NARAIN PANDA AND OTHERS (Decree-holders) v. DARPA
NARAIN PRODHAN AND ANOTHER (Judgment-debtors).^{*}
[17th June, 1892.]

Decree payable by instalments—Default in payment of instalments—Right of decree-holder to waive his right to execute entire decree—Waiver—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 179, paragraph 6.

A decree dated the 18th July 1883, which was made against D and K in terms of a solebname filed by them, directed payment by instalments in the month of Choitra (Vilaity year) each year, with a proviso that if default was made in the payment of any instalment, then, without waiting for [75] default in other instalments, the decree-holder should be at liberty to take out execution and realise the whole amount of the kistbundi with interest. D admittedly paid the instalments due from him up to Choitro 1292 (March-April 1885) and a portion of that due in Choitro 1293 (March-April 1886) and K admittedly paid those due from him up to Choitro 1293 (March-April 1886), and although in the application for execution payments made subsequent to those dates were alleged by the decree-holders to have been made, both lower Courts found such payments not to have been proved. On the 1st September 1890, more than three years after the default made by D in Choitro 1293 (March-April 1886) and that made by K in Choitro 1294 (March-April 1887), the decree-holder applied for execution of the whole decree with interest after deduction of all instalments alleged by them to have been paid. On second appeal before the High Court it was contended that although the application to execute the entire decree was barred, yet as the proviso was for the benefit of the decree-holders they were competent to waive it and claim execution in respect of the instalments that fell due within three years before the date of their application for execution.

Held, that this was not the case made out in the Courts below, and further that the proviso could not be said to be waived, as there had been no acceptance of payment subsequent to the first default, nor a mere abstinence on the part of the decree-holder from seeking the benefit of the proviso, but on the contrary there had been an affirmative act done by him showing that he did not waive the benefit of the proviso, but claimed to execute the entire decree.

execution of a decree on the ground that it was barred by limitation under art. 178, sch II of the Limitation Act, 1877.

On the 18th of July 1883 the plaintiffs obtained a decree for Rs. 648 in terms of a solehnamah filed by the defendants Darpa Narain Prodhan (defendant No. 1) and Krishna Narain Prodhan (defendant No. 2). The terms of the solehnamah which were embodied in the decree were as follows:—

"We have entered into a compromise with the plaintiffs, which is to the following purport:—That out of Rs. 648, inclusive of the amount under claim and costs, I, Darpa Narain, shall pay to the plaintiffs [76] Rs. 324 (three hundred and twenty-four), being a moiety of the above amount, and I, defendant Krishna Mohun, Rs. 324 (three hundred and twenty-four), the other moiety in the following instalments, by endorsing payments on the back of the decree; that if we make default in the payment of any instalment, then, without waiting for default in the payment of other instalments, the plaintiff shall be competent to take out execution and realize the whole amount of the kistbundi, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 pie per rupee per month from this day to the date of realization by attachment and sale of the lands mentioned in the schedule to the plaint, 8 annas at a time separately, and of our other moveable and immoveable properties, and from our own persons, and that the plaintiffs shall be competent to take out execution against any one of us who will be unable to pay the instalments to the plaintiffs, or who will make default in payment of the instalments."

In the schedules of instalments to the solehnama it was provided that each of the defendants should pay the first instalment of Rs. 24 on 25th Bhadro 1290 Vilaity (8th September 1883), and the remaining instalments of Rs. 14 annually in Cheyt (March-April) each year until the year 1312 (1905).

Krishna Mohun admittedly paid the instalments due by him up to Cheyt 1293 (March-April 1886), and Darpa Narain those due by him up to Cheyt 1292 (March-April 1885), and a portion of the instalment due in Cheyt 1293 (March-April 1886).

On the first September 1890 the plaintiffs applied for execution. They alleged that Darpa Narain had paid the balance of the instalment due in Cheyt 1293 (March-April 1886) and that both Krishna Mohun and Darpa Narain had paid the instalments for Cheyt 1294 (March-April 1887); and that they had made default in payment since the last-mentioned date. Accordingly they prayed for execution of the whole decree with interest, as stipulated after deducting the instalments admittedly paid and then alleged by them to have been paid.

The judgment-debtors Krishna Mohun and Darpa Narain denied payment in Cheyt 1294 (March-April 1887), as well as the payment of the balance of Cheyt 1293 (March-April 1886), and pleaded that the application was barred.

[77] The Munsif found that Darpa Narain had made default in Cheyt 1293 (March-April 1886) and Krishna Mohun in Cheyt 1294 (March-April 1887), and accordingly held that the application for execution of the balance of the decretal amount with interest at the stipulated rate was barred by cl. 6 of art. 179, sch. II of the Limitation Act.

The Munsif also noticed the point, although not put forward by the decree-holders, as to whether they would be entitled to realise the instalments which fell due within the three years before the date of their application, and he held upon the authority of the case of Mon Mohun

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

The only question raised in this case is whether execution is barred with reference to the instalments that fell due within three years before the date of the last application for execution. The decree, which was based upon a compromise, directs payment by instalments, with a proviso that if default is made in the payment of any instalment, then, without waiting for default in other instalments, the plaintiff shall be competent to take out execution and realise the whole amount of the kistibundi together with interest. In the application for execution the decree-holder alleged that since 1295 the judgment-debtors had made default in the payment of the instalments, and that consequently the remaining instalments had all become recoverable, and he accordingly asked for execution of the whole decree after deducting the sums alleged to have been paid. The judgment-debtors pleaded limitation and denied the payments said to have been made in 1293 [78] and 1294. The Courts below have found that the decree-holder has failed to make out that any payment was made in 1293 and 1294, and they have accordingly held that as the present application is made more than three years after the date of the first default, the application is barred. The decree-holder did not, in either of the Courts below, make any application to be allowed to execute the decree in respect of the instalments that fell due within three years before the date of his application. But the Court of first instance, in its judgment, noticed the point as to whether such application, if it had been made, would not be barred; and it held upon the authority of the case of Mon Mohun Roy v. Durga Churn Gooee (1) that an application of that kind would be barred. It is admitted before us that upon the facts found by the Courts below, the decree-holder is barred in his application to execute the entire decree, as the default upon which the right to execute the entire decree must be based occurred more than three years before the date of the application. But it has been argued that though that was so, yet as the proviso authorizing the decree-holder to execute the entire decree in the event of default in the payment of any instalment was a provision for his benefit, it was competent to him to waive the benefit of that proviso and claim execution only in respect of the instalments that were not barred. In the first place, we do not think that that was the case made in the Courts below; and in the second place, we cannot, in the face of the present application, say that the proviso may be waived, seeing that in this case there has been no acceptance of payment subsequent to the first default nor a mere abstinence on the part of the decree-holder from seeking the benefit of the proviso, but, on the contrary, there has been an affirmative act done by him, showing that he did not waive the benefit of the proviso, but claimed to execute the entire decree. The facts of this case are therefore very much stronger than those of the case of Mon Mohun Roy v. Durga Churn Gooss (1), and we think that the decree-holder is not entitled to execute the decree.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Lords Morris and Hannen, Sir R. Couch and Lord Shand.
[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

KAMESWAR PERSHAD (Plaintiff) v. RAJKUMARI RUTTAN KOER AND OTHERS (Defendants). [21st June, 1892.]

Limitation Act, XV of 1877, sch. II, art., 32—Debt not charged on immoveable property—Prior adjudication—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13, expl. 2.

A widow purported to charge land which she held for her widow's estate with payment of a debt; and afterwards surrendered her estate to the next heir, or reversioner, on condition that he should pay all her debts. In this suit, brought by the creditor after the death of the widow, against the reversioner, more than six years from the time when the debt had become payable, it was held, that unless the debt had been effectively charged on immoveable property within art. 132, sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, the suit would be barred; and the charge alleged to have been made on immoveables was found not to have been, in fact, a binding one.

The present suit had been preceded by another one brought by the creditor against both the widow, then alive, and the reversioner, the cause of action against the latter being that in his hands was the property chargeable. That suit was dismissed as against him, but decreed against the widow. In the present suit payment was claimed from him of a balance of the deceased widow's debt, on the ground that he had agreed, on taking the surrender of the estate from her, to become responsible for her debts;—Held, that this "might and ought to have been made ground of attack" in the former suit, within the expl. 2 of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code; and must accordingly be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in the former suit; and therefore that this suit was barred. The Acts of 1877 and 1882 did not alter the previous state of the law.

APPEAL from a decree (8th May 1889) of the High Court, reversing a decree (23rd February 1888) of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by Kameswar Pershad, a banker of Gaya, now appellant, against Raja Run Bahadur Singh, who died pending this appeal in which he was now represented by the respondents, minors, appearing by their guardians.

[80] The plaintiff had made Raja Run Bahadur a co-defendant in a previous suit of 31st March 1876, which was dismissed as against him, but was decreed against his co-defendant, Rani Asmedh Singh, who died during those proceedings on the 20th October 1878; see Kameswar Pershad v. Run Bahadur Singh (1). Both that and the present suit had reference to the same debt for Rs. 61,000, secured on a bond and mortgage executed by Rani Asmedh on the 1st August 1872; and the question on this appeal was whether this suit, which was brought on an alleged undertaking by Raja Run Bahadur in 1872 to pay her debts, had been rightly decided by the High Court to be barred either by limitation or by the effect of the prior adjudication.

By ikrarnamas executed and interchanged on the 31st August 1872 Asmedh, as widow of Raja Modhnarain Singh deceased, surrendered her widow's estate in an eight annas and a half share in the property of her deceased husband to Run Bahadur, who was declared in both ikrars to be the nearest male gotia and heir to the deceased Modhnarain. Both ikrars declared that the widow had transferred to Run Bahadur the above share of the zemindari left by Modhnarain, situated in the districts of Gaya and Patna, which was in the widow's possession, in consideration of her getting from him Rs. 24,000 a year for her expenses; and that he had taken over the debts due to creditors and the encumbrance on the estate; also that she had made him "her and her husband's representative," and that he had undertaken to pay the debts due to her creditors "out of the profits of the said properties."

To the ikrarnamas Kameswar Pershad was not a party, nor was he named in them. The result of the suit of 1876 was that a decree was made by the High Court on the 2nd July 1878, affirmed on appeal by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on 23rd November 1880, to the effect that Kameswar Pershad was entitled only to a decree against the widow for the money which she had received and interest thereon and that the transaction was not binding on the estate. The suit was dismissed as against Run Bahadur, against whom however, as representing [81] the decree-holder Kameswar Pershad in 1884 sought to obtain execution in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, and reliance was placed on the above agreement in the ikrarnamas of 1872. Also a sum of Rs. 5,000 was admitted to have come to Run Bahadur from the widow. Except as to this sum, the Court held that Run Bahadur could not be held liable to satisfy the decree of 1878 against the widow. Under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was only, in the Court's opinion, upon the property of the deceased that the decree against her could be executed; and on her death Run Bahadur had become owner of the estate, not by inheritance from her, but from Modhnarain her husband. Accordingly execution against the objector Run Bahadur was refused. This order was upheld by the High Court on the 14th January 1886.

On the 13th January 1887 the plaintiff brought this suit against Run Bahadur for the balance of the money due from Rani Asmedh under the decree of the 2nd July 1878. He alleged that the defendant by the ikrarnamas of 31st August 1872, and by taking over the property surrendered, had rendered himself liable on a cause of action which accrued on the 14th January 1886 when his representative character was negatived by the High Court confirming the order of the Court in the execution proceedings. The defendant besides other defences set up limitation and adjudication in prior proceedings. The Subordinate Judge having fixed issues on these points, made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the principal sum of Rs. 61,000, with Rs. 31,860-5 as interests.

On an appeal, a Division Bench of the High Court (TOTTENHAM and GORDON, JJ.) reversed that decision and dismissed the suit with costs. As to the effect of the ikrarnamas of 1872, the Judges were of opinion that a Court of equity ought to hold that they were intended for the benefit of creditors, and that it was competent to the plaintiff to sue the defendant to enforce the arrangement on which the latter had acted. But they were of opinion that the estate was not vested in Run Bahadur in trust for a specific purpose so as to bring the transaction within regard to the rights of creditors within s. 10 of Act XV of 1877. They said that it had been already held by the Court that the language of the section was specially framed to exclude implied trusts; and [82] they referred to Kherode-money Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (1) and Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh (2). They further held that the cause of action did not date from the decision of the High Court on the 14th January 1886, and that if the plaintiff had acquired any right to sue this defendant personally for the Rani Asmedh's debt he acquired it as soon as that debt fell due in 1875. The suit should have been brought within six years after the right to sue had accrued, but it had not been brought for more than eleven years after that time. Accordingly they held the suit to be barred by limitation. They also considered the question whether the suit was maintainable, the plaintiff having in the previous suit against the Rani, to which the present defendant had been a party, omitted to seek relief against him personally. They referred to Woomatara Debia v. Unnopoorna Dossee (3), and to Pigou v. Mahomed Abou Syed (4), concluding that the suit must fail on this ground also.

On this appeal,

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant:—
The suit was not barred by limitation, the claim being for the payment of a debt charged upon immoveable property, within art. 132 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877. Originally the payment of the Rs. 61,000 was charged upon immoveable property in the widow's possession, but afterwards transferred to Run Bahadur. An attempt had been made to establish, as against him, the charge on the land in the suit of 1876. This failed, but the suit was decreed against the widow with whom he had been sued as co-defendant. In the result, however, when her death ensued in 1879, there was no property held by any one who represented her from which satisfaction of the decree against her could be obtained. But Run Bahadur in his ikrarnama of 1872 had agreed to pay the widow's debts out of the profits of the properties surrendered by her to him. Those profits he had received. This fact, which had not formed part of the cause of action in the former suit against him, could be brought forward now in the present one; and the claim was not [83] barred by limitation though more than six years had elapsed before the suit was brought, because the debt was charged on immoveable property sufficiently to make the claim fall within the words of art. 132 of sch. II. [SIR R. COUCH referred to s. 13, Civil Procedure Code, and inquired whether the present cause of action was not one that might have been included in the suit of 1876.] It was submitted that the causes of action in that suit, and in the present, were different. The former suit was not brought, as this was, upon a liability personally undertaken by Run Bahadur, viz., his undertaking to pay the debt out of the profits of the surrendered interest in land. There had been no decision that the right accruing to the plaintiff, in consequence of Run Bahadur's agreement having been accompanied by his having got possession of the estate, so as to enable the plaintiff to sue Run Bahadur, was not enforceable. The suit was not barred by prior adjudication, for the present cause of action was distinct from the former one.

Reference was made to Woomatara Debia v. Unnopoorra Dossee (1), Denobundhoo Chowdhry v. Kristomonee Dossee (2), and the judgment of Scotland, C.J., in the Shivagunga case (3).

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

LORD MORRIS.—The facts which it may be necessary briefly to recapitulate, in order to make clear the grounds upon which their Lordships are about to decide this case, are as follows:—Rani Asmedh Koer was the senior widow of Rajah Modhnarain Singh, and as such was entitled to a widow's interest in certain mauzas, part of the property of her deceased husband. She appears to have incurred debts to the appellant, and on the 1st March 1872 she executed a bond to him for the sum of Rs. 61,000 to meet the amount of her liability, and thereby hypothecated the mauzas. On the 31st August 1872 an agreement was entered into between her and Run Bahadur, whereby she surrendered her interest in her husband's estate to Run Bahadur, upon condition that he was to pay her an allowance of Rs. 24,000 for her maintenance, and was to pay off her liabilities. On the 31st March 1876 the appellant [84] instituted a suit on the bond against the Rani and Run Bahadur, which was decreed by the Subordinate Judge on the 6th December 1876 in the terms of the prayer. The High Court varied this decree, and by their decree of the 2nd July 1878 held the Rani personally liable for the amount covered by the bond with interest thereon, and held the mortgage not to be binding upon the estate. The matter was brought before this Board by way of appeal, and in 1880 the appeal was dismissed. In 1884 the appellant sought to execute, against Run Bahadur and the properties in his possession, the personal decree obtained against the Rani, who was dead. The Court to which the application for execution was made held that the decree could not be executed against Run Bahadur, except in respect of personal property of the Rani which had come to him on her death. The High Court on appeal upheld this decision by their judgment of the 14th January 1886. On the 13th January 1887 the appellant instituted the present suit against Run Bahadur, praying to have him declared liable, under the agreement of the 31st August 1872, to satisfy the decree obtained against the Rani on the bond.

(2) 2 O. 152.

(3) 11 M. I.A. 50 (61).

The first objection taken to the suit was that it was barred by the law of limitation.

Prima facie, this would be obvious, for the bond was by its terms made payable in the month of September 1875, whereas the right to sue the defendant for a personal debt would be limited to six years, and the present suit was not commenced until the month of January 1887, an interval of over 11 years. The appellant, however, alleges that he comes within the limitation applicable to a charge on immoveable property, which would be 12 years; if he is right in that contention, the suit, being instituted 11 years and some months afterwards, is not barred.

But it is necessary for the appellant to satisfy this Board that the charge upon the estate was one which was binding upon it, and, bearing in mind the facts of the earlier suit, and what was said by the Board in that case, their Lordships are not satisfied that it was so binding in fact. In this view, the period of six years, and not the period of 12 years, applies in this case, and the suit is consequently barred.

[85] Another ground appears to their Lordships fatal to the suit, and that is that it offends against the principle of res judicata laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. In the suit of 1876 Run Bahadur was joined as a defendant, upon the ground that the Rani had, under the agreement of 1872, given over to him the whole of her properties, including what was mortgaged by the bond, but no relief was claimed against him personally. It was clearly competent for the appellant to have alleged in that suit the personal liability which he now says he can establish against Run Bahadur. He had relied upon the fact of the mortgage being one affecting the whole estate, but he could have also alleged that Run Bahadur was bound at all events to pay him, in consequence of the agreement which he had entered into with the Rani. This, however, he did not do.

Section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 says: "No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such Court." Explanation 2 of that section says: "Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit." Their Lordships think that the present ground of attack was a good ground of attack in the suit of 1876, because the money had not been paid in September 1875, the date named in the bond.

That it "might" have been made a ground of attack is clear. That it "ought" to have been appears to their Lordships to depend upon the particular facts of each case. Where matters are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion, the construction of the word "ought" would become important; in this case the matters were the same. It was only an alternative way of seeking to impose a liability upon Run Bahadur, and it appears to their Lordships that the matter "ought" to have been made a ground of attack in the former suit, and therefore that it should be [86] "deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue" in the former suit, and is res judicata.

But it has been urged that the first suit having been brought in 1876, the Code of Civil Procedure of 1877, and not the Code of 1882, governs the case; but it is to be observed that the Code of 1882 says that "No Court shall try any suit or issue;" that is, shall try after the passing of that Act, though the circumstances had arisen previously.

Neither should it be lost sight of that the Act of 1877 and the Act of 1882 were not introducing any new law, but were only putting into the form of a Code that which was the state of the law at the time.

The state of the law at the time was, that persons should not be harassed by continuous litigation about the same subject-matter.

Upon these grounds their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the judgment of the High Court should be affirmed and the appeal dismissed. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

PRESENT:

Lords Watson and Hobhouse, Sir R. Couch and Lord Shand.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

AHSANULLA KHAN BAHADUR (Defendant) v. HARICHARN
MOZUMDAR (Plaintiff). [29th June, 1892.]

Sale for arrears of rent—Sale of putni tenure set aside upon defect in the notice required by Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 8—Difference in notice of mid-year sales, and of sales for a year's rent in default, under cls. 3 and 2, respectively—Objection taken for first time on appeal.

The power of sale given to the zemindar by Regulation VIII of 1819, upon default in payment of the rent by a putnidar, is only exercisable subject to a condition as to notice to the defaulter. To bring into operation the provisions of cl. 3 of s. 8, relating to a mid-year sale, the [87] serving a notice, according to that section, intimating to the putnidar that payment of three-fourths of the balance due will prevent a sale, is a condition precedent to the sale. A notice relating to a mid-year sale was held to be essentially defective, as it followed cl. 2 instead of cl. 3 of s. 8, and intimated that payment of the whole arrear would be the only way to stay the sale.

This objection was taken for the first time in the Appellate Court: Held that as a defect fatal to the whole proceeding appeared in the notice, the objection was competently taken in that Court. Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1) distinguished.

APPEAL from a decree (31st January 1890) of the High Court (2) affirming a decree (28th April 1888) of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh.

The plaintiff, now respondent, brought this suit on the 14th April 1887 to have set aside the sale of his putni taluk which took place on the 16th November 1886, at the instance of his zemindar, purporting to be under the provisions of Reg. VIII of 1819, "to declare the validity of certain tenures, and to define the relative rights of zemindars and putni talukdars, also to establish a process for the sale of such taluks in satisfaction of the zemindar's demand of rent."

The putni was granted to the plaintiff's predecessor in estate by the defendant's predecessor, he being zemindar in possession of a share in a zemindari named Kismut Daajani in the Mymensingh district; and the rent reserved on the putni was Rs. 212 a year. The plaintiff made default in payment of the rent due from Baisakh to Assin, six months of the Bengali year 1293, corresponding to the period from the middle of April to the middle of October 1886. The defendant, now appellant, in consequence of the plaintiff's default took proceedings against him under Reg. VIII of 1819, applying to the Collector for the issue of a notice. The result was that on the 1st Aughran 1293, corresponding to the 16th November 1886, the putni taluk was sold for an arrear of about Rs. 111, and was purchased by the defendant himself for Rs. 125. The question now raised related to the effect of the notice not having been as required in cl. 3 of s. 8 of Reg. VIII of 1819.

[88] The plaint alleged irregularity in the proceedings; stating that notices in the form required by the Regulation had not been published at the suddar kutcheri, in the mofussil, in the mehal sold, or in the collectorate kutcheri, nor had the service of notice alleged in the rubakari for sale been according to law; also, that the value of the property sold was Rs. 20,000; and fraud was alleged.

The defendant's written statement denied fraud, and alleged that the notices served had been sufficient to satisfy and requirements of the Regulation. Issues having been fixed, raising the points in dispute, the Subordinate Judge made a decree in the plaintiff's favour, setting aside the sale, on the ground that the notices required to be published in the several places mentioned in the Regulation had not been shown to have been duly published in all of them.

On an appeal by the zemindar, the High Court (NORRIS and MACPHERSON, JJ.) affirmed the decree (1), but not on the finding of the Court below as to publication. The Judges held that even had the notice been as a fact served, it was defective in itself. It had not stated that the sale might be stayed by payment of so much of the arrears as would reduce them to one-fourth of the total demand of the zemindar. There was a wide difference according to the judgment between the notices under the one clause and those under the other. Under cl. 2, a putnidar, dur-putnidar, incumbrancers, and others, were to learn from a notice, served in the places named, that the tenure would not be released from an impending sale unless the whole year's rent should have been paid before the date fixed for the sale. Under cl. 3, payment of three-fourths of the half-yearly rent due would suffice to have the effect of staying the sale, and the notice under cl. 3 was to be varied accordingly. The judgment concluded thus: "We therefore think that the ground that the notice was bad in law is a substantial ground, and upon it the appeal must be dismissed with costs." Both Courts concurred in setting aside the sale, though not on the same grounds.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellant:—There was error in the decision that the notice under the circumstances of this case, and with regard to the time when the objection was taken, was [89] insufficient to support the sale, which in other respects had been found to be regular. The High Court had given effect to the objection, taken for the first time during the argument of the appeal, when other objections had been disallowed. The informality of one part of the same section having been treated as applicable instead of the other had not been shown to have occasioned any material injury to the interests of the plaintiff. An application which had not been granted had been made that the defendant might have an opportunity to show that the form used was the one in general use. A reference to the cases would show that, where irregularities had occurred, the test of its having occasioned injury to the interests of the party complaining was applied. He referred to Pitamber Panda v. Damoodar Doss (1), Maharaja of Burdwan v. Tarasundari Debi (2), Macnaghien v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (3), Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamini Dasi (4).

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., Mr. C. W. Arathoon and Mr. W. H. Rattigan, for the respondent, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

LORD SHAND:—Their Lordships do not think it necessary to call for any reply in this case.

A zemindar having an interest in a taluk of this kind has undoubtedly, under the provisions of Reg. VIII of 1819, a power of sale in the case of default in payment of the rent; but that power of sale, which is given as a very summary remedy, and which may be exercised immediately on arrears arising, is given under important conditions, the fulfilment of which is of the utmost consequence, not only to the person having a right to the taluk, but to all those who have rights under him; not only to the putnidars, but to the sub-lessees, mortgagees, and other incumbrancers, whose rights may be affected or extinguished by the sale taking place.

The Regulation provides for two separate cases. It provides under cl. 2 of s. 8 for the case of an arrear which has extended twelve months; and under cl. 3 of the same section, it [90] provides for a still shorter arrear, namely, non-payment of the rent due at the end of six months. In the case of arrear occurring, the Regulation provides for specific notice to be given of the intention to proceed to sale. Clause 2 of the section is as follows:—"On the first day of Baisakh, that is, at the commencement of the following year from that of which the rent is due, the zemindar shall present a petition to the Civil Court of the district, and a similar one to the Collector, containing a specification of any balances that may be due to him on account of the expired year from all or any talukdars, or other holders of an interest of the nature described in the preceding clause of this section. The same shall then be stuck up in some conspicuous part of the kutcheri, with a notice that, if the amount claimed be not paid before the first of Jeyt following, the tenures of the defaulters will on that day be sold by public sale in liquidation."

(1) 24 W.R. 129.

(3) 9 C. 656 = 10 I.A. 25.

(2) 9 C. 619 = 10 I.A. 19.

(4) 14 C. 365 = 14 I.A. 30.

The notice in that case ought to state, in terms of the clause, that if the full amount due, and specified in the notice, be not paid before the date therein mentioned, the tenure of the defaulter will be sold by public sale. In order to have that notice in proper form it must contain, not merely a specification of the arrears, but a notification that the sale will proceed unless payment of the rent be made within the time limited.

In the case now before their Lordships of six months' arrears of rent only having become due, the provision applicable is in these terms:—"On the first day of Kartick in the middle of the year, the zemindar shall be at liberty to present a similar petition, with a statement of any balances that may be due on account of the rent of the current year up to the end of the month of Assin, and to cause similar publication to be made of a sale of the tenures of defaulters, to take place on the first of Aughran, unless the whole of the advertised balance shall be paid before the date in question, or so much of it as shall reduce the arrear, including any intermediate demand for the month of Kartick, to less than one-fourth, or a 4 anna proportion of the total demand of the zemindar, according to the kistbundi, calculated from the commencement of the year to the last day of Kartick."

It appears to their Lordships to be clear that the notice, which is a condition precedent to any sale taking place under this clause, [91] must in all material respects comply with the provisions of the clause, and that therefore there should be intimation made to the debtor, in terms of the clause, not only of the balance due, but an intimation that, unless the whole of the advertised balance shall be paid before the date in question, or so much of it as shall reduce the arrear, including any intermediate demand for the month of Kartick, to less than a fourth of the total demand of the zemindar, the sale will take place. But it is conceded in this case that the notice, instead of being framed as cl. 3 required, and so containing an intimation that payment of three-fourths of the arrear would prevent a sale, contained a distinct statement that unless the whole of the arrears were paid, the sale would take place. In short, the notice followed the terms of cl. 2, whereas the case was one under cl. 3; and it not only failed to give the intimation of the proportion of the arrear which if paid would prevent a sale, but gave an erroneous and misleading intimation, at least by implication, that payment of the whole arrear was necessary to prevent this.

The following passage in the judgment of the High Court appears to their Lordships to present the correct view of the law:—"The object of the publication of this notice is to give not only to the defaulting putnidars, but dur-putnidars, mortgagees, and other incumbrancers, notice of the sale. It may well be, that the putnidar, dur-putnidar, mortgagees, or other incumbrancers would have available, for the purpose of saving the estate from sale, 75 per cent. of the arrears due, but not the whole. We are of opinion that if the zemindar chooses to bring into operation the provisions of cl. 3, s. 8, and to get a half year's rent by means of this Regulation, he must strictly comply with the conditions laid down in the section. We think that all the requirements in cl. 2 of s. 8 must be imported into cl. 3 of that section mutatis mutandis, and therefore we think that the serving of the notice is a condition precedent to the sale being held, and that the notice so served must be a good notice, that is to say, it must be a notice which shall put all parties concerned in saving the tenure from sale, in possession of the knowledge of what really they will have to do if they desire to save the tenure, and would-be purchasers in possession of information as to the amount they will have to spend if they wish to purchase the [92] property." Their Lordships adopt this expression of opinion; in this case the notice was essentially defective, and the sale was consequently bad, and must be set aside.

It has been contended on the part of the appellant that this objection came too late. No doubt the objection was one which ought to have been taken before the Court of first instance; but their Lordships are not prepared to hold that an objection of this kind, fatal to the whole proceedings, and appearing upon the face of the notice itself, was not competently raised before the High Court, and entertained by them.

The case of Macnaghten v. Mahabir Parshad Singh (1), to which their Lordships have been referred, is of a totally different character. In that case a question was raised for the first time before the High Court, which would have necessitated inquiry as to whether there had been pecuniary injury to the party complaining of the alleged irregularity in the proceedings which resulted in a sale, and that inquiry ought to have been made, if the point was to be maintained, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. In this case the objection, which is at the root of the whole proceedings, arises upon the notice which the zemindar himself gave, and no inquiry of any kind is necessary; and their Lordships are of opinion that it was not too late to take such an objection before the High Court, and that the High Court properly disposed of it. It was indeed maintained that the objection in this case did raise matter for inquiry, because it was said that it could be proved that the form of notice given in this case had been generally in use for a number of years, even in case of a six months' arrear only. But the Court could not allow any such inquiry, because no extent of general use of such a form of notice could enable parties to dispense with a material and essential part of it.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the judgment of the High Court and to dismiss the appeal. The appellant will pay the costs of the appeal.

*[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner,

RAMGOPAL AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. SHAMSKHATON AND OTHERS
(Defendants).* [24th June and 23rd July, 1892.]

Second appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act XVI of 1882), ss. 584 and 585—Findings of fact distinguished from inferences or conclusions of law—Inference of law which the facts found were insufficient to justify.

It is well settled that a Court of second appeal, for the purpose of considering the weight of the evidence, is not competent, according to ss. 584 and 585 of the Civil Procedure Code, to entertain a question as to the soundness of a finding of fact by the Court below. The first Court's decision as to the effect of the evidence must stand final as to the facts. But the soundness of conclusions may involve matter of law and may be questioned by a Court of second appeal.

A conclusion was drawn by an appellate Court affirming the judgment of the first Court, that the defendant had accepted as a binding obligation upon him a mortgage executed by his mother, with whom he was a sharer by inheritance on the property charged. A higher appellate Court, on a second appeal, decided that these conclusions were not warranted by the facts found, and reversed that judgment. Held, that the third Court had not exceeded its powers under the above sections by reversing the decision of the Court below.

The expression "specified law" used in clause (2) of s. 584, first introduced into the Code by the Act of 1877, means "specified" in the memorandum or grounds of appeal."

APPEAL from a decree (30th November 1887) of the Judicial Commissioner, reversing a decree (25th April 1887) of the Commissioner of the Nerbudda Division, affirming a decree (4th December 1886) of the Deputy Commissioner of Hoshangabad.

The suit was brought by the appellants against Daud Rao, since deceased, as co-defendant with his mother Mussamat Shamskhaton, to recover Rs. 9,390, principal and interest due on a mortgage, and in default of payment for foreclosure. The property mortgaged was mauza Bilawada, in the district of Hoshangabad, which was formerly held as a "muafi," or mauza free from [94] assessment to the revenue, by Surji Rao, a Mahomedan, who was the husband of Shamskhaton and father of Daud Rao. Surji died in 1864, having in his lifetime executed a prior usufructuary lease of the muafi plot to Seth Jiwan Ram, father of the appellants. In 1865 the muafi was resumed and Bilawada was assessed to the revenue. The widow and son being the only heirs or sharers of Bilawada, dakhil kharij was entered in her name, and she alone on the 4th July 1871 executed the mortgage which was the subject of the present suit, brought on 28th July 1886. Her execution was found as a fact by the Courts below, and no question remained as to her liability. But Daud Rao, who was at the date of the mortgage entitled to seven-eighths of Bilawada, his mother being entitled to the remaining one-eighth, defended the suit on the ground that he had neither executed the mortgage nor consented to its being executed. It had been made during his absence while he was at Nagpur, as he alleged. On his return, according to his statement, he had at once sued his mother for partition, and had obtained a decree, dated 28th March 1875, for his share by inheritance of Bilawada. Daud Rao was now represented by his widow, Jiya Bai, and by his sons, Mahomed Rao and Azam Rao, minors under her guardianship.

The question on this appeal was whether the Judicial Commissioner had acted within his appellate powers in reversing the decree of the lower Court of appeal, which had affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance in favour of the plaintiffs and against Daud Rao.

The issues and the findings thereon are stated in their Lordships' judgment. The Deputy Commissioner, as the Court of first instance, found as a fact that Daud Rao was fully aware of the execution of the deed of mortgage of 4th July 1871 by his mother, and that he had admitted his liability for the debt; as the Court said, "the mortgage was known to and accepted by Daud Rao." This was affirmed by the Commissioner, who also considered that the mortgage constituted a charge on Bilawada. On a second appeal to the Judicial Commissioner a different view as to the effect of Daud Rao's knowledge of the mortgage was taken. The third Court affirmed the decree of the Court below against Shamskhaton and her share in Bilawada, but [95] reversed that decree (as to a sum of Rs. 500 which Daud had agreed to pay as having been a debt due by his father) on Daud Rao's appeal, and dismissed the rest of the money claim and the foreclosure suit as against him.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant, argued that under the 584th and 585th sections of the Civil Procedure Code, the Judicial Commissioner had no authority to reverse the decision of the lower appellate Court. The third Court had dealt with the appeal in all respects as if it had been a first appeal, differing from the lower appellate Court's findings upon the evidence. The Judicial Commissioner's reason was that the evidence was not in his opinion sufficient to justify the conclusion.

Reference was made to Pertap Chunder Ghose v. Mohendranath Purkait (1), Durga Chowdhry v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhry (2), Nivath Singh v. Bhikki Singh (3), Ramratan Sukal v. Nandu (4), Lachmeswar Singh v. Monowar Hossein (5).

The decision from which this appeal was preferred was, supposing it to have been within the jurisdiction of the Judicial Commissioner, contrary to the evidence. Even if the defendant Daud Rao had not been bound by the acceptance found to have been made by the two Courts, his subsequent receipt of all the benefits that resulted from the raising the mortgage money, and his taking possession of the greater share of the property mortgaged, required to have the proper effect given to such acts on his part, if the appellants were not restored to the original position of Seth Jiwan Ram under the usufructuary lease.

On a subsequent day their Lordships' judgment was delivered by:—

JUDGMENT.

SIR R. COUCH.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces in a suit brought by the appellants against the first respondent and Daud Rao, the father [96] of the other respondents in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner, Hoshangabad. The plaint stated that the defendant Shamskhaton, the mother of Daud Rao and widow of Surji Rao, on the 4th July 1871 executed a mortgage for Rs. 4,000 of mauza Bilawada in favour of the plaintiffs and their deceased father. The 4th paragraph was as follows:—“On 29th March 1879 the defendant No. 2 (Daud Rao) having filed a regular suit, obtained a decree for 14-anna share in the said village. He is in possession of the said village, and lives jointly. But he is bound to repay the sum for which the deed has been executed. Defendant No. 2 has ratified the deed. Hence he is made a party to the suit.” The plaint then stated that the money due from the defendants was Rs. 4,000 on account of principal and Rs. 5,590 on account of interest, and prayed that the defendants should be ordered to pay Rs. 9,390, with interest from the institution of the suit, and in default of payment that the mortgage should be foreclosed and the plaintiff be put in possession of the village. The defence of Daud Rao was that at the time of the execution of the mortgage he was absent from home in the service of the Raja of Nagpur, and knew nothing of the transaction; that when he returned from Nagpur and heard that a deed had been obtained by the plaintiff from his mother by fraud, he at once sued his mother, and had his share of 14 annas in the village separated; and that there was no consent on his part to the deed. The defence of Shamskhaton was that the deed was obtained by fraud.

The issues framed were—“1. Was the deed for Rs. 4,000 fraudulently executed? 2. Did defendant No. 2 ratify the deed of mortgage executed by defendant No. 1? 3. Is defendant No. 2 liable for the debt incurred by defendant No. 1?” Evidence was given on both sides. The Deputy Commissioner, in his judgment delivered on the 4th December 1886, found the first issue for the plaintiffs. On the second issue, after stating the evidence applicable to it, he said—“From the above evidence I hold that defendant No. 2 was fully aware of the execution of the deed of mortgage by his mother, Mussamat Shamskhaton, and admitted his liability for the debt, and thus ratified the deed of mortgage. I therefore find the second issue in favour of plaintiffs.” The ground of his holding that the defendant No. 2 had admitted his liability [97] for the debt on the mortgage is the construction which he put upon a passage in a judgment of the Deputy Commissioner, dated the 7th July 1875, in a suit between the plaintiffs and defendants upon a bond executed by both defendants, in which the Deputy Commissioner says that in a bond for Rs. 42, which had been produced in Court, reference is made to two other documents, which reference is equivalent to an admission of liability. The bond thus referred to, which was executed by Daud Rao in favour of Jiwan Ram, and is dated the 9th August 1872, contains the following passage:—“Besides this there are two separate deeds of previous dates; one is the mortgage deed of village, and the other is a bond. The money due under them is also duly repayable.” Here it is to be observed that whether this is an admission by Daud Rao of liability under the mortgage depends upon the construction of these words, especially the word “repayable.”

They may and would ordinarily mean repayable by the party liable to pay.

There was no finding on the third issue, and a decree was made against both defendants directing them to pay Rs 9,390 with costs of suit within six months from its date, failing which they were to be absolutely debarred from redeeming the mortgage. From this decree the defendants appealed to the Commissioner of the Nerbudda Division. His judgment was delivered on the 25th April 1887. He affirmed the finding of the Deputy Commissioner on the first issue. As to the second, he said that the evidence upon which the first Court held the ratification to be proved was—

1. The admission of defendant No. 2 that he became aware in August 1872 of the existence of the mortgage deed.
2. A letter marked (I) written by him, asking the plaintiffs not to sue on the deed.
3. A copy of the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner, dated the 7th July 1885.
4. A copy of the bond marked (L) for Rs. 42.
5. The fact of the defendant No. 2 at first allowing his mother to retain the whole of the family property, and then receiving seven-eighths of it from her.

[98] He rejected the letter marked (I) as not proved to be genuine, and said the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner proved two things—“(1) That in July 1875 defendant 2 was made liable on a bond executed by defendant 1 alone. (2) That the original of bond (L) was then produced,” and that the statement in it showed that the mortgage deed was “known to and accepted by defendant No. 2.” A finding that the bond showed that the mortgage deed was accepted by the defendant as a binding obligation upon him would be an inference of law, an inference which, in their Lordships’ opinion, is not a just one from the facts which the Commissioner held to be proved. The knowledge of the mortgage, and saying that the money due upon it was repayable, do not amount to an agreement by him to be bound by it. As the mortgage did not purport to be made in any way on behalf of Daud Rao, it was not a case for ratification. A new agreement or obligation was necessary to bind him. The judgment of the Commissioner then proceeds to say—“Lastly, there is the conduct of defendant 2 in allowing defendant 1, notwithstanding that she was entitled to only one-eighth of the property, to take possession of the whole of the property, with the exception of Rs. 1,400; all the rest of the Rs. 4,000 entered in the mortgage debt was on account of the former proprietor’s debt and the Government revenue of the mortgaged village. The mortgage deed therefore constituted a charge on the village, which defendant 2, as the owner, was liable to pay.” Here the fact found is the conduct of Daud Rao. That there was a charge on the village which he as owner was liable to pay is an inference of law, and it is one which the fact found is not sufficient to justify. Mr. Doyne, in support of this part of the judgment, referred to the previous mortgage by Surji Rao, which is marked (E) in the record. But at the head of it are the words “Rejected—Not proved,” with the initials of the Deputy Commissioner, and therefore he could not be allowed to use it. The Commissioner confirmed the decree of the first Court, with costs of the appeal.

Daud Rao then appealed to the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, and the first question for consideration is whether the Judicial Commissioner had power to entertain the appeal. Section 584 of the last Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV [99] of 1882), which is applicable to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, says that "unless when otherwise provided . . . from all decrees passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to a High Court, an appeal shall lie to the High Court on any of the following grounds (namely)—(a) the decision being contrary to some specified law or usage having the force of law; (b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law; (c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure as prescribed by this Code or any other law, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits." Section 585 says that "no second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in s. 584." The effect of these sections has been stated in several judgments of this Committee. It will be sufficient to refer to the last of them, Ramratan Sukal v. Nandu (1), where it is said "It has now been conclusively settled that the third Court, which was in this case the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, cannot entertain an appeal upon any question as to the soundness of findings of fact by the second Court; if there is evidence to be considered, the decision of the second Court, however unsatisfactory it might be if examined, must stand final." The present case does not come within that rule. The facts found need not be questioned. It is the soundness of the conclusions from them that is in question, and this is a matter of law.

Their Lordships think it is proper that they should notice a construction which has been put upon s. 584, in a case in the High Court at Allahabad, Nivath Singh v. Bhikki Singh (2) where it is said by the learned Chief Justice that by "specified law" in cl. (a) is meant "the statute law," and by "usage having the force of law" is meant "the common customary law of the country or community." Their Lordships cannot approve of this construction. Usage having the force of "law" means a local or family usage as distinguished from the general law, of which there are many instances, and "law" is not to be limited in its meaning to statute law. This is shown by cl. [100] (b) where the words must be intended to mean the same as in (a). In the corresponding provision in the first Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859) as to special appeals (which they are there called), the words are "contrary to some law or usage having the force of law." The meaning of law and usage there is clear, and there is no reason for thinking that the words were intended to have a different meaning in the Act of 1882 or in the Civil Procedure Code of 1877, where the word "specified" is first introduced. In the judgment of this Board in Durga Chowdhani v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhri (3), it is said that "specified" in sub-s. (a) means "specified in the memorandum or grounds of appeal," and their Lordships adhere to this opinion.

The Judicial Commissioner reversed the decree of the Commissioner as regards Daud Rao and his share, and made a decree against him for seven-eighths of Rs. 500 only (a debt of his father Surji Rai, of which he has agreed to pay his share), with costs proportionately in all Courts. The Judicial Commissioner went fully into the facts of the case, and said that in his opinion the evidence was not sufficient to justify the conclusion of the lower appellate Court, and that it could not be held on that evidence that the defendant Daud Rao was bound by the mortgage

DHORA KAIRI (Defendant No. 1) v. RAM JEWAN KAIRI MAHTON AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).^{*} [12th September, 1890.]

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Notice to quit—Under-ryot—Forfeiture—Denial by tenant of landlord's title—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 49, cl. (b).

The plaintiffs sued to eject the defendant from certain land, alleging that it formed part of their holding, and that the defendant was their sub-tenant. The defendant denied the plaintiff's title, and set up the title of a third person adverse to that of the plaintiffs. The lower appellate Court found that the defendant was the plaintiff's tenant, and both the lower Courts held that the defendant by denying the title of his landlord had forfeited his rights as a tenant, and was therefore liable to be treated as a trespasser, and as such to be evicted without notice.

Held, that in all cases to which the Bengal Tenancy Act applies there can be no eviction on the ground of forfeiture incurred by denying the title of the landlord, and that it having been found by the lower appellate Court that the defendant was an under-ryot of the plaintiffs, he could not be evicted from his holding except after notice to quit, as prescribed in s. 49, cl. (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Debiruddi v. Abdul Rahim (1) followed.

[F., 2 C. L. J. 389 (393) = 9 C. W. N. 928 ; 2 Ind. Cas. 417 ; R., 31 C. 757 (758) (F.B.) = 8 C. W. N. 479 (482) ; 14 C. W. N. 339 = 5 Ind. Cas. 708 (709) ; Expl., 6 C. W. N. 575 (577) ; D., 13 C. L. J. 1 = 15 C. W. N. 335 (337) = 8 Ind. Cas. 660.]

THIS was a suit for ejectment and for recovery of possession of 1 bigha and 10 cottahs of land, which the plaintiffs claimed to be part and parcel of their holding comprising 11 bighas and 10 cottahs.

The plaintiffs alleged that the land was sublet to the defendant No. 1 at a rent of Rs. 25 annas 8, that they received rent up to the 8-annas kist of 1292, and that they subsequently gave him a verbal notice to quit from 1293. They further alleged that the defendant No. 1 caused a collusive suit to be instituted against [102] himself by the defendant No. 2, the ticcadar of the mauza, for arrears of rent, in which he confessed judgment, and subsequently he (the defendant No. 1) set up an adverse title against them.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2446 of 1889, against the decree of Baboo Nil-monee Dass, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Saran, dated the 14th of September 1889, reversing the decree of Baboo Jogendro Nath Mookerjee, Munsif of Sewan, dated the 9th of August 1888.

The defendant No. 1 alleged that the plaintiffs had not sublet the disputed land to him, that it formed part of his father's holding, that his father gave it to him at the time of his separation, that he got his name registered in the zamindar's sherista, that a decree was obtained by the defendant No. 2, as the ticcadar of the mauza, for arrears of rent due to him, and that, according to the plaintiffs' own case, he was entitled to notice to quit.

The defendant No. 2 generally supported the contentions of the defendant No. 1, and he further alleged that his ticca expired in 1292, and from 1293 it passed to one Ram Somavat Singh.

The Munsif held that no notice to quit was necessary, inasmuch as the defendant No. 1, by admitting the title of a third person to the rent of his land, denied the plaintiff's title, and thereby forfeited all his rights as a tenant as against the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to treat him as a trespasser. He further held, however, that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the land in question formed part of their holding, or that it was sublet to the defendant No. 1. The suit was therefore dismissed with costs.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge agreed with the view taken by the Munsif as to the question of notice to quit, but was of opinion that it was unnecessary to decide whether the land in question formed part of the plaintiffs' holding, inasmuch as, if the plaintiffs really sublet the same to the defendant No. 1, the latter would be estopped from denying the plaintiffs' title under the provisions of s. 116 of the Evidence Act. After reviewing the evidence he reversed the decision of the Munsif, holding that the land in question was sublet by the plaintiffs to the defendant No. 1, and accordingly decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

From this decision the defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Korunz Sindhu Mukerjee with Baboo Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty, for the appellant.

[103] Baboo Srinath Banerjee and Baboo Upendro Chunder Bose, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and GORDON, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The only question for decision in this appeal is whether the defendant appellant can be ejected without notice to quit.

At first sight we were disposed to hold that in accordance with the principles of English law, which have been followed in various decisions of this Court, the lower Courts were right in holding that the defendant by setting up previous to suit a title to the land adverse to that of the plaintiffs, his landlords, forfeited all his rights as a tenant as against the plaintiffs, and was therefore liable to be treated by them as a trespasser, and as such to be evicted without notice. But in a recent decision under the Bengal Tenancy Act it has been held [Debiruddi v. Abdur Rahim (1)] that under that Act "in all cases to which it applies, there can no longer be any eviction on the ground of forfeiture incurred by denying the title of the landlord." We of course follow this decision, and as it has been found by the lower appellate Court that the defendant was an under-ryot of the plaintiffs, we must hold that he cannot be evicted from his

JOGENDRONATH BHARATI (Judgment-debtor) v. RAM CHUNDER
BHARATI (Decree-holder).^{*} [2nd June, 1891.]

Execution of decree—Mohunt, decree obtained by, on behalf of muth—Endowment, representation of—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 4.

A decree in favour of a deceased mohunt for costs incurred in proceedings carried on by him on behalf of the muth may be executed by the [104] successor and representative of the mohunt without probate, certificate, or letters of administration being obtained.

ONE Bisheshwar Bharati, the mohunt of the Baral Asthan, died in the year 1248 Mughee (1886-87). Upon his death Jogendronath Bharati, the judgment-debtor, set up a will which he alleged had been executed by the deceased mohunt, and applied for probate. The application was opposed by Pancham Bharati, the person claiming to be mohunt, and probate was refused, Pancham Bharati being allowed his costs against the judgment-debtor. Pancham Bharati having died without taking out execution, his son Ram Chunder prayed to execute the decree not as Pancham Bharati's heir, but as his successor in the mohuntship.

Upon the hearing of the application in the lower Court, it was contended on behalf of the judgment-debtor that the debt was due to Pancham Bharati personally and not as mohunt, and that the application should be rejected as no certificate had been obtained under the provisions of s. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

The lower Court held that Pancham Bharati contested the application for probate in his capacity of mohunt; that as against the judgment-debtor it must be taken to have been decided in that case that Pancham Bharati was mohunt of the Baral Asthan and that the judgment-debtor's written statement contained the clearest admission that the debt was due to Pancham Bharati as mohunt. The Court found upon the evidence that Ram Chander duly succeeded his father in the mohuntship, and that he was entitled, as the legal representative of his father, to execute the decree against the judgment-debtor.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Nilmadhub Bose, Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen and Baboo Golap Chunder Sircar appeared for the appellant.

Mr. R. E. Twidale appeared for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

We think that in this case the effect of ss. 610 and 649 of the Civil Procedure Code is that the Court which formerly had, but now no longer has, territorial jurisdiction ought, when the decree is sent to it, to exercise of its own motion, or when applied for, the provisions of s. 223, and transfer the decree for execution to the Court which now has territorial jurisdiction. Whether or not under the law, as it now stands, the decree under s. 610 ought, under such a decree as that of the Judicial Committee in this case, to be sent direct from this Court to the Court now having territorial jurisdiction, is a matter which we need not discuss in this case.

The appeal is allowed, but without costs.

BINDU BASHINI DAS (Plaintiff) v. PEARI MOHUN BOSE
AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [1st September, 1891.]

Co-sharers—Suit by co-sharers with respect to joint property—Parties—Plaintiffs—Suit for adjustment of proportionate share of rent by one co-sharer—Landlord and tenant—Lease, construction of.

A lease of certain land of which the plaintiff was a fractional co-sharer provided as follows:—"After the land in question is fully brought under cultivation you shall pay rent without default, according to kists year after year, as per measurement and jamabandi at the said rate of Company's 10 annas 10 gundas for the quantity of land that will be left after deducting beds of khals, pasture lands, lands unfit for cultivation, places of worship, hajats, pujai basha batis, and your remuneration for reclamation, upon measurement of all the lands by the standard rod used in the abads of the said talug. On no account shall any larger amount be demanded." In a suit instituted when the land had been fully brought under cultivation, and after measurement, the plaintiff claimed only her own share of the rent and her co-sharers did not join her as co-plaintiffs, nor were they made defendants.

Held, that the suit was not maintainable. What the lease contemplated under the circumstances which had arisen was a final adjustment of the rent, and such an adjustment could be obtained only by a suit brought by all the co-sharers or by some of them if the others refused to join, but in that case the suit must be for the adjustment of the entire rent, and all the necessary parties must be properly before the Court.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 986 of 1890, against the decree of Babu Krishna Mohun Mookerjee, Subordinate Judge of Khulnah, dated the 24th of April 1890, affirming the decree of Babu Norendra Krishna Dutt, Munsif of Bagirhat, dated the 17th of June 1889.

THIS was a suit to recover arrears of rent for the years 1291 and 1292 at an enhanced rate in respect of certain dur ganti jama in chuk Ton-gramari. The plaintiff, Bindu Bashini Dasi, was the owner of 4 annas of the ganti jama, and the pro forma defendants were the owners of the other 12 annas. The tenant defendants held the dur ganti jama under a lease which, inter alia, provided as follows:—

"We hereby grant you a mourasi abadi kaimi lease of an estimated quantity of (1,001) one thousand and one bighas of land, reclaimed and unreclaimed, comprised within these boundaries. The land in question being fallow, you shall hold it rent-free for three paddy seasons, that is, [108] for four years. After expiry of the rent-free period, you shall pay rent according to kists every year, at the rate of four annas per bigha for the first year, at the rate of six annas per bigha for the second year, at the rate of eight annas per bigha for the third year, and for the fourth year at the full rate of Company's ten annas ten gundas, including costs, &c. per bigha per annum. You shall be allowed remuneration for reclamation at the rate of five bighas per cent. For the land that you will cultivate in any particular year, you shall pay rent, as per terms of this potta, according to the result of the local enquiry. After the land in question is fully brought under cultivation you shall pay rent without default, according to kist, year after year, as per measurement and jamabandi at the said rate of Company's 10 annas 10 gundas for the quantity of land that will be left after deducting beds of khals, pasture land, lands unfit for cultivation, place of worship, hajats, pujai basha batis, and your remuneration for reclamation upon measurement of all the land by the standard rod used in the abads of the said talug. On no account shall any larger amount be demanded. You shall raise no objection on the score of drought or diluvion or death or desertion. You will take the present, &c., that may be given by tenants whom you will settle upon the abad in question. You yourself shall close khals and excavation in the land. Rent shall be adjusted upon measurement of the land in question."

The plaintiff, Bindu Bashini Dasi, alleged that the land in question was, in terms of the above lease, fully brought under cultivation, and on measurement it was found to contain 1,491 bighas 2 cottahs and 6 chittaks, and after allowing 5 per cent., deductions, only 1,337 bighas 14 chittaks were liable to assessment at 10 annas and 10 gundas per bigha. She therefore sought to recover enhanced rent of Rs. 1,000 on account of her 4-anna share for increased area in the dur ganti jama as found upon measurement.

No reason was shown why the other shareholders did not join in the suit as co-plaintiffs.

The tenant defendants Nos. 1 and 4 and the pro forma defendants Nos. 5 and 19 entered appearance and contended that the plaintiff, being only one of several shareholders in a joint undivided ganti jama, could not sue alone for enhancement of a fractional share of the rent due under the lease.

The Munsif, relying on the decisions in the case of Doorga Proshad Mytee v. Joy Narain Hazra (1) and Kali Chunder Singh v. Rajkishen Bhadra (2), held that the suit as framed was not maintainable and dismissed it. The plaintiff appealed. "It was pressed before me on appeal that, properly speaking, it was not a suit for enhancement of rent under the rent law; the plaintiff is simply asking for what is due to her in terms of the contract between the parties, and as such the rulings cited by the Court below do not apply. I am of opinion that this is evidently a suit under s. 7 of the Tenancy Act. There has been no separate contract as between the tenant defendants. The contract was between the tenant defendants and all the gantidars jointly. In this state of things the plaintiff should have alleged and proved why her co-sharers do not join her. She should have also laid the whole claim to prevent a multiplicity of law suits. In the absence of these elements in the plaint, I am constrained to hold that the suit has not been properly framed, and the Court below has been perfectly justified in throwing it out.

"The appellant's pleader cited the case of Nistarini Dasi v. Bonomali Chatterjee (1) in support of his contention. It appears to be a Full Bench ruling, in which it was held that 'when a potta in its terms expressly stipulates for an increase of rental according as the lands let are brought under cultivation and a measurement taken, a landlord is entitled to recover such increased rent as agreed upon in the potta, without serving on the tenant any notice under s. 14 of Act VIII of 1869.' The question now before the Court was neither raised nor considered in that case.

"It has been held by a prior Full Bench case of Doorga Proshad Mytee v. Joy Narain Hazra (2) that one co-sharer cannot enhance the rent of his share, such an enhancement being inconsistent with the continuance of the lease of the entire tenure. The case of Kali Chandra Singh v. Rajkishore Bhuddro (3) is an improvement on the Full Bench ruling to answer the requirements in cases where the co-sharers do not join, being under the influence of the tenants. As the plaint has not been laid according to these rulings, I see no valid reason to interfere. The appeal is dismissed with costs."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy, for the appellant.

Baboo Mohendro Nath Roy, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The question raised in this appeal is whether the plaintiff, who is a fractional co-sharer in the superior tenure, is entitled to [110] maintain this suit for rent in respect of her share under the terms of the lease by which the tenancy was created.

The lease provides as follows:—

"After the land in question is fully brought under cultivation you shall pay rent without default, according to kists, year after year, as per measurement and jamabandi, at the said rate of Company's 10 annas and 10 gundas for the quantity of land that will be left after deducting beds of khals, pasture lands, lands unfit for cultivation, places of worship, hajats, pujai basha batis, and your remuneration for reclamation upon measurement of all the lands by the standard rod used in the abads of the said taluk. On no account shall any larger amount be demanded."

This shows that after the land in question is fully brought under cultivation there shall be a measurement and an adjustment of the rent.

(1) 4 C. 419.

(2) 4 C. 96.

(3) 11 C. 615.

after allowing certain deductions, finally and once for all; and after that there shall be no further change in the rent. The plaintiff's case evidently is that that state of things has arisen, namely, that the land has been fully brought under cultivation and there has been a measurement, and the plaintiff, the time for the final adjustment having now arrived or being now passed, asks for an adjustment of the rent. But her co-sharers have not joined her as plaintiffs, and she asks for adjustment of rent in respect of her share only. The adjusting of rent claimed in this suit cannot therefore be the final adjustment contemplated by the lease, as the plaintiff's co-sharers might hereafter bring a suit and succeed in obtaining a different adjustment if separate suits are allowed. It is not necessary to consider whether this is, as has been held by the lower appellate Court, a suit under s. 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We think that under the terms of the lease the final adjustment of rent therein contemplated can be obtained only by a suit brought by all the landlords, or by a suit by some of them if the others refuse to join, but in that case the suit must be for the adjustment of the entire rent, and all the necessary parties must be properly before the Court. For the above reason we think the suit has been properly dismissed, and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

JOTINDRO NATH CHOWDHRY AND ANOTHER (Judgment-Debtors)
v. DWARKA NATH DEY (Decree-Holder).^{*}
[21st December, 1891.]

Execution of decree—Attachment of decree for money—Sale of decree for money—Suits in forma pauperis—Court fees recoverable by Government—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 273, 284, 411.

Where a plaintiff suing in forma pauperis obtained a decree for money, and the Collector, in pursuance of an order made in his favour at the time when such decree was passed, attached it under s. 273 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and subsequently sold the same under s. 284.

Held, upon the application of the decree-holder for execution of his decree, that the provisions of s. 273 did not contemplate the sale of a decree for money, but they showed in what manner the attachment of decrees should be made available on behalf of the attaching person.

Sembla.—The provisions of s. 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not justify the Court in selling a decree upon the application of the Collector, inasmuch as that section provides that persons who have been successful as paupers shall, so far as the subject-matter of their success is concerned, be liable to satisfy out of what they recover the amount of the fees, which have been for a time, pending the decision of their suit, remitted to them.

IN this case Dwarka Nath Dey obtained a decree in forma pauperis for Rs. 1,151 against Jotindro Nath Chowdhry and another person. At the time when the suit was decreed, an order was made in favour of the Collector for the realization of the Court fees due to Government, which ought to have been paid at the time of the institution of the suit. In execution of this order the Collector attached the decree of Dwarka Nath Dey under s. 273 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and subsequently sold the same under s. 284. The decree was purchased by one Umbica Charan Bose, and it was alleged that [112] the judgment-debtors had paid the decretal amount to Umbica Charan, who had duly entered satisfaction of the decree.

Subsequently the decree-holder, Dwarka Nath Dey, applied to the Subordinate Judge for execution of his decree. The judgment-debtors objected to the execution on the ground that they had already paid the decretal amount to Umbica Charan Bose, the purchaser of the decree, at the sale held at the instance of the Collector for the realization of the value of the court-fees due to Government.

The Subordinate Judge overruled the objection of the judgment-debtors, and, relying on the authority of Sultan Koer v. Gulzari Lal (1) and Tiruvengada Chari v. Vythilinga Pillai (2), held that the sale was invalid, and allowed the execution to proceed.

On appeal, the District Judge observed as follows:—

“The Subordinate Judge has come to his finding on the strength of two rulings, viz., Sultan Koer v. Gulzari Lal (1) and Tiruvengada Chari v. Vythilinga Pillai (2). These rulings lay down that the provisions of s. 273 of the present Civil Procedure Code do not contemplate the sale of a decree for money, inasmuch as they lay down that when a Court attaches a decree for money passed by itself, the attachment should be made by an order directing the proceeds of the decree attached to be applied in satisfaction of the other decree; and when a Court attaches a decree for money passed by another Court, then the Court attaching the decree shall, on receiving notice of the attachment, stay execution unless and until—(a) the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed cancels the notice, or (b) the holder of the decree sought to be executed applies to the Court receiving such notice to execute its own decree.

“The appellants’ pleader, however, contends that there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code actually prohibiting the sale of a decree for money; and further, he relies upon four rulings, viz., Gholam Mahomed v. Indra Chand Jahuri (3), Ganesh Lal Tewari v. Sham Narain (4), Ganesh Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Bissessari Debi (5), and Naigar v. Bhaskar (6). I do not, however, find that these rulings support the contention of the appellants’ pleader. The case of Gholam Mahomed v. Indra Chand Jahuri is no doubt in his favour, for it says a decree can be sold, though it only explains how a decree can be attached, and not how it can be sold; but it [113] is a decision given when Act VIII of 1859 was in force, and it has no reference to the provisions of s. 273 of the present Civil Procedure Code, and there was no section in Act VIII of 1859 corresponding to s. 273 of the present Code. In Ganesh Lal Tewari v. Sham Narain, their Lordships of the Privy Council no doubt said, with reference to a decree for mesne profits, ‘that if it had been meant to attach and sell the decree, that might have been done.’ But the decree was not sold, so this observation is an obiter dictum. Moreover, this case too was under Act VIII of 1859, and was therefore decided before s. 273 of the present Civil Procedure Code came into force. Then with regard to the case Ganesh Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Bissessari Debi, I would only say that I see nothing in the decision which lays down that a decree for money can be sold under the provisions of Act XIV of 1882, or which helps me in this case in any way. As for the Bombay case Naigar v. Bhaskar, it is no doubt very much in the appellants' favour, for it is a case in which a decree for redemption of a mortgage was actually sold in execution of a decree for money. But the question whether such a decree could be sold in this way was never argued in this case. The sale was objected to on the ground that it had not been properly attached. It seems to have been conceded that if the decree had been attached it could be sold, and the point now at issue was never considered. This decision, therefore cannot, I think, outweigh the decision of the Madras and Allahabad High Courts. The weight of authority seems therefore against the appellants.

"The Madras and Allahabad High Courts are against them. The Calcutta High Court has not decided the point under the present Code. The Bombay High Court has taken it for granted.

"Looking at the provisions of s. 273 themselves, it certainly seems to me that they do not contemplate the sale of a decree for money. It appears to me that the procedure contemplated therein is that the holder of the decree attached shall apply to the Court to execute the decree, or else that the attaching decree-holder shall himself do so. It has been held that he can do so as the representative of the decree-holder, and as such, it has been said, he is entitled to enforce execution of the decree which he has attached—Peary Mohun Chowdhury v. Romesh Chunder Nundy (1).

"The appellant further contends, on the authority of Rewa Mahton v. Ramkrishna Singh (2), that as the sale has taken place it must hold good. The case of Rewa Mahton v. Ramkrishna Singh, however, is not exactly in point. In that case a sale had taken place in execution of the smaller of two cross decrees, which should never have been executed, as it should have been set off against the decree for the larger amount, and their Lordships of the Privy Council hold that the sale must, nevertheless, stand good, and the property be held to have passed. This is a different thing [114] from the sale of a decree, for which there is no express provision in the Civil Procedure Code and which would not seem to be contemplated by it, standing good, and from its being therefore impossible still to execute the decree sold which is the point at issue in this case. Moreover, it is to be observed that in the case of Tiruvengada Chari v. Vythilinga Pillai (3) a sale of a decree had taken place in execution of another decree, and yet, nevertheless, it was held not to be a good sale. On the whole, I think the weight of authority is against the appellant. I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs."

The judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rashbehari Ghose and Baboo Jagat Chunder Banerjee, for the appellants.

Baboo Nandalal Sircar, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and MACPHERSON, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

We do not think it necessary to call upon the learned pleader for the respondent in this case. We think the judgment of the learned District Judge must be affirmed. The learned District Judge has followed the decision in Sultan Koer v. Gulzari Lal (1) and Tiruvengada Chari v. Vythilinga Pillai (2), giving effect to the contentions that s. 273 was introduced into the Indian Code for the purpose of showing in what manner the attachment of decree under the Code shall be made available on behalf of the attaching person. This is one of the many cases in which it is much better in following previous decisions simply to say that we follow them instead of discussing them or amplifying language which is already sufficiently complete and satisfactory. Therefore we say no more than that we agree with the learned District Judge and follow the decisions on which he has rested his judgment; but we must say, further, that we are wholly unable to understand in what manner the sale of this decree on the application of the Collector could be justified in law. It is true that the point does not appear to have been taken, and it is true that it is unnecessary for the decision of this appeal to determine whether or not s. 411 justifies the Court in selling the decree on the application of the Collector; but we think it right to say, so far as we are entitled in this case to express an opinion, that we are unable to see [115] in what way s. 411 justifies the sale of the decree. It stands thus: The State derives a revenue from court-fee stamps. There are persons whom it is thought right to exempt by reason of their poverty from payment in the first instance of court-fee stamps and who are allowed to sue in forma pauperis, and s. 411 provides that persons who have been successful as paupers shall, so far as the subject-matter of their success is concerned, be liable to satisfy, out of what they recover, the amount of the fees which have been for a time, pending the decision of their suit, remitted to them. That is reasonable enough; but if the procedure adopted in this instance were according to law, the successful pauper plaintiff would become simply a machine for the recovery of the value of the court-fee stamps on behalf of the public treasury if upon his success the Collector disposes, not of a certain proportion of what the plaintiff has recovered, but sells the whole of the plaintiff's right in the decree which he has got without waiting for the recovery by the plaintiff of the money for which he has got his decree. In that case, if such were the law, all that the pauper plaintiff has done in the case is to get a decree against the defendant, and before he is able to recover the amount of it from the defendant, he is to see the whole benefit of that decree taken from him by the State in order that it may possess itself of the value of the court-fee stamps remitted to him in the first instance, and (if this be a correct view of the law) remitted to him delusively. We cannot think that this can have been the intention of the Legislature, and we see nothing whatever in the section to justify the sale of the decree obtained by the plaintiff. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

[116] FULL BENCH.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram Kt., Chief Justice,
Mr. Justice Prinsep, Mr. Justice Trevelyan, Mr. Justice Ghose, and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali.

BIKANI MIA (Defendant No. 1) v. SHUK LAL
PODDAR AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs).^{*} [1st August, 1892.]

Mahomedan Law—Wakf—Settlement in favour of the settler's family with ultimate remainder to the poor—Dedication not substantially for religious and charitable purposes—Appropriation not within the principles of wakf—Property settled on the settler's family with a charge upon it for religious and charitable purposes—Charge, effect upon where wakf not valid.

A settler by instrument purported to create a wakf in favour of his family, and in the event of a failure of his descendants, in favour of the poor of Dacca. The lower appellate Court held that the deed created a valid endowment to the extent of Rs. 75 per annum only, and that, subject to such charge, the properties were alienable.

Held, by the majority of the FULL BENCH (PETHERAM, C. J., TREVELYAN and GHOSE, JJ.; AMEER ALI, J., dissenting), upon the construction of the deed upon the authority of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amirchand Kundu (1) that the instrument did not create a valid wakf, there being no substantial dedication to religious and charitable purposes.

Held, by the majority of the FULL BENCH (PRINSEP, GHOSE, and AMEER ALI, JJ.; PETHERAM, C. J., and TREVELYAN, J., dissenting) that the charge of Rs. 75 per annum should be allowed.

Held, by PRINSEP, TREVELYAN, and GHOSE, JJ., that the course of the decisions should not be disturbed by reference to texts which may favour the idea that a settlement on the settler and his descendants in perpetuity is a pious act.

Held, by PRINSEP and TREVELYAN, JJ., that upon the findings of the lower Courts no second appeal lay, and it was not therefore necessary to express any opinion as to the validity of the instrument.

[117] AMEER ALI, J.—The disposition in question, viewed according to the Mahomedan law, which supplies ample safeguards against fraud, created a valid endowment. There is a consensus of opinion among Mahomedan lawyers of every school and sect that wakfs on children, kindred, or neighbours in perpetuity are valid. To hold that a wakf, the benefaction of which is bestowed wholly or in part on the wakif's family and descendants, is invalid, would have the effect of abrogating an important branch of the Mahomedan law.

A wakf is a permanent benefaction for the good of God's creatures. The wakif may bestow the usufruct, but not the property, upon whomsoever he chooses and in any manner whatever, only it must endure for ever. If he bestows the usufruct in the first instance upon those whose maintenance is obligatory on him, or if he gives it to his descendants so long as they exist, to prevent their falling into indigence, it is a pious act, even more pious than giving to the general body of the poor. When a wakf is created constituting the family or descendants of the wakif the recipients of the charity so long as they exist, the poor are expressly or impliedly brought in to impart permanency to the endowment. The subsequent conduct of the wakif cannot in any way affect the wakf.

THESE five appeals were referred to a Full Bench by PETHERAM, C.J., and HILL, J., with the following observations:—

^{*} Full Bench reference on appeals from Appellate Decrees, Nos. 853 to 857 of 1891 against the decrees of T. D. Brighton, Esq., District Judge of Dacca, dated the 29th of April 1891 modifying the decrees of Baboo Krishna Chunder Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge, First Court, Dacca, dated the 13th of June 1889.

"The plaintiffs in these suits are creditors of the defendant Haji Bikani Mia, who had obtained judgments against him for various sums of money, and had attached properties as being his and liable for his debts. Whereupon Haji Bikani claimed the properties as mutwalli of an endowment made by himself, and his claim having been allowed, these suits were brought for declaration that the properties in question were liable to be attached and sold for Haji Bikani Mia's debts.

"The only question which has been argued before us, and as it is admitted the only question in these cases, is whether the deed, dated the 4th Aughran 1281 (1), and executed by the defendant Haji Bikani Mia, constituted the properties with which it dealt wakf properties within the doctrines of Mahomedan law.

"Mr Woodroffe on behalf of the plaintiffs has relied on the case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (2) in the Privy Council, and on that of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. [118] Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (3), as showing that it is essential to the validity of a wakf that the property should, in substance, be given to charitable purposes, and that a gift to the poor, after the grantor's family had become extinct, is not a sufficient charitable purpose to render the wakf valid.

"For the defendants a case of Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose, decided by a Bench of this Court consisting of Mr. Justice O'Kinealy and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, on the 18th of March 1892, but not yet reported (4), was relied on as showing that a settlement of property for the benefit of the settler and his descendants with an ultimate gift to the poor constitutes a valid wakf of such property within the doctrines of Mahomedan law.

"We are unable to reconcile the case last cited with the other decided in this Court, Rasasmaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (3), and we refer to the Full Bench the question whether the disposition of the grantor's property made by the deed of the 4th of Aughran 1281 was a valid wakf of the property dealt with by the deed.

"If the answer of the Full Bench to the question should be in the affirmative, these appeals will be decreed and the suits themselves dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

"If the answer be in the negative, the appeals will be dismissed and the suits decreed with costs in all the Courts."

Subsequently, at the hearing, the reference was amended by the addition of the following words:—"We also refer the decision of the special appeal to the Full Bench."

The following was the deed of wakfnama executed by Bikani Mia, dated the 4th Aughran 1281 :

exclusive right, ownership, and possession therein. I now think it advisable to lay down, according to our Mahomedan shara, certain rules in respect of the properties mentioned in the schedule given below, whereby my name and memory may be perpetuated for ever, my sons and daughters and their descendants may be decently maintained out of the income of those properties, and the properties may not suffer in consequence of disputes among my sons and daughters aforesaid or their descendants. Therefore, on the terms laid down in the following rules and paragraphs, I do hereby make a permanent wakf of the undermentioned properties in favour of my two sons, viz., Sriman Abdul Rahaman Mia and Sriman Abdul Sobhan Mia, my four daughters viz., Srimoti Moni Bibi, Srimoti Chuni Bibi, Srimoti Akkal Bibi, and Srimoti Abdar Bibi, and my wife Srimoti Panna Bibi, and after them the successive descendants of my said sons and daughters, and on their death, i.e., in the case of all my said sons and daughters and their descendants dying issueless, in favour of the poor, the indigent, and the beggars residing in the town of Dacca. Taking the said wakf properties out of my (personal) ownership and possession, I hold them in possession as mutwalli under the terms of this wakf. As long as I shall live I myself shall continue to be mutwalli, and as such shall do everything according to the terms of the said wakf. On my death my two sons Sriman Abdul Rahaman Mia and Sriman Abdul Sobhan Mia shall, as hereinafter provided, be appointed mutwallis in my place.

"Paragraph 1.—I or any one among my wife, sons and daughters and their successive descendants, viz., those in whose favour a permanent wakf of the aforesaid properties has been made, shall never be competent to possess or in any manner waste any portion of the wakf properties mentioned in the wakfnama. After my death, whoever may be the mutwalli shall, out of the net income or balance remaining after payment of the sudder revenue of the aforesaid properties and the collection charges, spend Rs. 50 annually in the name of Allah (i.e., for religious purposes) and pay Rs. 100 annually to my eldest son Sriman Abdul Rahaman Mia, Rs. 100 annually to my younger son Sriman Abdul Sobhan Mia, Rs. 50 annually to each of my said daughters, and Rs. 50 annually to my said wife. Beyond these they shall not be entitled to get or take a cowri. Whatever balance may remain after meeting the aforesaid expenses shall be added to the wakf funds as deposit money. And after the death of my said wife the sum of Rs. 50 payable to her shall in the above manner be deposited with the aforesaid funds. On the death of any one of my sons or daughters aforesaid the money payable to him or her shall be divided among his or her sons and daughters in the proportions laid down in the Mahomedan law of inheritance. But if [120] any such person die without leaving any son or daughter, son's son or any other descendant, then the amount payable to him or her shall be credited to the estate. None among those to whom the aforesaid allowances are granted shall be competent to transfer his or her allowance money by sale, hiba, or mortgage, that is, in any manner whatever. And the said allowance money shall not be attached or sold by auction by any Court of law on account of debts incurred by any one of them. The allowances have been fixed simply for the maintenance of the aforesaid persons and their successive descendants. The wakf properties shall not be sold by auction in execution of decree for anybody's debt; and if they are sold, such sale shall be null and void.

"Paragraph 2.—Whoever may at any time be the mutwalli for the management of the said wakf properties shall for the time being use his name as mutwalli on the Mufassal, Hazuri, and Court papers connected with those wakf properties; and after meeting out of the income of those properties the expenses mentioned above, he shall purchase some immovable property with the balance that may accumulate to the credit of the wakf. That is to say, that he may, if he thinks it profitable, grant kaimi, miras, or bimyadi settlement, or miras or putni lease, in respect of any of the wakf properties, on receipt of salami or other consideration, or sell off any of the said properties for a fair price, and then with the said price or consideration money and the balance in hand he shall either purchase some estate or obtain a putni or miras or any other such settlement, and shall include the newly acquired property under this wakf. But no mutwalli shall at any time be competent to waste or transfer without proper grounds any of the properties mentioned below. The mutwalli shall always try to increase the wakf property. The repairs of the houses included in the wakf estate mentioned below shall be made out of the income of the said estate. The mutwalli shall also be competent to part with any of the wakf properties on receiving another in exchange for it, if such exchange be considered profitable, and the property thus received in exchange shall be included under this wakf. The Sirkar Bahadur (Government) for public purposes any of these wakf properties (torn) by doing harm to the wakf estate the mutwalli (torn) smaller or improper (torn) shall not be competent to sell. Besides, in doing any of the acts mentioned in this paragraph, that is, in exchanging or selling off a wakf property or granting miras or any such settlement in respect thereof, the mutwalli must previously take the advice of Srijut Knaja Abdul Goni Saheb of Kumartoli, Srijut Babu Rao Lal Doss of Subjemahal, Srijut Bashiram Pal of Shutrapur, Srijut Haji Golam Houssain of Bankshall, and Srijut Serajuddin Ahmad of Mogaltoli. The mutwalli shall do nothing without the consent of these persons, but he shall be able to act on the advice of the majority among them.

[121] "Paragraph 3.—Every year the mutwalli for the time being shall in the name of God give away Rs. 50 (fifty rupees) in charity to the poor. One student must always be maintained, and in this the mutwalli shall never fail.

"Paragraph 4—My two sons who will be mutwallis after my death shall during their lifetime select an honest and competent person from among their own or my daughter's children and appoint him the future mutwalli with the powers specified above; and they shall be able to appoint two persons out of the said children as mutwallis. But none except some one or other among the children of the aforesaid persons shall be appointed mutwalli. If no trustworthy person be found among the male members of our family, then a female member of my family may be appointed mutwalli of this wakf by the said mutwallis. If my said two sons suddenly die without appointing a mutwalli—which Allah forbid—then such persons as may be selected by the majority of the members of my family shall be appointed mutwallis; but no outsider shall be appointed a mutwalli. The mutwalli appointed in the above manner shall be vested with the powers specified above; that is, he shall exercise the aforesaid powers in managing the affairs of the estate.

"Paragraph 5.—After my death the aforesaid mutwallis shall be competent to spend any amount of money they think proper for the sake of my salvation, and nobody shall be competent to raise any objection in respect thereof."

Then followed a schedule of Collectorate revenue-paying properties.

The judgments of the lower Courts sufficiently appear from the opinions of the Full Bench.

Mr. Hill, Mr. W. C. Bonnerice, Mr. Solaiman, Moulvie Mohamed Yusuf, Moulvie Serajul Islam, Syed Shamsul Huda and Baboo Harendra Narayan Mitter, appeared for the appellant.

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe), Baboo Lal Mohun Das and Mr. Abdul Rohman appeared for the respondents.

Mr. Hill.—The policy of the law from the earliest times has been to preserve to the native inhabitants of this country their own institutions and laws, which, being of divine origin, cannot be cut down or limited by importing alien and foreign principles; Preliminary Discourse to Hamilton's Hedaya, 4; Macnaghten's Principles and Precedents of Mahomedan Law, Preface to 2nd edition, 8-10; Morley's Digest, Introduction, 169, 170; Beng. Reg. IV of 1793, s. 15; Beng. Reg. VIII of 1795, s. 3; Act VI [122] of 1871, s. 24; Act XII of 1887, s. 37. As to the law of justice, equity, and good conscience applicable to Mahomedans, see Zohorooddeen Sirdar v. Baharoolleh Sircar (1). I contend that questions of wakf are questions of religious usages or institutions. The Acts 21 Geo. III, c. 70, ss. 17, 18; 37 Geo. III, c. 142, ss. 12, 13; 39 and 40 Geo. III, c. 79, s. 5; and 4 Geo. IV, c. 71, s. 9, apply to the Supreme Courts the laws of Mahomedans, and by s. 9, of the Act creating the High Courts their powers are the same as those of the Supreme Courts. See Letters Patent, 1862, ss. 18-20; Letters Patent, 1865, ss. 19-21.

The Mahomedan authorities are not at all available, and we have had specially translated portions of certain works. The works chiefly available are those of the Hanifia School. Wakf imports the tying up of property, the profits being applied for the benefit of mankind: See Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan Law, 2nd edition, 558; Macnaghten's Principles of Mahomedan Law, Pt. 1, 69; Hamilton's Hedaya, vol. II, 335. The object need not be for pious or charitable purposes only: Hamilton's Hedaya, vol. II, 334n., 336; Baillie's Digest, 2nd edition, 557n; but the ultimate destination must be for the poor according to Abu Yusuf: Hamilton's Hedaya, vol. II, 341; Baillie's Digest, 2nd edition, 582, 584, 601. Sadakah is a mere gift (see Baillie's Digest, 2nd edition, 554-556), while wakf creates a perpetual trust carrying with it the idea of a pious and religious act, and the trust goes to the poor in case of failure. But an appropriation for the rich alone is not lawful: Hamilton's Hedaya, vol. II, 358; Baillie's Digest, 2nd edition, 575, 593; and if there is an intention to exclude the poor, that might invalidate the wakf. [Translations of passages from the Durr-ul-Mukhtar and the Radd-ul-Mukhtar were then referred to.] The act of piety is to relinquish the property to God, but the produce may be applied to any objects the wakf desires to benefit. Nearness to God is the motive of appropriation: Baillie's Digest, 2nd edition, 559; but there is no speciality in favour of the poor. The note at p. 351 of Hamilton's Hedaya is incorrect. The idea of charity has no exact equivalent in the Mahomedan mind, but zukt resembles it. The doctrine of necessities is of modern growth, and has been imported into India, [123] but has no local force. Public policy is a fallacious rule to follow. The law and custom among Mahomedans cannot be judged from the standpoint of a priori notions, but the native writers should be looked to. The inconvenience and anomaly of engrafting the English law of perpetuities upon Mahomedan law would be very great, as the Mahomedan law has elaborate provisions of its own as to wills and trusts. Section 101 of the Succession Act has never been applied to Mahomedans. Cases like Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo (1) and the case of Hindus (see Kumara Asima Krishna Deb v. Kumara Kumara Krishna Deb (2)), are distinguishable on this ground. The intentions of one who has created a trust should not be frustrated. The duty of providing for the family is a religious obligation in itself: Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose (3), and even a zimmee may create a wakf: Baillie's Digest, 2nd edition, 560. A settlement upon descendants would be more meritorious than one upon the poor, nearness of object being one of the essentials: Baillie's Digest, 2nd edition, 559, 583. As to the respective authority of Abu Hanifa and his disciples, see Ameer Ali's Tagore Lectures, 1884, 18, 19; and for the divergence of opinion between the two disciples, see Hamilton's Hedaya, vol. II, 339, 349, 350. Abu Yusuf founds his opinion upon the practice of the Prophet himself: see pp. 350, 352, 355.

There is judicial authority for the opinion of Abu Yusuf in the case of Doe d. Jaune Beebee v. Abdollah Barber (4), and the practice and doctrine which has obtained here is that of Yusuf. See D'Ohsson's view in the note at p. 349 of Fulton, &c. There must be mentioned an object which will never become extinct, but any class or series of persons may be interposed. Hamilton's Hedaya, vol. II, 341. Macnaghten's Principles, 69, para. 4. Here the poor are expressly mentioned. Baillie's Digest, 2nd ed., 576, 586, 596, 599. No portion of the usufruct need be devoted contemporaneously with the gift to express nominees, and a class of the widest character may be interposed, 587. The extracts from the Radd-ul Mukhtar and the Dur-ul Mukhtar shows that a wakf on descendants for ever is valid. Where technical words are used they must be strictly adhered to. Where nasl is used the wakf [124] is generally for the descendants. The Fatawa-Alamgiri is practically translated in Baillie. The extract contains rules for the construction of deeds of settlement, and no express ultimate gift to the poor is mentioned. Perpetuity is of the essence of wakf. Family settlements are subject to the same rules as other wakfs. Extracts from the Fatawa Kazi Khan and the Fatawa Sirajjah were referred to. See Morleys' Digest, Introduction, 281, 285, 288, 291.

The Mahomedan law, whatever it is, should be applied. See Deedar Hossein v. Rane Zuhoor-oon-Nissa (5), Luckunchunder Seal v. Karoonamoney Dossee (6). The extent of the power of disposition must be regulated by Mahomedan law. See Sonatun Bysack v. Juggutsoondree Dossee (7), Ramdhone Ghose v. Annund Chunder Ghose (8), Kumara Asima Krishna Deb v. Kumara Kumara Krishna Deb (9) and Ganendra Mohan Tagore v. Upendra Mohan Tagore (10) were also referred to. Wakfs have been treated as illusory in some cases; see Delroos Bonoo Begum v. Ashgur Ally Khan (11), where the dedication was not intentional; but where the intention is clear [See Fatma Bebi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay (12)] a disposition which the law admits cannot be evasive of the law. Umjad Ally Khan v. Mohumdee Begum (13).

The cases in the Select Reports are not in point. [The following cases were then cited and commented on:—] Abdul Ganne Kasam v. Hussien Miya Rahimtula [1873] (1). The decisions in Jewun Doss Sahoo v. Shah Kubeer-ood-deen [1840] (2) and Kunecz Fatima v. Saheba Jan [1867] (3) do not support the Bombay case. In Khajah Hossein Ali v. Sharhzadee Hazara Begum [1869] (4) Kemp, J., and Markby, J., differed, and the observations of the latter Judge are obiter and are not supported by any writer on Mahomedan law. In Muzhurool Hug v. Puhraj Ditarey Mohapattur [1870] (5) the dicta of Kemp, J., are approved by the Privy Council; Dayal Chund Mullick v. Keramat Ali [1871] (6); Phate Saheb Bibi v. Damodar Premji [1879] (7); Fatma Bibi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay [1881] (8). The dicta of West, J., at p. 51, were held to be extra-judicial by the Privy Council. The case is a strong authority in my favour, and is followed in Amruttal Kalidas v. Shaik Hussien [1887] (9), the Mahomedan works of authority being recognised. In these cases there was an ultimate trust in favour of charity which was absent in the case of Nizamudin Gulam v. Abdul Gafur [1888] (10). In Pathukutti v. Avathalakutti [1888] (11) the conditions of a valid wakf are pointed out. In Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Hug [1881] (12) the term 'sadakah' is misapprehended. Fatima Bibee v. Ariff Ismailjee Bham [1881] (13) does not appear to have been fully argued upon the authorities. The case of Luckmiput Singh v. Amir Alum [1882] (14) supports my contention. In Jugatmoni Chowdhry v. Ramjini Bibee [1884] (15) the essentials of a valid appropriation are enumerated by Field, J., at p. 536.

In the Privy Council case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu [1889] (16) there was merely a direction to perform stated religious works according to custom, and no ultimate trust in favour of any pious or religious purpose. Their Lordships refrain from defining wakf or determining how far a gift to the family is illusory. Authorities were not cited to show that if the conditions of perpetuity and ultimate dedication are fulfilled the wakf is good. The question before the Full Bench is therefore still open for decision, and their Lordships' approval of Kemp, J.'s, views in Muzhurool Hug v. Puhraj Ditarey Mohapattur (5) is so far in my favour. Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak [1891] (17) carries the observations in the Privy Council case to an undue length, and the objects in that case were secular rather than religious. I rely on the recent case [126] of Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose (18), where the authorities are set out. The result of the decision is that the Bombay cases adopt the law as laid down in the Mahomedan text writers, whose authority must prevail, unless there is a clear contrary course of judicial decision. Restrictions, such as registration, may if necessary be imposed upon the power to create private wakfs.

Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf, on the same side:—The rule as to perpetuities has no application to the law of inheritance, wills, and gifts. The simple law of gift among Mahomedans is this, that the substance or ayn must be transferred to and rest in the donee, so that nothing remains in the donor's hands. In the case of wakf the essential difference is that the ayn is not disposed of but is tied up, so that while the profits go to the donee, the ayn remains in the hand of God. No question of perpetuity can therefore arise as to wakfs. The distinction, again, between gift (hiba) and sadakah is that whereas hiba is a gift without consideration and revocable, sadakah is a gift for consideration, i.e., the reward for merit in the world to come. Sadakah, therefore, cannot be revoked; sadakah used in connection with wakf means a gift for religious merit, the substance of the thing being tied up and the profits only given. See Hamilton's Hedaya, vol. III, p. 310, on sadakah or alms-deed; also the Aynee (an untranslated commentary), vol. II, p. 619. The charity involved in wakf is the same as the sawab or merit involved in sadakah. The motive power is the same sawab in the sight of God, and the English idea of charity is no element in the constitution of wakf. A confusion has arisen from the ambiguity of the word "object." Sawab or merit is that which impels a person to make wakf, and sawab is also the object he has in view, i.e., to attain kurbat or religious merit, so that he may find religious bliss in the other world. Further, the recipient or object of the gift must be capable of effectuating what the donor has in view, and the purpose in this world must be in keeping with the object, else the sawab or consideration is lost, and the wakf falls to the ground, as for instance where the wakif apostatizes. Then as regards the wakf of [127] Zimmes there must be sawab and koorbut having regard to the ideas as well of Zimmes as Mahomedans. If the law of perpetuities is to be applied to wakf the ideas of Zimmes, and not of Mahomedans, would be recognized. The foreign idea of charity corresponds to zukat. Four things are furaiz or obligatory,—prayers, fasting, going to Mecca, and giving zukat to those in need excluding the near relations. A Mahomedan must give a portion of his moveables in charity every year. Wakf again is one of the commendable things. To be rewarded in a superlative degree a man must perform acts which are not obligatory.

The policy of the Mahomedan law has been upheld in these Courts, and should not be defeated in the present case; Khujooroonissa v. Roushun Jehan (1). That law is clearly laid down in innumerable authorities, and is treated in the same way in every work on Mahomedan law. The sources of law are the Koran, traditions, the concurrence of the learned, and deductions from these three; and private wakfs to the wakf and his descendants are recognised in all of these from the earliest times. As to the divergence between Abu Hanifa and the disciples, the former says that wakf is not lazim or irrevocable, because the wakf can revoke at any time, and his heirs will take, but that wakf may be made irrevocable by a decree from the Kazi. The latter say that as soon as wakf is made, the ownership of the wakif ceases either by pronouncing the word (Abu Yusuf) or by appointing a mutwalli (Mahomed). Abu Hanifa never maintained that wakf was illegal, but merely that it would not prevent inheritance. Abu Yusuf lays down that wakf imports perpetuity, and the ultimate destination will never fail, as where the immediate objects fail it is for the poor, that is to say, where the objects are not perpetual, the poor will take. Mahomed says that the wakf is not good unless the object mentioned is perpetual. Abu Hanifa says wakf cannot be perpetual unless confirmed by the Kazi. Abu Yusuf's is the accepted view.

The practice of Mahomedans is in accordance with the principles laid down in the following authorities:—

Hamilton's Hedaya, vol. II, pp. 334-351; Fath-ul-Kadir (Lucknow ed.), pp. 836, 837, 841, 846, 847; Inayah (Calcutta ed.), [128] 570; Kifayah (Calcutta ed.), 890; Sharh-i-Vikayah, 271. Fatawa Alamgiri, vol. II, 493; Fatawa-Kazi-Khan, vol. IV, 196, 200. Mathew's translation of the Mishkat-el-Misabeh, vol. I, ch. V, pt. 2, 375, 453; Bailie's Digest (2nd ed.), 593.

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. J.T. Woodroffe), for the respondents:—The Court has to determine the law as found in the statute book and in previous decisions. The Mahomedan law is not to be applied to this case, and disquisitions of a religious, metaphysical, or philosophical character are out of place. One of the parties is a Hindu, and this is a mofussil appeal. I say justice, equity, and good conscience is the law applicable. [The following Bengal Regulations were referred to:—IV of 1793, s. 15; VIII of 1795, s. 3; II of 1798, s. 4; III of 1803, s. 16; VII of 1832, s. 9; also Act XXI of 1850; The Secretary of State v. The Administrator-General of Bengal (1); The Civil Courts Act (VI of 1871), s. 24; The Bengal, North-Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), s. 37.] The Mahomedan law is only the law so far as the laws of India have directed it to be observed: Sheik Kudratulla v. Mahini Mohan Shaha (2). The remarks of Peacock, C.J., at p. 169, are in point in this case. Although private wakfs are stated to have been matters of daily occurrence (see Ameer Ali's Tagore Law Lectures, 1884, 178), the history of decided cases shows that no instance such as this has been dealt with by the Courts till very recent times. The modern idea of wakf is founded upon purely family considerations to protect estates from being squandered or alienated (see the note to Doe dem. Jaun Beebee v. Abdollah Barber (3)). In 1879 the legal effect of the decisions rendered it advisable to bring in a law to rehabilitate private wakfs. Section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), though not applicable to Mahomedans, condemns such transactions. If this mode of tying up property had been recognized, we shall find repeated instances in the law reports. [PETHERAM, C.J.:—If you can show us a current of decisions culminating in the Privy Council case, we are bound to follow those decisions.] There must [129] have been a ground work and substratum of practice: Isherwood v. Oldknow (4).

This matter of private wakfs is an offspring of purely modern and secular considerations. I intend to lay every decided case before the Court to support this contention. The whole series of the Sudder Dewany and the select reports are terra incognita to the other side. [The following authorities were then referred to:—Moohummud Sadik v. Moohummud Ali [1798] (5), Hyaonnissa v. Mofukhir-ol-Islam [1805] (6), Meer Nusrut Ali v. Meer Casim Ali [1805] (7), Hyatee Khanum v. Mussamut Koolsoom Khanum [1807] (8), *Kulb Ali Hossein v. intention to substantially dedicate to charitable purposes. The instrument here is of the same nature (see p. 510), being for the aggrandisement of the family. The question left open is whether a perpetuity can be created. The case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak [1891] (1) is in point.

The conclusions which I draw from the reported cases are these. Their law is reserved to Mahomedans in matters of succession, inheritance, marriage, and caste. This is not a case of that kind. Then it is said that it is a matter of religious usage, the withdrawing property from all rules of law and impressing it with the attributes of the Divine being. But by retaining to Mahomedans their religious institutions the Legislature did not mean them to retain a special and separate law of private settlements. The Mahomedan law is a law of devices, and the practical outcome is the series of cases I have cited, which deal with religious wakfs proper and accentuate the distinction between legitimate wakfs and wakfs of this class. The inference from the cases is that the right to defeat creditors and to evade the law of inheritance and succession was not preserved to Mahomedans, that the learned lucubrations of Mahomedan casuists were never seriously regarded, and that these doctrines sloughed away, leaving only genuine developments. "What is religious is lawful, and what is lawful is religious," cannot be accepted as the principle. The power of life and death may be religious, but it is not lawful in the case of a husband, and the Mahomedan law books are full of principles which, though religious, could never be asserted in the Courts. As to the duty of European Judges, see The Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (2). We have to see what usages have been established in the Courts: Rajah Deedar Hossein v. Ranee Zuhoor-oon Nissa (3). From 1798 down to the closing of the Sudder Dewany Adawlat there were only three cases in which benefits of a private character were said to have been conferred upon a mutwalli. One case was not proved, and the other two [132] were denied the character of inalienability, the withdrawing of the land extra commercium. In the Supreme Court there is only one case which falls within the principle of the decision of the Privy Council. So far as this Court goes the decisions are uniform. The decisions in Kuneez Fatima v. Saheba Jan (4), Fatima Bibee v. Ariff Ismailjee Bham (5), Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Huq (6) and Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1) directly rule the present case. No case on this side of India has been shown of a family endowment with or without an ultimate bequest in favour of the poor. The answer is that a family settlement with a merely nominal remainder to the poor is an undisguised case of spes successionis. As to what will take a case out of the Mahomedan law, see Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (7), Sheikh Kudratulla v. Mahini Mohan Shaha (8), Bussanteram Marwary v. Kamaluddin Ahmed (9), Gobind Dayal v. Inayatullah (10), and I submit a perpetuity forbidden by the general municipal law is sufficient. The remarks of Colville, C.J., cited in Sonatun Bysack v. Juggutsoondree Dossee (11) at p. 76 of the report are applicable to a case of this kind. There is no ground why perpetuities under the guise of a family settlement should be lawful in the case of Mahomedans any more than in the case of Hindus. Sookhmoy Chunder Dass v. Monohurri Dasi (1). Perpetuities are condemned on general principles in Renaud v. Tourangeau (2) and Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo (3).

Mr. Hill was heard in reply.

The opinions of the Court (PETHERAM, C. J., PRINSEP, TREVELYAN, GHOSE, and AMEER ALI, JJ., were as follows :—

OPINIONS.

AMEER ALI, J.—The question raised in this reference is of such vital importance to the Mahomedans of India and so materially affects their law and religion, the enjoyment of which has been [133] guaranteed to them by the British Government, that I must state at some length the reasons that have compelled me to differ from my colleagues.

The facts of the case are as follow :—

One Bikani Mia, a Mahomedan inhabitant of Dacca, shortly before his departure in 1874 on a pilgrimage to Mecca, executed a wakfnama in respect of a considerable portion of his property and registered the document in accordance with the law.

The deed recites that the executant was in the full possession of his "sense and power of understanding," that he was not indebted to anybody, that the property to which it related was acquired by Bikani himself, and that he had an "exclusive right, ownership and possession therein."

The executant then goes on to say—

"I now think it advisable to lay down, according to our Mahomedan shara, certain rules in respect of the properties mentioned in the schedule given below, whereby my name and memory may be perpetuated for ever, my sons and daughters and their descendants may be decently maintained out of the income of those properties, and the properties may not suffer in consequence of disputes among my sons and daughters aforesaid or their descendants. Therefore, on the terms laid down in the following rules and paragraphs, I do hereby make a permanent wakf of the undermentioned properties in favour of my two sons, viz., Sriman Abdul Rahaman Mia and Sriman Abdul Sobhan Mia, my four daughters, viz., Srimoti Moni Bibi, Srimoti Chuni Bibi, Srimoti Akkal Bibi and Srimoti Adar Bibi and my wife Srimoti Panna Bibi, and after them the successive descendants of my said sons and daughters, and on their death, i.e., in the case of all my said sons and daughters, and their descendants dying issueless, in favour of the poor, the indigent and the beggars residing in the town of Dacca. Taking the said wakf properties out of my (personal) ownership and possession, I hold them in possession as mutwalli under the terms of this wakf. As long as I shall live I myself shall continue to be the mutwalli, and as such shall do everything according to the terms of the said wakf. On my death my two sons Sriman Abdul Rahaman Mia and Sriman Abdul Sobhan Mia shall, as hereinafter provided, be appointed mutwallis in my place."

Paragraph 1 runs thus :—

"I or any one among my wife sons and daughters and their successive descendants, viz., those in whose favour a permanent wakf of the aforesaid properties has been made, shall never be competent to possess or in any manner waste any portion of the wakf properties mentioned in the wakf-nama. [134] After my death whoever may be the mutwalli shall out of the net income or balance remaining after payment of the sudder revenue of the aforesaid properties and the collection charges, spend Rs. 50 annually in the name of Allah (i.e., for religious purposes), and pay Rs. 100 annually to my eldest son Sriman Abdul Rahaman Mia, Rs. 100 annually to my younger son Sriman Abdul Sobhan Mia, Rs. 50 annually to each of my said daughters, and Rs. 50 annually to my said wife. Beyond these they shall not be entitled to get or take a cowri; whatever balance may remain after meeting the aforesaid expenses shall be added to the wakf funds as deposit money. And after the death of my said wife the sum of Rs. 50 payable to her shall in the above manner be deposited with the aforesaid funds. On the death of any of my sons or daughters aforesaid, the money payable to him or her shall be divided among his or her sons and daughters in the proportions laid down in the Mahomedan law of inheritance. But if any such person die without leaving any son, daughter, son's son, or any other descendant, then the amount payable to him or her shall be credited to the estate."

The rest is not material for the purposes of the reference.

Paragraph 3 runs as follows:—

"Every year the mutwalli for the time being shall in the name of God give away Rs. 50 (fifty rupees) in charity to the poor. One student must always be maintained, and in this the mutwalli shall never fail."

In paragraph 4 he provides for the appointment of the mutwallis, and says that they (after his sons) one after another should be selected from among the members of his family, and that no outsider should be appointed to that office. I may here observe that under the Mussulman Law, the endower has the power to lay down any rules he likes as to the superintendence of his benefaction; and even without such a condition, the Kazi cannot appoint a stranger unless there is nobody competent or trustworthy in the wakif's family.

In paragraph 5 he provides as follows:—

"After my death the aforesaid mutwallis shall be competent to spend any amount of money they think proper for the sake of my salvation, and nobody shall be competent to raise any objection in respect thereof."

The general scheme of the document shows that upon the death of each son or daughter without issue, or on the extinction of any branch, the allowance payable to him or to her or to such branch would immediately become available for the general purposes mentioned in paragraph 5.

[185] Bikani returned from Mecca a few months after, and has, since his return, become largely indebted to various money-lenders of Dacca, who have obtained money decrees against him, and who now seek, in these suits, to attach and sell the properties covered by the wakfnama, on the allegation that the deed of wakf was illegal and was executed by Bikani with the object of defrauding his creditors.

The defence in the main is that the wakfnama was executed bona fide and duly registered, and that it is legal and binding according to the Mahomedan Law. It may be stated here in passing that the plaintiffs have only money-decrees against Bikani; and it does not appear that any portion of the property was hypothecated to any of them for his loan.

Two of the issues framed by the Subordinate Judge before whom the case came on for trial in the first instance were:—

"Fourth.—Was the wakf in question a merely colourable transaction in fraud of creditors, or a real bona fide and legally valid one?"

"Fifth.—Has the wakf been acted upon?"

It is necessary to set out verbatim what the Subordinate Judge says with respect to these two questions. He expresses himself as follows:—
“It does not appear from the evidence that at the time of making the wakf Bikani owed more than Rs. 2,000 to his creditors. Although the wakf estate contained the most valuable and important properties of Bikani, still it is clear from the evidence, which has not been contradicted, that he had at the time secular properties worth much more than Rs. 2,000. The properties were not only sufficient to clear his debts, but also to support himself and his family without any help from the wakf estate. I am therefore of opinion that Bikani did not create the wakf with the object of defrauding his creditors. There is no force in the argument that the deed might have been got up with the intention of defrauding future creditors, who might make advances to him in ignorance of the existence of that deed. Shortly after the execution of the deed Bikani went on a pilgrimage to Mecca, which in all probability he had in contemplation when making the settlement. It is moreover in evidence that he was then a very old man, of infirm health, and had very little hopes of returning home alive.

“The journey being a very distant one, it is but natural for a man of Bikani's age to entertain such apprehensions with regard to his existence. It seems to me, therefore, more probable that Bikani, before his departure for Mecca, wanted to make some provision for his children, and with that [136] object executed the deed of wakf, and that, to ensure perpetuity, certain pious acts were enjoined to be performed at such trifling expenses as every Mahomedan would do without making any kind of endowment: 8 Weekly Reporter, 313.”

From the above it is clear that in the Subordinate Judge's opinion the wakf was executed bona fide without any fraudulent intention. But he proceeded to add—

“The ultimate reversion to the poor and needy on failure of descendants is such a remote contingency that under the circumstances of the case to be detailed hereafter, I am not prepared to say that Bikani while making the wakf was at all actuated by a pious motive to render some benefit to the poor.”

Apparently, the Subordinate Judge decided upon the construction of the document that where the endower's descendants receive any portion of the income, the endowment does not constitute a valid wakf under the Mahomedan Law, although all the proceeds go ultimately to the general poor. In this view he made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The District Judge on appeal held that to all intents and purposes the deed in question was “practically a deed of family endowment,” but he added that there was “an endowment in præsenti of Rs. 50, and also an additional endowment for the support of a talib-ul-ilem,” and looking to the conduct of the appropriator after the deed had been executed, he thought that that portion of the deed had been practically acted upon, and was intended to be carried out from the commencement.

He accordingly upheld the deed so far, saying—

“I think the appellant is fairly entitled to have released from attachment a portion of the property of which the assets would be about Rs. 75 per year, i.e., Rs. 50 for religious purposes and Rs. 25 for the support of a student, who, I may here observe, has always been maintained by the appellant, if not from the date of the wakfnama, still for a very considerable period. The decree of the Subordinate Judge will therefore be modified, and there will be declared a valid charge on the property of the wakf to the extent of Rs. 75 per annum."

The defendant appealed specially to this Court, and the Division Bench before whom the case came on for hearing, finding the principles of Mahomedan Law laid down in Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1) in conflict with those expressed in [137] Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose (2), referred the following question to the Full Bench, "whether the disposition of the grantor's property was a valid wakf of the property dealt with by the deed."

The case has been elaborately argued on both sides. Mr. Hill for the appellants contended that under the Mahomedan Law the wakf was valid. The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. Woodroffe) argued that "the law to be applied in this case is not the Mahomedan Law." He contended that the endowments constituting the members of the endower's family as the recipients of the charity mentioned in Mahomedan Law-books are "only the learned lucubrations of the Mahomedan casuists, and never got beyond their studies." He cited a number of cases from the commencement of the Sudder Court to the present day to show that no case of this kind ever came into Court until the year 1881; and further contended that the Courts have recognised such wakfs only as are for purely charitable and religious purposes in the restricted sense in which those words are understood in English Courts of Justice.

The first question, therefore, which one has to consider is whether the disposition in question is to be discussed upon the basis of the Mahomedan Law, or of any other system of law.

From the year 1798 downwards the Courts of Justice have uniformly applied the Mussulman Law to the determination of questions affecting the validity of dispositions made by Mahomedans. In the case of Jewun Doss Sahoo v. Shah Kubeeroodeen Ahmed (3) the defendant was a Hindu, and the question was whether the property which formed the subject-matter of the suit was wakf or not. Their Lordships in the Privy Council decided the case on the basis of the Mahomedan Law. And every case before and since has proceeded upon the same principle. Whilst on this point, I would refer to the words of Lvinge and Steer, J.J., in Zohorooddeen Sircar v. Baharoollah Sircar (4).

Apart, therefore, from the question whether such a wakf is a religious institution or not, it seems to me it would be contrary, not only to the principles of "justice, equity, and good [138] conscience," which we have to administer in these Courts, but also to "immemorial and recognised practice,"—to apply to the decision of the present case any principle other than that of the Mahomedan Law.

The next question is, what is the Mahomedan Law on the subject? Mr. Woodroffe refused to refer to any work on Mahomedan Law; he said that they were "the mere lucubrations of casuists," and he took his stand upon the decided cases. This certainly does not seem to be a correct position, for it would hardly be right to pretend to decide a case according to Mahomedan Law, and yet wholly to ignore the works in which that law is to be found. From the year 1798 to 1884, we find not only translations of Mahomedan Law works cited, but original authorities quoted at the Bar and referred to by the Bench. In the case of Khajah Hossein Ali v. Shahzadee Hazara Begum (1), Kemp, J., as well as Peacock, C.J., on appeal, referred to and relied upon the Fatawa Alamgiri; and in the case of Mullick Abdool Guffoor v. Muleka (2), Garth, C.J., referred to the same work and the Durr-ul-Mukhtar.

Mr. Morley points out in his Digest (Vol. I, Introduction, page cccxvii) the sources from which the Mahomedan Law is derived. He shows that the Mussulman Law is founded (1) on the Koran; (2) on the precepts of the Prophet; and (3) on the decisions of the leading disciples. The direct precepts and practice of the Prophet form part, so to speak, of the Statutory Law of Islam, being regarded as supplementary of the divine ordinances in the Koran. Mr. Morley also repeatedly mentions how closely connected religion and law are among the Mahomedans, and how impossible it is to dissociate the one from the other.

In page clxxxiii he says:

"The laws of the Hindus and Mahomedans are part and parcel of their religion and believed by them to be of divine revelation."

And in another place (page clxxxvi) he adds:

"In considering the propriety of altering or abrogating the Hindu or Mahomedan Laws, all preconceived notions of the relative excellence of the English and native systems of jurisprudence should be taken as secondary [139] considerations. Nor should it be called in question whether such systems are in themselves good or bad, for it should never be forgotten. . . that they are an integral part of the faith of that people, and that though we may not be bound by absolute treaty, we have virtually pledged ourselves to preserve them by repeated proclamations and enactments."

The institution of wakfs, in which the endower's family and descendants are the immediate recipients of the benefaction, owes its origin to the direct ordinances of the Prophet. Not only did he declare that a provision for one's family was the best of almsgiving, but he encouraged members of his household and his companions to create such wakfs, and himself set the example by consecrating certain lands at Khaibar. In dealing with the Mussulman Law, the meaning attached by Mussulmans to the words "charitable purposes" has been, unfortunately, often lost sight of. Charity has been construed to mean "charity to the poor," irrespective of the endower and his descendants; piety and religion to mean such acts as would, in practical Europe, be regarded as pious or religious. This is not the Mussulman Law, which will be best explained by the following passages from the Mishkat,* showing what the Prophet considered "piety and charity" to mean:—

"The Apostle of God said, 'When a Mussulman bestows on his family and kindred, for the intention of rewards, it becomes alms, although he has not given to the poor, but to his family and children.' " "The Apostle of God said, 'There is one Dinar which you have bestowed in the road of God, and another in freeing a slave, and another in alms to the poor, and another given to your family and children; that is the greatest Dinar in point of reward which you gave to your family,' " "The Apostle of God said, 'The most excellent Dinar which man bestows is that which he bestows upon his own family; and a Dinar spent upon quadrupeds, in the road of God, which is combating for the faith, and a Dinar which a man bestows upon his friends, in the road of God.' " Omm Salma says, 'I said to the Prophet, is there any good tidings for me of rewards, for my bestowing on the sons of Aba Salma? His sons are no otherwise than mine.' " The Prophet said, 'Then give to them, and for you are the rewards of what you bestow upon them.' "

" The Apostle of God said, 'Giving alms to the poor has the reward of one alms, but that given to kindred has two rewards; one the reward of alms, the other the reward of relationship.' "

[140] These precepts are also given by Kazi Khan in his Decisions known as the Fatawa Kazi Khan, and by Imam Zailye in substantially the same terms as in the Fath-ul-Kadir, and are considered as binding on Mahomedans.

In Muslim and Bokhari (see Morley's Digest, Introduction, pages ccliii and ccliv) the precepts of the Prophet are given in detail. I shall quote here only two:—

" The Prophet of God declared that a pious offering to one's family [to provide against their getting into want] is more pious than giving alms to beggars. The most excellent of Sadakah is that which a man bestows upon his family."

" To give money to free a slave, to give alms to the poor, to give to your children and kindred are all Sadakah."

It is unnecessary to multiply these quotations. A reference to any book on Mahomedan religion or law will show that the words "charitable purposes" are not used in Mussalman Law in the restricted sense in which it has been attempted to use them in the English Courts of Justice.

(*) "He [Arkam] had a house close to Safa. This was the house dwelt in by the Prophet, peace and safety be unto him, at the time of the promulgation of Islam, and it was in this house that he asked people to embrace Islam. A large number of people embraced Islam in this house, of whom Omar Ibn-ul-Khattab was one, and the house was therefore called the house of Islam. Arkam dedicated the said house to his child [meaning children], and the deed of wakf was as follows:—

"In the name of God the most Merciful. This relates to how Arkam disposed of the usufruct of his property which lies close to Safa, that is to say, he has consecrated it in charity to his child [meaning children], together with the place where it lies, viz, its environs, so that it may neither be sold nor inherited."

"This was witnessed by Hisham, son of Aas, and by the slave of Hisham, son of Aas. This house all along continued to be a permanent Sadikah (a thing given in charity), his descendants living in it, letting it out on hire, and they alone appropriating its proceeds. No one raised any objection."

As regards the early wakfs, the Fath-ul-Kadir gives numerous examples of them, and as I have given the passage in extenso in the case of Meer Mahomed Israil Khan (1) I will not repeat it here. Imam Zailye corroborates and supports the statements contained in the Fath-ul-Kadir, and gives a copy of the deed of Arkam (an immediate disciple of the Prophet), by which he dedicated his house in charity upon his children without any reference to the poor. (*)

In the earliest collection of decisions called the Fatawa Baramika (those delivered by Imam Abu Yusuf, who was the Chief Judge of Bagdad under the Caliph Harun-ul-Rashid). it is laid [141] down that a wakf is lawful in favour of any object, and will, after its extinction, inure in favour of the poor,—the ultimate beneficiaries of all benefactions.

The next collection of decisions now extant in order of date is the Fatawa Hawi, quoted in the Fatawa Alamgiri as “the holy Hawi.” Its author Kazi Jamaluddin Ahmed, who died in A. H. 600, was a celebrated lawyer and Kazi of Ghazni (in Afghanistan). In it we find the following rule:—

“If a man makes a wakf of a piece of land or of an orchard, on condition that whenever he should be in want of the produce thereof, he should have it; the wakf will be valid according to the said condition. If he reserves for himself the whole of the produce of the wakf property, or makes himself mutwalli, it will be valid according to istihsan; and this also would be the case when a man makes a wakf on the condition that he should eat out of it, and feed others with it, during his lifetime, and, upon his death, his child shall have the same privileges, and such will be the case with his child's child also, for ever, so long as his posterity continues, who would eat out of it, and feed others with it: the wakf will be valid with these conditions. The whole of the above is what Abu Yusuf says, and Fatwas are given in accordance with the same.”

Of the Fatawa of Kazi Khan, who lived about the same time as the author of the Hawi, Morley speaks thus:—

“The Fatawa Kazi Khan, or collection of decisions of the Iman Fakhr-ad-Din Hasan Ben Mansur al-Uzjandi al-Farghani, commonly called Kazi Khan, who died in A. H. 592 (A.D. 1195), is a work held in the highest estimation in India, and indeed is received in the Courts as of equal authority with the Hidaya of Burhan-ad-din Ali, with whom Kazi Khan was a contemporary: it is replete with cases of common occurrence, and is therefore of great practical utility, the more especially as many of the decisions are illustrated by the proofs and reasoning on which they are founded.”

In the Fatawa Kazi Khan, in the chapter “on the wakf of a man on himself, his children, his kindred, and his neighbours,” the rule is thus stated:—

“And Khassaf (*) has laid down that when a man makes a wakf in these terms, this, my land, is a Sadakah-mowkoofa or mowkoofa, and its produce will be for me so long as I live, and after me for my children and children's children and their descendants in perpetuity so long as my posterity exists, and on their extinction for the poor, it is lawful.”

[142] The authority of Kazi Khan can hardly be disputed, and his decisions have been frequently quoted in the Sudder and Supreme Courts, e.g., see Doe d. Jaun Beebee v. Abdollah Barber (1). In the Kiniat-ul-munia (A.C. 1259) (see Morley's Digest, Introduction, page cclxxxvi) the same principle is laid down.

In the Zakihrat-ul-Fatawa (see Morley's Digest, Introduction, page cclxxxv), a collection of decisions prepared about the end of the thirteenth century, and frequently referred to by the Law Officers of the Sudder Court, there is the following:—

"It is laid down in the book Ajnas by Natifi (*) that if a man makes a wakf, and lays down in it with respect to himself that he should, during his lifetime, eat out of it, and feed those whom he likes; that after him it should go to his child, his child's child and to his posterity for ever, so long as it may continue, and that upon its becoming extinct it should go to the poor; this would be valid according to Abu Yusuf, may the mercy of God be on him, and it will not be a disposition in the nature of a will in favour of his child, the child eating out of a property belonging to God, the most High. Do you not see that when a man makes a wakf in favour of his children and their children so long as their posterity may continue and gives it afterwards to the poor, it is valid. Now this case is just like it."

In the Khazanat-ul-Muftun, an important collection of decisions of the year 1339 frequently referred to by the Law Officers in this country (see Macnaghten's Principles and Precedents of Mahomedan Law, pages 332, 342, &c.), the Fatwa is given thus:—

"If any one says 'I make a wakf of this land of mine in favour of my child and afterwards in favour of the poor,' the income thereof would go to his child and his child's child till they be dead and none of them be alive, and even if the third generation be forthcoming, the income would go to the poor, and not to the third generation. If he says: 'In favour of my child, my child's child, and the child of my child's child,' making mention of three generations, the income would be spent by his descendants for ever, so long as his posterity continues and not by the poor till any of his descendants be alive, be he of a degree howsoever low."

In the Fatawa Durr-ul-Mukhtar (1660), which, as I have already pointed out, is a great authority in [this country, the same principle is laid down:—

"If one should declare the income of it [i.e., the wakf property] to be for [i.e., receivable by] himself during his lifetime—and thereafter [i.e., then [143] for his children, and then for his children's children], it is lawful according to the Second [Iman Abu Yusuf], and the Fatwa is in accordance with it. And if he should add (thereto) a third generation, it would include his Nasl (posterity) in general."

The Radd-ul-Mukhtar (a commentary on the Durr-ul-Mukhtar by Moulana Mohammed Amin, written about the end of the 17th century and quoted in this country as the Shami), commenting on the above passage, "if a person fixes the usufruct for himself during his lifetime and thereafter and thereafter, it will be lawful according to the Second [Abu Yusuf], and on this is the Fatwa," says as follows:—

"It is lawful to reserve the produce of a wakf for one's self. According to Abu Yusuf, the words (thereafter and thereafter) which the wakif mentions has no connection with the present discussion. For example, if a person makes a wakf on himself and thereafter on his children, and thereafter on their children, there is no difference as to the validity of the wakf on such children; whatever difference there is, refers to the reservation by the wakif of the whole of the produce for himself during life, but none as to the lawfulness of the dedication in favour of the wakif's children."

In the Majmaa-ul-Anhar, another collection of decisions compiled towards the end of the last century, it is laid down: "There is absolutely no difference between any lawyers about the validity of wakfs in favour of one's awlad (children or descendants)."

The same principle is laid down in the Fatawa-al-Ankirawi of which Mr. Morley speaks as follows:—

"The Fatawa-al-Ankirawi, by the Shaikh-ul-Islam Muhammad Benal-Hussain, who died in A. H. 1098 (A. D. 1686), is according to the doctrine of Abu Hanifa, and is a work of great authority."

The Fath-ul-Kadir, a work of the highest authority, frequently quoted by the Law Officers (1), by Kamal-ud-din Mohammed-as-Siwasi, a lawyer of Irak, who died in 1456, expressly enunciates the validity of such wakfs.

In page 858 of the printed copy there is a passage which is worthy of note:—

"And when any one among the recipients of the benefaction dies, and the wakif has made no mention of what would become of his share (in the usufruct) upon his decease, in that case the usufruct will be divided among the [wakifs] surviving children every year, and will be given to [144] both the affluent and the indigent among them, unless he has provided that the wakf is for the needy of his children] It must be known [literally, known] that when he [the wakif] mentions [in the wakf] his children and kindred, the wakf is valid for the affluent [and indigent] among them, unless he has specified that it is for the needy of them alone, as I have already mentioned; but if it is for others than they, etc."

The Bahar-ur-Raik (2) (1562), a work of great authority in this country, states that "there is absolutely no difference of opinion regarding wakfs in favour of descendants."

But of all the works of Mahomedan Law which possess an interest for those who are charged with the administration of justice in this country, the most important is the great Code which was compiled in India, in the reign of Aurungzeb Alamgir, by Indian Judges and Muftis, barely a hundred years before the establishment of British rule. Of the Fatawa Alamgiri, Mr. Morley, writing in 1850, speaks as follows:—

"Of the collections of decisions now known in India, none is so constantly referred to, or so highly esteemed, as the Fatwa-al-Alamgiri; and although, as has been stated, the Fatawa Kazi Khan is reckoned to have an equal authority with the Hidaya, it is neither so generally used, nor so publicly diffused, as the Fatawa-al-Alamgiri. The latter work from its comprehensive nature is applicable in almost every case that arises, involving points of Hanafi Law and is on that account produced and quoted as an authority, almost every day, in the Courts in India. The Fatawa-al-Alamgiri was commenced in the year of the Hijrah 1067 (A. D. 1656), by order of the Emperor Aurungzeb Alamgir, by whose name the collection is now designated."

This code has been cited and followed not only in the old Sudder and Supreme Courts, but also in the High Court of Calcutta. As I have already mentioned, Kemp, J. decided the case of Khajah Flossein Ali v. Shahazadee Hazara Begum (3) upon the law laid down in that work, and in Mullick Abdool Guffoor v. Muleka (4), Garth, C.J. referred to it frequently. In it the subject of wakf on one's self and on one's children and posterity is treated in two aspects. In s. II, ch. III, Vol. II, p. 471, Calcutta Edition (Baillie's Digest, Second Edition, page 576), the recognized law as to the validity of wakfs [145] in favour of one's self and one's children and descendants is discussed in detail. In chap. IV, p. 495 (Baillie's Digest, Second Edition, p. 596), relating to conditions in wakfs, the subject is dealt with by way of reservations or conditions. In other words, decisions are quoted to show that a man may make a wakf either directly constituting himself and his descendants the recipients of the benefaction with an ultimate reserve for the poor; or may make a wakf in general terms, or expressly in favour of the poor, and reserve the usufruct for himself and his family so long as they exist. The dedication is valid in both cases. A cursory study of Baillie's Translation would show what is laid down in the Alamgiri, viz., that there is absolutely no question about the validity of a wakf in which one's descendants are the recipients of the benefaction; and further, that the view expressed by Mahomed, the disciple of Abu Hanifa, in accordance with Shiah notions, that the endower could not reserve any benefit for himself, was never followed, and that decisions have always been in accordance with the rule laid down by Abu Yusuf.

(1) See Fulton 345.

(2) See 1 Sel. Rep. (18) = 6 I. D (O.S.) 17.

(4) 10 C. 1112.

The Fatwa Alamgiri was substantially the Mussulman Code of India and the law derived from it, or from authorities quoted in it, has been recognised and given effect to by the Courts of Justice ever since the Establishment of the British power in this country.

From the promulgation of Islam up to the present day there has been an absolute consensus of opinion regarding the validity of wakfs on one's children, kindred and neighbours. Practical lawyers, experienced judges, high officers of every sect and school under Mussulman sovereigns are all in unison on this point. There are minor differences, viz., whether a wakf can be created for one's self, whether the unfailing object should be designated, whether the property should be partitioned or not, whether consignment is necessary or not; but so far as the validity of a wakf constituting one's family or children the recipients of the benefaction, in whole or in part, is concerned, there is absolutely no difference. A wakf is a permanent benefaction for the good of God's creatures: the wakif may bestow the usufruct, but not the property, upon whomsoever he chooses and in whatever manner he likes, only it must endure for ever. If he bestows the usufruct in the first instance upon those whose maintenance is obligatory on him, or if he gives it to his descendants so long as [146] they exist to prevent their falling into indigence, it is a pious act,—more pious, according to the Prophet, than giving to the general body of the poor. He laid down that one's family and descendants are fitting objects of charity, and that to bestow on them and to provide for their future subsistence is more pious and obtains greater "reward" than to bestow on the indigent stranger. And this is insisted upon so strongly that when a wakf is made for the indigent or poor generally, the proceeds of the endowment is applied to relieve the wants of the endower's children and descendants and kindred in the first place (see Baillie's Dig., 2nd Ed., p. 593). When a wakf is created constituting the family or descendants of the wakf the recipients of the charity so long as they exist, the poor are expressly or impliedly brought in not for the purpose of making the wakf charitable (for the support of the family and descendants is a part and parcel of the charitable purpose for which the dedication is made), but simply to impart permanency to the endowment. When the wakf's descendants fail, it must come to the poor. So it is an enduring benefaction—an act of ibadat or worship, to use the language of the Jawahir-ul-Kalam,—an act by which kurbat or "nearness" is obtained to the Deity, according to the Bahr-ur-Raik.

Mr. Woodroffe contended that, as in none of the Sudder Court cases was there any question relating to wakfs in which the family was the recipient of the benefaction, therefore such wakfs must be recent invention. I cannot accept this as correct. I have already pointed out that from the lifetime of the Prophet down to the introduction of British rule in this country such wakfs were never doubted, and if we turn to pages 337 to 342 of Macnaghten's Principles and Precedents of Mahomedan Law, we find fatwas of the Law Officers given in proceedings before the Court dealing with the distribution of the income among the descendants of the grantees, and nobody seems to have dreamt of raising any objection to the validity of wakfs for the maintenance of the endowers' descendants. The value of these precedents is shown by the fact that they were acted upon in the old Sudder Court itself [see Wasia Ali Khan v. Government (1)].

[147] One other remark is necessary on this point. The grants referred to in Macnaghten's Precedents were not of a posthumous character. Every one who knows anything of Indian Mahomedan life must be aware how shrines have sprung up. A holy personage, a dervish, a sufi, comes and settles in a particular place, he becomes the spiritual guide (the Pir) of the people of the neighbourhood. Celibacy being discountenanced by the precepts of Mahomedanism, these men are always married and have families. Grants are made to them for their own support and the support of their families. During his life time his place of abode is called either a takia or an asthana; after his death the place where he is buried becomes a dargah or shrine. His descendants take not only the profits of the lands granted to them, but also the offerings made by his disciples at his shrine.

Again, in considering the absence of cases in the Select Reports bearing on the present question, two facts must be borne in mind, (1) that the Select Reports contain only selected cases, and (2) that from the year 1765 to 1864 the Mahomedan Law Officers were in existence. Though deprived of their judicial functions in 1793 they continued to be the expounders of the Mahomedan Law. From 1773 to 1864 the registration of documents was in the hands of the Kazis; but they were conveyancers as well, and they did the work not for Mahomedans only. The Mahomedan Law Officers were the real adjudicators of questions of Mahomedan Law. In the majority of cases they decided the disputes without the parties having recourse to the Courts of the Company with its interminable delays and complications,—its plaints, its answers, its replications and rejoinders. In case of wakfs for the support of the wakif's family, where the rules regarding the application of the income of the estate and the succession to the mutwaliiship were laid down in precise terms, there was hardly much room for dispute; and when any dispute arose they were settled by the Fatwa of the Mufti or the Kazi out of Court. So long as the Law Officers remained and until 1864, only two classes of cases, speaking in general terms, came before the Courts: one relating to the nature of grants made to individuals by Mahomedan Sovereigns and Chieftains under the designation of madad-mash or Inam Altamagha (maintenance grants), and the [148] other relating to questions of succession to the office of mutwali in certain public institutions of religious character. It is absurd to suppose that though their law and their religion recognized in explicit terms the lawfulness of wakfs constituting one's children and descendants as the immediate recipients of the benefaction, though the Mahomedan Code of India, the Fatawa Alamgiri contained minute regulations concerning the same, there existed no such institution among the Mussulmans, and that they never availed themselves of the provisions of the law to create such wakfs.

Coming now to the cases, in Moohummud Sadik v. Moohummud Ail (1) [1798] the question was whether the son of an executor was entitled to remove a mutwalli appointed by the latter and that question gave rise to another subsidiary one, viz., whether the mutwalli, in the absence of any special provision, was entitled to bequeath the trust by will. In delivering their Fatwa the Mustis prefaced it with the definition of a wakf as given by Abu Yusuf and Mahomed:—"That wakf, according to the opinions of Yusuf and Mahomed (which on this point are adopted as law), implies the relinquishing the proprietary right in any article of property, such as lands, tenements, and the rest; and consecrating it in such manner to the service of God that it may be, of benefit to men: provided always that the thing appropriated be, at the time of appropriation, the property of the appropriator, as is specifically stated in the Bahr-ur-Raik."

I am unable to accept the suggestion made by the learned counsel for the respondents, that this Fatwa shows that a wakf must, from its inception, be for indigent strangers. The definition is taken from the Bahr-ur-Raik, and I have already shown from that work that a wakf on one's descendants is valid without any difference.

In the case of Hya-on-nissa v. Mofukhir-ol-Islam (2), the only question before the Court related to the right of succession to the office of Sujjadanashin of a religious establishment, and as it appeared that the succession was confined, under the royal grant, to the lineal descendants of the grantee, it was held in accordance with the Fatwa of the Law Officers that the respondent [149] was entitled to the office, Hya-on-nissa, though a lineal descendant, being disqualified by her sex from officiating as a Sujjadanashin.

In the case of Hyatee Khanum v. Koolsoom Khanum (3) the sole question was whether a wakf of an undivided share of a certain property was valid or not under the Mussulman Law. One Mohammed Taki being in possession of certain lands appropriated them to the endowment of a mosque at Rungpur and executed a deed to the plaintiff, his wife, entitled Tumlik-o-towliatnamah to the following effect:—

"I being in possession of Mouzabs Kubdee, etc. as sole proprietor hereby endow a mosque with them, and confer the trusteeship on my wife, Hyatee Khanum, to defray with their profits the charges of the establishment. Of the surplus which may remain after defraying these charges, the trustee shall reserve to herself 9½ annas; and the remainder be shared by my other wives. The trustee shall appoint all officers, and may bequeath the trusteeship to whom she pleases. If she name nobody to succeed to it, it shall devolve after her death on any worthy son or grandson of mine, excepting Ali Nuki, whom I debar and disinherit."

The wakf was, in the first instance, in favour of a family mosque and for the support of the endower's two wives. It appeared that Mohammed Taki was entitled only to a fractional share of the lands, and the Law officers, in accordance with the rule of Abu Yusuf and differing from Mohamed, held that the wakf or endowment took effect as regarded Mohammed Taki's share, and the case was decided accordingly. In the opinion of the Law Officers (as given in the report) occurs the following expression: "the deed by which the estate was assigned in trust for pious uses by Mohammed Taki is valid." Mr. Woodroffe based a somewhat strong argument upon these words. He contended that the use of the word "pious" in connection with a mosque showed that a wakf for such purposes only could be regarded as pious. I have examined the original record in this case, and I find that there is no such word as pious in the Fatwa at all. The words are "Mohammed Taki having made a wakf under (tahat) a mosque and Imambara and given its towliat to Hyatee Khanum, appellant, effect should be given to it."

[150] In the case of Kulb Ali Hoosein v. Syf Ali(1) [1914] the question was as to the meaning of a madad mash tenure, viz., whether it was an absolute grant to the donee or by way of a wakf. The contested lands had been granted to one Durwesh Hossain, ancestor of the defendant, "for the support of religious mendicants and students and the repairs of mosques and other edifices," and the superintendence was always to be in the hands of Durwesh Hossain and his descendants. The Court, acting under the Fatwa of its Law Officers, held that though the term wakf was not used in the grant, yet having regard to the nature of the objects the grant did not give Durwesh Hossain or his heirs the power of alienation. In their Fatwa (as given in the report) the Law Officers stated that—

"The appropriation of land or other property to pious and charitable purposes is sufficient to constitute wakf without the express use of that term in the grant."

That case has no bearing on the present question. There is not a word in the judgment or in the Fatwa to warrant the inference that, besides the objects mentioned in the document of grant to Durwesh Hossain, a wakf may not be created for any other object. I may add that the original record of this case is missing, and have, therefore, been unable to verify the above passage.

In the case of Qadria Kubeeroodeen Ahmud (2) [1824] there was exactly the same question. A grant had been made by the Emperor Alamgir to a saintly person of the name of Shah Kubeer Durwesh who had established a khankah. One of the descendants, Shah Shumsodeen, alienated portions of the property, partly in favour of Mussumat Qadira, and partly in favour of one Jewan Doss Sahoo. Upon Shumsodeen's death, Kubeeroodeen was appointed Sujjada-nashin and, as it was a royal grant, his appointment was confirmed by Government. He thereupon sued Qadira and Jewan Doss Sahoo in two separate suits for the recovery of the properties conveyed to them respectively by Shumsodeen. The case of Qadira came up to the Sudder Court, and was decided in August, 1824. The case of Jewan Doss Sahoo went up to the Privy Council, and was decided in December, 1840. [151] In both cases it was held that, though the term wakf was not used in the grant, yet, having regard to the general purpose for which it was made, the royal intention was that it should be a perpetual and inalienable property in the nature of a wakf.

(2) 3 Sel. Rep. 407 (O) ; 543 (N) = 6 I. D. (O. S.) 1079.

In the case of Abul Hasan v. Haji Mohammad Masih Karbalai (1) [1831], the sole question was whether a verbal endowment of a cemetery corroborated by circumstances was valid or not. It was held to be valid, and the endower was declared incompetent to alienate it.

In the case of Muhammad Kasim v. Muhammad Alum (2) [1831], the only question was whether, upon a division of joint property among several brothers, a piece of property acquired by one of them exclusively and dedicated by him could form the subject of partition. There was no other question in the case. But it will be observed that the dedication was to a Pir. A Pir (see Herklot's Qanoon-i-Islam, p. 282) is a saintly individual who teaches his disciples (murids) religious truths. As I have said before, they all marry and have families. So a dedication to a Pir, called a Pirot-tur grant, is a wakf for the support of the Pir and his family, and after them for the poor generally.

In the case of Wasik Ali Khan v. Government (3) [1831], the only question involved was whether a curator or mutwalli could be removed by the judge or the ruling power "if he be suspected or if it be for the good of the trust."

The case of Imam Bukh v. Bibi Shahu (4) (1835) has no bearing on the question I am discussing. In that case the point at issue was whether certain lands appertaining to a dargah were heritable or alienable, and whether the respondent, a female, could hold the office of Sujjada-nashin. The Sudder Court decided the latter point against the lady on the authority of a case given in p. 343 of Macnaghten's Principles and Precedents.

The next reported case in order of date is that of Doe d. Jaun Beebee v. Abdollah Barber (5) [1838]. In that case the ultimate benefit was not given to the poor in express terms. The lady dedicated the property in general terms as is customary among [152] Mussalmans. In the first paragraph she provided that after paying the revenue and taxes she should appropriate as much of the produce as was required for her own use, and the remainder to "hereditary and charitable purposes." She provided further that her several relatives should receive their maintenance as heretofore; that she should have the power of increasing or decreasing the number of incumbents; and the repairs of the mosque, etc., and other expenses connected therewith in Ramzan and the Eed should be defrayed from the produce. By paragraph 2 she constituted herself the mutwalli during her life-time; after her death, her daughter's son Abdollah was to be the mutwalli, and after him some one among her relations most deserving of the office; and she declared that the property was to be for ever inalienable.

It will be seen that the usufruct was, after paying the revenue to be appropriated to the endower's own use and towards the maintenance of the members of her family. The amounts disburseable for the repairs of the mosque and for the performances of the festivals were postponed until after the maintenance of the family. But neither the decision of the Judges nor the opinion of the Law Officers turns upon this provision, and nobody said that the provision for the maintenance of the family invalidated the wakf. It has been argued at the bar that the wakf was for the support of specific individuals then in existence, but a careful study of the document shows that that notion is not well founded. The word "hereditary" in the first paragraph, the power of increasing the number of the persons receiving maintenance, the appointment of mutwallis one after another for the purpose of carrying out the directions in the wakfnama, coupled with the answer of the Law Officers to the third question, all show that the provision for maintenance did not refer to "specific individuals then existing," but to the endower's descendants at large. It was never attempted to be argued in that case that the wakf was bad, because it was wholly or mainly for support of the endower's family, or because it was not wholly, or mainly, or substantially for a mosque or for the poor. It was impugned on the only ground open under the Mahomedan law that the wakif had reserved the usufruct for herself. And the case was decided on the Fatwa of the Law Officers founded on well-known [153] authorities, following the rule laid down by Abu Yusuf, who has always been the Hanafi guide in these questions, and who has been so recognised as such by the Sudder Court itself.

The case of Abdoolah v. Rajesri Dossea (1) [1846] is the first reported case regarding a loan upon wakf property, and has no bearing on the present question. Nor have the cases in the Sudder Dewany Adawlut Decisions. In the case of Khodabundha Khan v. Oomutul Fatima (2) [1857] the sole question for determination turned upon the construction of a Shiah Will. The testator had provided for the performance of certain religious acts after his death, and had further provided that after defraying the expenses thereof the surplus should belong to one Jane Khanum and after her death to the executor. There was no mention of the word wakf in the document. Such a case is expressly provided for in the Sharaya. The learned Judges, "on the interpretation of the wording of the Will," held that it was an absolute devise in favour of Tussuduck Hossain (the executor), subject to certain trusts and the life-interest of Jane Khanum in the surplus profits.

In Dalrymple v. Khoondkar Azeezul Islam (3) the only question was whether a mutwalli could grant a permanent lease. The learned Judges, who had not the document before them, expressed an opinion that—

"Where the property is altogether wakf, i. e., when the whole of the profits are devoted to religious purposes, we think the above to be the correct ruling."

[The ruling referred to being a Hindu case in which it was held that a shebait could not grant a lease beyond his life.]

"But" added the Judges,
"when the office of mutwalli is hereditary and the incumbent has a beneficial interest in the property, we look upon it as an heritable estate burdened with certain trusts, the proprietary right of which is vested in the mutwalli and his heirs. In such a case there appears no sufficient reason why the incumbent should not exercise a right possessed by other proprietors to grant leases even in perpetuity.

[154] Here the learned Judges had in view a case where the property was not wholly and absolutely dedicated, and where the mutwalli had distinctly a beneficial interest in the corpus. There is nothing to show that the Judges intended to imply that an absolute dedication constituting the members of a family as the recipients of the benefaction would not be a good wakf.

In the case of Bibee Kuneez Fatima v. Bibee Saheba Jan (1) [1867], the question was whether certain properties which had been conveyed by one of the defendants to the others were or were not wakf and consequently inalienable. In dealing with the case, the Judges (Kemp and Glover, JJ.) considered two points, (1) the right of the plaintiff to sue, and (2) the meaning of the grants in the case. There was no mention of the words wakf in any of the sanads put forward by the plaintiff; they were all in fact Madad Maash grants. Kemp, J., dealing with the first point, said, "the grants of the lands in dispute make no mention of any provision for the maintenance of the plaintiff or any other member of the grantee's family." There is no suggestion that, had there been any such provision, it would have been invalid, or that there could be no wakf for that purpose. Then after discussing that the alleged endowment did not come under the provisions of Act XX of 1863, Kemp, J., proceeded to show that the plaintiff had no interest to entitle her to sue.

As regards the sanads (which Kemp, J., takes care to add were copies or copies of copies), he gives the substance of one of them:—

"That the grantee, i.e., Syud Mahomed Mir, had a large family to support, and had to defray the expenses of a "khankah" for travellers, and the benighted, for students and mendicants who beg at his door; that the said grantee found it difficult to discharge all these duties which involved considerable expense; that in consideration of this the villages detailed in the grant were given to him at a fixed annual jama of Rs. 896. The abwabs and other cesses hitherto levied upon the grantee were remitted, and the aforesaid jama, which had all along been paid, was declared to be fixed. It was further recited that the grantee, after paying the said jama, was to enjoy the profits of the property, to support himself therewith, and to pray for the grantor.

[155] "Now, it is very clear that this is not a grant constituting a wakf. There is no dedication of the properties solely to the worship of God, or to any religious or charitable purposes. The grant recites that the grantee and his predecessors have hitherto held the lands at a jama of Rs. 896, which jama is declared to be fixed at that rate henceforth. In consideration of the charitable disposition of the grantee, and the expenses which he apparently voluntarily incurred in supporting poor students, in giving alms to mendicants and food and shelter to travellers, the grantor remits the payment of abwabs and other cesses, which in the days of the Nawab Nazims were a heavy impost, and directs the officers of tehsil to refrain from exacting the same from the grantee. For this indulgence, the grantee was requested to give the grantor the benefit of his prayers. The grantee was to enjoy the profits after paying the jama fixed, viz., Rs. 896. In short, the grants were grants to an individual in his own right and for the purpose of furnishing the means for the subsistence of the grantee, and nothing further."

To my mind it is perfectly clear that in using the terms "religious" or "charitable" in the passage above quoted, Mr. Justice Kemp used them in the Mahomedan sense, that is, as meaning a purpose which is regarded as religious or charitable by the people among whom the question arose. He had already shown that there was no provision for the maintenance of the grantee's family. He then pointed out that there was no provision for the support of the khankah or travellers, or students, or mendicants; that, on the contrary, in consideration of the charitable disposition of the grantee, who apparently voluntarily incurred expenses in the performance of good acts, the grant was made personally to him, in return for which he was to give the grantor the benefit of his prayers. He accordingly held that such a grant could not be regarded as a wakf under the Mussulman Law. To imagine that in using the term charitable, he meant to confine it to a dedication solely for the poor would be going against the whole purport of his judgment.

In the case of Khajah Hossein Ali v. Shahzadee Hazara Begum (1) [1869], the only question for determination, as pointed out by Kemp, J., was, whether the subsistence of a mortgage, at the time the endowment was made, rendered such endowment wholly invalid under the Mahomedan Law. In the course of his decision the learned Judge (who differed from his colleague, Markby, J.) [156] made various observations pertinent to the case before him in support of his views. Kemp, J., as well as the appellate Court which affirmed his judgment, took the law entirely from the Fatawa Alamgiri. He showed, quoting Harington's Analysis, that Fatwas or law decisions "are given primarily according to Abu Yusuf, and next according to Imam Mahomed." I have not been able to find in the records of the High Court the wakfnama in this case, but a portion of it is quoted in Markby, J's judgment, and throws sufficient light on the subject under discussion.

"In this document," says Mr. Justice Markby, "after referring to the duty which he felt it incumbent on him to perform of making provision for the assistance of travellers and the maintenance of the heirs of his late son, he states as follows:—

'Consequently, for the sake of the maintenance of Khajah Hossein Ali, I do hereby appoint him (who is my grandson) as a mutwalli of the aforesaid Astana or sepulchre under the following conditions: that the said Hossein Ali shall neither be competent to transfer the aforesaid property under a sale, gift, or mortgage, nor to transfer the wakf property in any other way. He is hereby authorized to take care and to assist the travellers and the poor. He is to attend the fatihas of shabebarat, the mohurram, and the ceeds, and to allow such expenses as are for solemnizing the above festivals. He is to appropriate such amounts as would remain in hand, after the payment of the sudder jama, from the net proceeds of taluk Lot Belsar and from the produce of the gardens, for his personal expenses as well as for his family, i.e., his grandfather and mother.'"

It will be seen, therefore, that the endowment was for the maintenance of the endower's grandson, and that the proceeds went after the payment of the sudder jama towards his support and that of his family. The provisions relating to the travellers and the poor and the festivals were mere recommendations. He was authorized to take care and to assist the travellers and the poor. He was "to attend to the fatihas of shabebarat, the mohurram, and the ceeds," the usual Mahomedan festivals, "and to allow such expenses as are for solemnizing the above festivals." There was no specific dedication for those purposes.

Mr. Justice Kemp dealing with one of the objections of the lower Court to the wakf in that case says as follows:—

"As to the endowment being uncertain and conditional, I do not find, on perusal of the towliatnama, that such is the case.

[157] "The performance of certain ceremonies at the great Mahomedan festivals is provided for, the festivals are distinctly enumerated, the poor, who are always with us, are to be relieved, and travellers looked after. The Government revenue, or in this case the rent, is to be paid, and the residue is to be expended in the maintenance of the relatives (who are also specified) of the endower, that is, of his mother and grandmother. The sister of the endower is also to be maintained and a small marriage portion given to her. It will be seen that the poor are provided for, which is the primary object of every wakf. Settlements in favour of relations who are specifically named are made. Such an endowment is in every respect a lawful one under the Mahomedan Law."

It was contended upon Mr. Justice Kemp's words, "the primary object of every wakf is to provide for the poor," that where that is not the case the wakf is not valid. The learned Judge was pointing out the several particulars in the document before him, which went to establish that the endowment was neither uncertain nor conditional. And in doing so he pointed out that the poor were also provided for. And he added, what is no doubt true in one sense, but not so in another, that the primary object of every wakf is to provide for the poor, for it is unquestionable that there are many wakfs which have not the remotest connection with the poor, e.g., a wakf for a mosque. But as I said before his observation is correct in one sense; in every wakf, the benefaction of which is bestowed upon any individual or on one's descendants, the charity is continued, upon their extinction, expressly or by implication of law, to the general poor. The poor are thus always present in the mind of a Mahomedan making a wakf. That Mr. Justice Kemp did not mean to hold that only such wakfs were valid as were intended for strangers or to provide for the general body of the poor, is apparent, first, from the fact that in that very deed, which he held to be valid, the poor formed a secondary object of the wakf, and, secondly, from his reference to Baillie's Digest, pp. 585, 586, where the subject of wakf on one's descendants is treated.

Whatever interpretation may be sought to be put upon the words of Kemp, J., the broad fact remains that the immediate recipients of the benefaction in that case were Khajah Hossein Ali and his family, though the deed contained discretionary directions about helping the poor and performing the usual family festivals. To my mind that case, instead of being an authority against the [158] institution of wakfs constituting the endower's family as the recipients of the benefaction, is an important authority in support of it.

In the case of Muzhurool Huq v. Puhraj Ditarey Mohapattur (1) [1870], the plaintiff sued to obtain possession of certain lands which he had purchased with notice that they were wakf. The special appellant had intervened in the suit alleging that he was, the mutwalli under the wakfnama. The Judge in the Court below had decreed the suit on the ground (1) that the lands had not been endowed by the plaintiff's vendor, and (2) that the deed not being registered could not be admitted in evidence, and that therefore the intervenor had no locus standi. Dealing with the first ground, Kemp, J., examined the terms of the deed in order to show that they all constituted a valid endowment:—

"Looking to the terms of the deed," he said, "it has all the characteristics of a valid endowment under the Mahomedan Law. The primary objects for which the lands are endowed, and which are the objects which all Mahomedans have in view in endowing lands, are to support a mosque and to defray the expenses of the worship conducted in that mosque. The mosque had admittedly been in existence for a long period on the endowed land. It is first provided that from the profits of the endowed lands the mosque is to be required and lighted and furnished on certain festivals; that travellers are not to be allowed to go away hungry that an establishment, including a Muazzun, or caller to prayers and other necessary servants of the mosque are to be kept up; that mendicants are to have alms given to them; that a certain number of poor scholars are to be educated in Arabic, which necessitates the employment of a teacher; and lastly, that from the remaining profits the expenses for the marriage, burials and circumcisions of the members of the family of the mutwalli Muzhurool Huq were to be defrayed. This was to be done after the primary objects for which the endowment was made, and which objects have been already detailed above, were fully accomplished."

In this case it will be observed the learned Judge calls an endowment in favour of a mosque as the primary object of a wakf, whereas in the previous case he had stated the poor to be the primary object. It is evident, therefore, that Kemp, J., could not have intended in either of these cases that his words should be taken as exhaustive, for he had already spoken of a wakf being in favour of any religious or charitable purpose; and he was well [159] aware that, under the Mussulman Law, one's family were objects of charity in a higher degree than indigent strangers, and therefore entitled to be classed among the poor in the sense in which it is understood in the Mussulman system. The learned Judge then proceeded to say:—

"We are of opinion that the mere charge upon the profits of the estate of certain items which must in the course of time necessarily cease, being confined to one family and for particular purposes, and which after they lapse will leave the whole profits intact for the original purposes for which the endowment was made, does not render the endowment invalid under the Mahomedan Law. A person may make an endowment settling lands on himself and enjoying the profits during his lifetime, and after his lifetime devoting the profits to the support of the poor, the main object of the Mahomedan Law being that the profits of the land endowed should be endowed for a purpose which always remains in existence. Now the poor are always with us, and therefore a man making an endowment and enjoying the profits during his lifetime, to go to the poor after his death, does not make the endowment for an uncertain or non-existent object."

Here again he was dealing with the question by way of an example, and there is no shadow of a ground for suggesting that the illustration is exhaustive or exclusive; on the contrary, the very fact that he contemplated a provision for the members of a particular family for particular purposes would show that it never entered his mind to suggest that a wakf in which the proceeds are applicable towards the maintenance of the members of the endower's family was invalid. The views enunciated by Kemp, J., in the passage last quoted have received the approval of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (1), but that passage deals with the question which he was discussing from two aspects, both of which are provided for in the Fatawa Alamgiri, an authority upon which that learned Judge relied considerably. In the Fatawa Alamgiri, Volume II, p. 495 (see Baillie's Digest, 2nd Edition, p. 595), it is laid down that "when a man has made an appropriation of land or something else, with a condition that the whole or part of it shall be for himself while he lives, and after him for the poor, the appropriation is valid according to Abu Yusuf, and the Sheikhs of Balkh have adopted his opinion, and the [160] Fatwa is in conformity with it." The instances in which this may be done are given. And then comes this passage:—

"So also if he should say, 'this my land is a sadakah appropriated, he (the mutwalli) will pass the produce to me while I live; then after me, to my child and child's child and their nasl for ever while there are any, and when they cease, to the indigent,' this also would be lawful. So also, if he should make a condition 'that he may maintain himself and his child and pay his debts out of the produce, and that when death happens to him, the produce of this estate is for such an one, the son of such an one and his child and child's child, and his nasl.'
A person makes an appropriation for the poor with a condition 'that he may eat and feed others (out of its produce) so long as he lives, and that after his death it is 'to be for his child, and in like manner to his child's child for ever, while there are any descendants,' the wakf is lawful with such a condition."

Here the appropriation is either in general terms or is expressly for the poor, with a condition that the benefaction should be bestowed wholly or partially on the endower and his family so long as they exist as part and parcel of the charitable purpose for which the dedication is made, the wakf to go to the poor (meaning indigent strangers on the extinction of his descendants). In p. 474, Vol. II of the same work (Baillie's Digest, 2nd Edition, p. 576) it is laid down, however, that a man may make a wakf on himself:—

"A man says my land is a 'sadakah mowkoofa * on myself. Such an appropriation is lawful according to what is approved. So also, if he should say I have made a wakf of it on myself, and after me on such a one and then upon the poor, it would be lawful according to Abu Yusuf. And if one should say my land is mowkoofa on such a one, and after him upon me, or should say upon me and upon such a one, or upon my slave and "upon such an one, the approved opinion is that it would be valid."

* Mowkoofa, past participle of wakf: Mr. Baillie translates this word as "settled," but I prefer to follow the original, as the word "settled" is misleading.

"If a man should say I have made a wakf of it on my children (awlad) males and females are included."

"If one should say this my land is sadakah mowkoofa on my child, and child of my child, the child of his loins, and the child of his child in existence on the day of the settlement, and those who are born afterwards are included, and the two generations participate in the produce, but none below them are included, nor the children of daughters according to the [161] Zahir Bewayat; and the Fatwa is in accordance with it. And if he should say, upon my child and child of my child, and child of the child of my child, mentioning three generations, the produce is to be expended upon his children for ever, so long as there are any descendants, and is not to be applied to the poor; while one remains the wakf is to them, and the lowest among them; the nearer and remote being alike unless the appropriator say in making the wakf 'the nearer is nearer,' or say 'on my child, then after them, on the child of my child,' or say 'generation after generation,' (bat nan baad batn), when a beginning must be made with them with whom the appropriator has begun."

In these cases the wakf is upon himself or upon his children and afterwards on the poor.

Mr. Justice Kemp affirms both these principles. In the first part to the passage under reference, he recognizes the Mussulman Law given in p. 596 of Baillie's Digest. The words "the mere charge upon the profits of the estate of certain items, which must in the course of time necessarily cease, being confined to one family and for particular purposes," be it for the payment of the endower's debts or the maintenance of his family or the payment of their marriage expenses, "and which after they lapse will leave the whole profits intact for the original purposes for which the endowment was made," show that the learned Judge recognizes the validity of the conditions which may be superimposed by the endower upon the application or enjoyment of the property dedicated, as laid down in the Alamgiri. In the second part he points out that "a person may make an endowment settling lands on himself and enjoying the profits during his life-time, and after his life-time devoting the profits to the support of the poor," and mark these words "the main object of the Mahomedan Law being that the profits of the land endowed should be endowed for a purpose which always remains in existence." Here there is no reference to a "charge of certain items" upon the profits of an estate dedicated for some specific purposes. The principle is stated in the clearest terms that a person may make an endowment "settling lands on himself" with the reversion for the poor "who are always with us," who are, in other words, a perpetual object of bounty. Reference is made to the case of the endower himself, because on that point Abu Yusuf and Mohammad were disagreed, and the learned Judge enunciated the rule laid down by the [162] former. There is no reason for suggesting that he intended cutting down the Mahomedan Law. If his words are studied with some care, it will be found that he enunciated the recognized rules of Mahomedan Law, viz., that the endower may make an appropriation on condition that he and his family or children shall enjoy the usufruct so long as they last, the whole going to the general poor after they have ceased to exist; or that he may directly endow the lands for himself or his children or descendants, and in the end for the poor; in other words, constitute himself and his children the recipients of the charity in the first instance, the general poor taking their place on the extinction of the family. The case of Doyal Chund Mullick v. Syad Keramut Ali (1) has no bearing on the present discussion, but it is important in one respect. It shows that again Kemp, J., went to the Fatawa Alamgiri (Baillie's Digest, old Edition, p. 551, 2nd Edition, p. 559) for the chief elements of wakf, and that he used the expression "seeking for nearness" in exactly the sense in which Mahomedan lawyers use it.

So far there is nothing to show that the Courts were disinclined to recognize as valid wakfs in favour of one's descendants. On the contrary, all the indication is on the other side. For the first time in 1881, seventeen years after the abolition of the Law Officers, in the case of Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Huq (2), it was held that a wakf on the members of one's family was invalid.

(2) 6 O. 744=8 C.L.R. 164.

In deciding that case the learned Judges supposed Baillie and Macnaghten to be in conflict. But this view is certainly not correct. Principle 4, Chapter X of Macnaghten's Principles and Precedents of Mahomedan Law, shows that an endowment may be made in favour of the children of a person and on their failure for the poor. In pp. 338 and 341 cases are given which refer distinctly to wakfs for the support of particular families. The quotation in p. 342 from the Khazanut-ul-Muftin is emphatic. Nor is there anything in the Hedaya to warrant the view taken by the learned Judges. It must be remembered that the English version is a rendering of a Persian translation [163] of the original Arabic Hedaya with many interpolations and omissions. Mr. Hamilton in translating the Persian version into English rendered the word wakf into "appropriation;" but as every "appropriation" cannot be regarded as wakf, he took care to add in a foot note that it meant appropriations of a pious or charitable nature. The learned Judges decided the case before them upon the authority of that foot-note, construing it in the strictest English sense. There is no warrant in the Hedaya itself for that view. In the Hedaya a wakf is defined thus: "in law, it signifies, according to Abu Hanifa, the tying up of the substance of a property in the ownership of the wakif and the devotion of its usufruct, amounting to an ariat According to the two Disciples, it means the tying up of the substance of a thing under the rule of the property of God, whereby the proprietary right of the wakif [therein] becomes extinguished and [it] is transferred to Almighty God for any purpose by which its profits may be applied to [the benefit of] His creatures."

The definition given by the Disciples has been adopted for the Fatwa [as is stated in Moohummud Sadik v. Moohummud Ali (1)]. This has been explained over and over again in all the commentaries, in all the works of law, in decisions, and in Fatwas, to include every object of a meritorious character, by which "reward" is obtained or "nearness" sought; and a dedication for one's children is placed in the same category as one for a mosque. The Hedaya is an elementary work, taught in schools, and deals with questions on which Abu Hanifa, Abu Yusuf, and Mohammed were in disagreement. It does not deal with the subject of wakfs in favour of one's children, as there was absolutely no difference on that point. In p. 900 of the Arabic Hedaya (printed with the Kifaya), Vol. II, the validity of such a wakf is taken for granted.

The learned Judges incorporate Hamilton's foot-note into the text, and then say "Abu Hanifa undoubtedly in II Hedaya, p. 334, points out that the appropriation, that is wakf, must be to some charitable purpose." They evidently think the Hedaya to be a work by Abu Hanifa, and they impute to him a statement which is not to be found in the text. They construe the words "charitable [164] purpose" in the foot-note as meaning charity to the poor; they forget that a charitable purpose in Mussulman Law includes benefactions for the support of one's family; and that Abu Hanifa himself, as stated in the Kifaya (a commentary on the Hedaya, see Morley's Digest, Introduction, page cclxix) held wakf to mean "the tying-up of the substance in the ownership of the wakif, and the devotion of its profits on the poor or on any purpose among good purposes." They hold that a wakf may be constituted for the benefit of the endower's family, but they think that it can only be done by the use of the word sadakah, forgetting that sadakah only means charity, and that according to the Mussulman Law a provision for one's family is the best of charities and that Baillie points out it is not necessary to use the term sadakah when the word wakf is used. They again rely upon a foot-note by the translator in holding that a man must make himself a pauper before he can constitute himself the recipient of his benefaction. This view is wholly opposed to the Mussulman Law, as will be seen on a reference to Baillie's Digest, p. 593, which shows that a man need not make himself a pauper before he can reserve the usufruct for himself.

Some parts of the judgment, however, would indicate the general conclusion of the Judges to have been that under the guise of a wakf the donees took an absolute interest in the estate in proportion to their respective shares, in which case their decision would not affect the present question. That case clearly proceeded on several mistakes, and one of the learned Judges, who decided it, subsequently resiled to some extent from the position he took up there.

The case of Fatima Bibee v. Ariff Ismailjee Bham (1) [1882] was not argued at all, counsel for the defendant leaving the construction of the documents in the hands of the Court. And the learned Judge, acting on such materials as the plaintiff's counsel had placed before him, set aside the wakfnamas, which seems to have been the object of the parties.

Luchmiput Singh v. Amir Alum (2) [1882], the wakf was for the performance of family ceremonies, for the payment of the wakif's debts, and the maintenance of his lineal descendants. [165] The wakf was held to be valid. The following passage from the judgment is worthy of consideration:—

"The fact that the Subordinate Judge who tried this case is himself a Mahomedan gentleman of considerable attainments in Arabic learning, entitles his opinion to peculiar weight in a case of this nature; and he appears to have entertained no doubt whatever as to this wakf being of a thoroughly legitimate character as to its constitution and object. And singularly enough, the only matter which strikes us as one [in respect of] -sic- which, with reference to the decisions of the Courts, makes the character of this alleged wakf at all doubtful is the very one which the lower Court has treated as one as to which there could be no dispute as to its being a proper object of wakf. For, in the wakfnama, there is express provision for the maintenance of the dedicator's male descendants, in addition to the strictly pious and religious objects for which the wakf purports to have been made. The lower Court, however, easily disposes of this question by the observation 'that it is quite evident and there is no necessity to quote any authority on the subject, that a wakf for one's self and for one's children is valid.'"

After referring to the cases of Abdul Ganne Kasam v. Hussen Miya Rahimtula (3) and Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Hug (4); they say:—

"The wakfnama now before us is of a very different character; and having regard to the passage in it reciting the fact of dedication, we think that, without saying whether or not we are prepared on further consideration to adopt to the full the ruling above mentioned, we can treat this wakf as actually fulfilling the condition described."

In the case of Phate Saheb Bibi v. Damadar Premji (5) [1879], a portion of the dedicated property was sold in execution of a decree against one of the beneficiaries; another beneficiary sued to set aside the sale; the only question was whether the right of suit belonged to the heirs or descendants of the settlor or to the mutwallis. The Court (West and Pinhey, JJ.) held that the right of suit belonged to the mutwallis.

In Fatma Bibi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay (1) [1881], and Amrutlal Kalidas v. Shaik Hossein (2) [1887], the wakfs were for the settlers and the settlor's descendants, and the poor as the ultimate recipients were expressly designated. The Bombay [166] High Court in both these cases held the wakf to be valid. In the latter case, Farran, J., pointed out that the learned Judges who had decided Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Hug (3) and Fatima Bibee v. Ariff Ismailjee Bham (4) had taken for a decision what was a mere obiter in Abdul Ganne Kasam v. Hussen Miya Rahimtula (5).

In the case of Jugatmoni Chowdhurani v. Romjani Bibee (6) [1884] Field, J., pointed out the "essentials" to the creation of a valid wakf. He said, in the first place, the appropriator must destine its ultimate application to objects not liable to become extinct; secondly, that the appropriation must be at once complete; thirdly, that there be no stipulation in the wakf for a sale of the property and the expenditure of the price on the appropriator's necessities; and, fourthly, that there must be perpetuity.

In the case of Nizamudin Gulam v. Abdul Gafur (7) there was no express provision at all for the ultimate devolution of the property to any religious or charitable object; and the learned Judges (following the cases of Fatima Bibi and Amrutlal) declared that the grant in wakf could not therefore be upheld. The sole ground upon which they proceeded to hold against the wakf was that there was no express ultimate trust. The case of Fatma Bibi was followed in this Court in Ayesha Bibi v. Golam Hyder Khan (on settlement of issues), 19th November, 1883, and Phudia Bibi v. Mohammed Kazem Isphahane (31st March, 1884); both unreported.

In the case of Pathuquitti v. Avathalaquitti (8) the wakf was to take effect on the contingency of the settlor having no issue. If she had issue the property was to go to them absolutely; if not, it was to be wakf. Under the Mahomedan law of all the schools this wakf was bad from its inception, and the learned Judges held so. But Mr. Justice Ayyar supported his arguments against the validity of the wakf before him by a reference to the Calcutta case of Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Hug (3). The learned Judge's reasoning, however, does not lend any support to the idea [167] that he adopted the conclusion arrived at in the Calcutta case. From the judgment it is clear that the inclination of Mr. Justice Ayyar's mind was that if the wakf had been out-and-out for the children of the settlor, and the poor had been expressly mentioned, it would have been valid.

In the case of Murtazai Bibi v. Jumna Bibi (9) the parties were Shiabs and the endower was a Shiah. Under the Shiah Law, when a wakf is in favour of a specified class of people such as the wakf's family or descendants, the ultimate unfailing purpose must be expressly designated. This is one of the points of difference between the recognised Hanafi law and the recognised Shiah law. In the wakfnamah in Murtazai Bibi's case the power were not mentioned, and the case could have been decided on that point. But the learned Judge who decided the case was probably not aware of this difference, and derived the law from Hanafi cases.

Such was the state of the case-law on the subject of wakfs constituting the endower's family as the recipients of the benefaction, until the decision of their Lordships in the Privy Council in Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (1). There were two cases in the Calcutta High Court holding such wakfs to be invalid—one of them wholly unargued; the other proceeding on some clear mistakes and evidently doubted in a subsequent case, by one of the learned Judges who had decided it; two reported cases including the decision of McDonell and Macpherson, JJ., in Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (1) indicating that such a wakf would be valid, if the unfailing object was designated; two Bombay cases holding such wakfs to be valid, and a third substantially endorsing the same view. (I do not refer to the unreported cases in this Court nor to the case of Abdul Ganne Kasam, as it has not been accepted by the Bombay High Court in Fatima Bibi v. The Advocate-General and in Amrutlal v. Sheik Hossein, and because what has been considered as a decision in that case was plainly obiter.) This can hardly be called a course of decisions such as has been imagined.

But, says the Advocate-General, the Privy Council has repealed the Mahomedan law. This contention, in my opinion, is wholly [168] unfounded. The case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amar Chand Kundu (1) was a somewhat peculiar one.

In the wakfnama executed by the father of the appellant Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry, the property was made wakf in the following terms:—

I hereby appropriate and dedicate as fisabilillah wakf, in the manner provided in the paragraph mentioned below, the properties now in question and other property there described for defraying the expenses of the brickbuilt musjid of my grandfather Jorip Mahomed Chowdhry, at my own family dwelling-house in the village of Paragulpore, and of the two madrassas at my own ancestral homestead, and my lodging-house in the town of Chittagong, and sadar warid (persons coming and going), and I pray to God that He may in His mercy accept and preserve the same for ever being applied to those purposes."

It will be seen that this is a direct dedication to the purposes named. It was open to the endower under the Mahomedan law to have adopted two courses, both regarded as legal and valid, viz., either to create a wakf directly constituting his descendants the immediate recipients of the benefaction and on their extinction making the general poor the recipients thereof, or to endow the properties in favour of some general pious object, reserving the usufruct for himself and his descendants so long as they existed. Instead of adopting either of these courses, the endower in this particular case chose a devious method. In the paragraph laying down the rules for the administration it was provided that the purposes for which the dedication was made should be performed according to custom. There is no indication, however, of what the customary expenses were. There was no provision that, on the extinction of the family, it would be applied for the purposes stated in the preamble or to any other purpose. Had the wakf been in general terms, Abu Yusuf's rule would have been applicable, and on the failure of the family the entire income would have been applicable to it. But as the expenses for these purposes had been already fixed, if a stranger ever become mutwalli on the extinction of the family, he would not be bound to spend more. Their Lordships accordingly say :—

"There is not a word said about increasing the amount spent on charitable uses beyond the expenditure which was according to custom. Their [169] Lordships cannot find that the deed imposes any obligation on the grantor's male issue, or on any other person into whose hands the property may come, to apply it to charitable uses, except to the extent to which he had 'himself been accustomed to perform them.' "

I venture to think that this sentence contains the pith of the judgment in that case. Their Lordships carefully abstained from laying down any general rule. They say in express terms :—

"Their Lordships do not attempt in this case to lay down any precise definition of what will constitute a valid wakf, or to determine how far provisions for the grantor's family may be engrafted on such a settlement without destroying its character as a charitable gift. They are not called upon by the facts of this case to decide whether a gift of property to charitable uses which is only to take effect after the failure of all the grantor's descendants is an illusory gift, a point on which there have been conflicting decisions in India."

This sentence shows clearly that they did not countenance the views expressed by the Calcutta High Court in the two decisions to which I have referred. On the contrary, what follows is, to a large extent, destructive of the ratio decidendi in Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Huq (1). In Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amar Chand Kundu (2) the wakf having been directly in favour of certain religious purposes named, the provision about the maintenance of the family could come in only under the rules given in the Fatawa Alamgiri, Volume II, page 495 (Baillie's Digest, 2nd edition, page 596), which Kemp, J., evidently had in view in the case of Muzhurool Huq v. Puhraj Ditarey Mohapattur (3). Their Lordships accordingly say :—

"On the one hand their Lordships think there is good ground for holding that provisions for the family out of the grantor's property may be consistent with the gift of it as wakf. On this point they agree with, and adopt the views of, the Calcutta High Court stated by Mr. Justice Kemp in one of the cases—Muzhurool Huq v. Puhraj Ditarey Mohapattur (3). After stating the conclusion of the Court, that the primary objects for which the lands were endowed were to support a mosque and to defray the expenses of worship and charities connected therewith, and that the benefits given to the grantor's family came after those primary objects, that learned Judge says: 'We are of opinion that the mere charge upon the profits of the [170] estate of certain items which must in the course of time necessarily cease, being confined to one family, and which after they lapse will leave the whole property intact for the original purposes for which the endowment was made, does not render the endowment invalid under the Mahomedan Law.' "

"On the other hand they have not been referred to, nor can they find, any authority showing that according to Mahomedan Law a gift is good as a wakf, unless there is a substantial dedication of the property to charitable uses at some period of time or other."

To my mind there is nothing in the above remarks to justify the inference that their Lordships intended to repeal the Mahomedan Law. In the last two lines of the above-quoted passage they gave expression, as it seems to me, to what the Mahomedan law lays down, viz., that every wakf in favour of objects liable to failure (jihat-i-munkataa), such as a man's family, "must at some period of time or other" enure to the benefit of the poor, unless some other continuing object is named. But learned counsel contended that in using the words "at some period of time or other," the Privy Council meant "some fixed or certain or determinate period of time." I cannot concur in this view, for in the first place it is impossible to say when the descendants would die off, and in the next place a wakf cannot be made to take effect at a future period however fixed. For example, if a man were to say this property would be dedicated for the poor twenty years hence, in the meantime so-and-so should have the usufruct of it, such a dedication is, under the Mussulman law, invalid, as it is suspensive upon a time when the property may not be in the endower at all. He may have died in the meantime, and the property may have passed from him to his heirs. This is different from a testamentary wakf, because a man has a disposing power over his property until his death. I do not think, therefore, that their Lordships intended to convey what Mr. Woodroffe contends for. As I said before, to my mind they expressed in their own words what the Mussulman law lays down.

Mr. Arathoon's argument, to which the Privy Council refer in their judgment, was somewhat unfortunate. A family settlement does not import a charitable gift to the poor; but a wakf constituting a family or any specified object or class (jihat-i-muyyin), as the recipients of the benefaction, according to the recognized and [171] accepted Hanafi doctrine, imports the ultimate gift to the poor "though they be not named," "for wakf like sadakah implies that."

But the other argument of learned counsel, viz., that a wakf in which the endower's children are the recipients of the benefaction would change the rules of succession among Mahomedans, deserves some attention, as it is evidently founded on an erroneous apprehension of the Mussulman law. A Mussulman has an absolute disposing power during his lifetime over all his properties, ancestral or self-acquired. He can make a gift of the whole of it to any person, heir or non-heir, or give wholly or partially the usufruct by wakf to any one he chooses (see the Fath-ul-Kadir, the Al-amgiri, and the Tahtawi, Vol. II, p. 528). In the one case, the donee takes the substance, in other words, the property absolutely; in the other case, he takes the interest in the usufruct, the corpus remaining absolutely tied up in the custody of the Almighty for the benefit of other beneficiaries. In the one case the property is transferred to the donee; in the other, to God from whom the grantor had received it; in either case the right of the donor becomes extinguished for ever. A wakf, however, being religious in its nature stands upon a different footing from a transfer to an individual.

I prefer not to make any observation on the case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1), as I understand it is on appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

Before dealing with the case under reference, it seems to me necessary to clear away certain impressions regarding the respective opinions of Abu Hanifa, Abu Yusuf, and Mohamed, which have formed the subject of elaborate arguments at the Bar. There is absolutely no difference between them as to the obligatoriness of a wakf or as to the validity of a wakf in favour of one's own or anybody else's family or descendants. The only dispute among them is (a) as to when and how it becomes binding and obligatory. Abu Hanifa thought a wakf to be revocable so long as the endower had not obtained the imprimatur of the Kazi or "death came upon him," when it would become irrevocable. Abu Yusuf and [172] Mohamed held that it was irrevocable binding and obligatory (lazim) from the moment the consecration was made; but they differed as to how and when it should become operative. Abu Yusuf ruled that the wakf became binding upon the mere declaration of the dedication. Mahomed thought that it was not irrevocable until the property had been consigned to a mutwalli. With reference to these different views, Tahtawi says, "no one has accepted the opinion of the Imam (Abu Hanifa), some few have followed Mohamed, but the universality of lawyers have adopted Abu Yusuf's rule." The Manah, the Fath-ul-Kadir, etc., all say the Fatwa is with Abu Yusuf. The Alamgiri says that "the Lawyers of Balkh follow Abu Yusuf, and we (meaning the Indian Judges) decree accordingly." I have given here the epitome of the dicta contained in the law-books, without burdening my judgment with quotations.

There are three other points upon which Abu Yusuf and Mohamed differ, to which attention must be called. Mohamed says (b) the property dedicated, if partible, should be divided off, i. e., that it must not be mushaa; (c) that the endower should reserve no interest in the usufruct: on this point, the principal point of difference between the Shiabs and the Hanafis, who form the bulk of the Indian Mahomedans, he agrees with the Shiabs; and (d) that the ultimate unfailing object must be expressly designated. On all these points Abu Yusuf differs from Mohamed. With reference to (d), Abu Yusuf ruled that the word wakf implied perpetuity and the inclusion of the poor, and that when a wakf is created in favour of an object or class of objects liable to failure, on its or their execution, the wakf would be for the poor, "even though they be not named." A reference to any standard work would place the matter beyond the shadow of a doubt.

As regards the other matters, Abu Yusuf ruled that "the wakf of Mushaa" was valid, and that the endower could lawfully reserve for himself the usufruct or indeed "make a wakf on himself," and all the Mahomedan lawyers and Judges "have followed Abu Yusuf." In India "the fatwa," says the Alamgiri, "is with Abu Yusuf." And the British Indian Courts themselves have accepted and followed, under the guidance of their Law Officers, the rule of Abu Yusuf in (a), (b) and (c).

[173] In the case of Doe d. Jaun Beebee v. Abdollah Barber (1), the Calcutta Supreme Court held that the wakif may lawfully reserve the usufruct for himself, and that consignment was not necessary to the validity of a wakf. In the case of Hyatee Khanum v. Koolsoom Khanum (2) the Sudder Court held that the wakf of Mushaa or an undivided share in a certain property was valid. It seems to me the Indian Courts are bound to conform to the rule of Abu Yusuf with reference to (d) also, in accordance with the express practice and authority of Mussulman Judges and lawyers for ages.

But even that question does not arise in the case under reference, for here the poor are expressly designated as the ultimate recipients of the wakf created by Bikani.

The First Court has held, as I have already stated, that this wakf was not executed with any intention to defraud creditors, that the man was old and infirm, and was going away on a pilgrimage from which he had little hope of returning alive, and that he intended to make a provision for his family with a remote reservation for the poor. Here lies, in the Subordinate Judge's opinion, the gravamen of the charge. In the latter part of his judgment he makes the following observation:—

"I doubt that Bikani ever seriously thought of the total extinction of his descendants and of a probable contingency of a reversion to the poor. Bikani returned home from Mecca within a few months after the execution of the wakf deed. Hardly anything was done during that period to give effect to the deed. On his return he did not even get his name registered as mutwalli, but all along continued to recover the profits of the properties in his personal capacity, ignoring the wakf altogether, and even confessed before some respectable pleaders that he had no mind to give any effect to the deed."

If Bikani created a valid wakf, his subsequent intention or conduct has nothing to do with the question. But as a good deal of discussion has taken place on the subject of sham dedications and nominal or pretended wakfs, I feel bound to state in precise terms what appears to me to be the Mahomedan Law, especially as the Transfer of Property Act leaves untouched the Mussulman law relating to dispositions of property. The Mussulman Law [174] supplies ample safeguards against fraud. It declares that if a property which is already mortgaged to another is made wakf, it must be redeemed with the other assets of the mortgagor (if he dies without having released it). If it cannot be so done, the wakf must be set aside. The Mussulman law provides that if a man immersed in debt, in other words, a person in insolvent circumstances, makes a wakf, in order to delay his creditors and has no other means to pay his debts with, the wakf will not be recognized. But when a person, who is not in insolvent circumstances, or against whom no fiat of inhibition has issued from the Kazi, makes a wakf, his disposition is immediately operative and his right in the property drops for ever, Raddrul-Muther, Volume III, p. 610, Fath-ul-Kadir, Volume II, p. 640 : Surat-ul-Fatawa, &c. Thenceforth he is an absolute stranger to it. The property is not his any more. As I understand the expression "nominal" or "pretended" in connection with a transfer, it means this, that whilst the transferor purports to transfer his property, in reality he does not. If the property ostensibly changes hands, it is held by the transferee subject to secret trust in favour of the original proprietor. But this is not applicable to a wakf if the Mahomedan law is to be applied. The moment a wakf is made, the right of the owner in the subject of the consecration drops absolutely; it is transferred to the Almighty and the wakf has no power of revocation. If he makes a wakf, knowing the effect of his acts, he cannot say afterwards that he did not intend making a wakf, or that he had some other secret design in view and never intended to part with his property. No hidden or secret reservation is allowed. If at the time of the consecration he expressly says:—"I make a wakf, on condition that it shall remain my property, or I shall deal with it as I like, or I may sell it when I like and apply the proceeds to my use," the law regards it as void. But in any other case, if the wakif himself is the mutwalli and misdeals with the property or acts contrary to the provisions of the wakf, the Kazi is empowered to remove him on the complaint of any of the beneficiaries, even though he may have made a condition that he shall not be removed.

It must be remembered that in Mahomedan law and Mahomedan law books there is no distinction between a wakf for a [175] man's family and a wakf for any other purpose. They all stand on the same footing. The mutwalli (whether the wakif himself or anybody else) has no interest in the wakf beyond that which is expressly provided for at the time of dedication. He has no power of sale mortgage or lease (without the sanction of the Judge), and is just in the same position as the manager of a minor's property. Nor have the recipients of the benefaction any interest beyond what is expressly given in the wakfnama. They have no beneficial interest of any kind in the corpus, nor in the income beyond what is provided in the deed. I fail, therefore, to see how the conduct or acts of a manager (be he the wakif himself) can affect the wakf. If the question were whether a wakf deed was executed at the time it purports to be, or whether a wakf was created at the time alleged, no doubt the conduct of the wakif subsequent to such alleged dedication would be material, but that is not the case here. In the present case it has been found by the lower Court that the man executed the deed and duly registered it. He went away with little or no hope of returning, leaving the management in the hands of his sons. He had done apparently all that he could to complete the transfer at the time. His subsequent conduct cannot, under the Mahomedan Law, be allowed to affect the wakf.

The wakfnama in the present case contains three distinct provisions ; it provides (1) for certain allowances in favour of the endower's children and wife; (2) it provides for the disbursement of Rs. 50 in the way of God, and of a further like sum in charity to the poor ; and (3) it provides that the balance of the income should form part of the wakf fund and be expended in good acts for the benefit of his soul. The Judge in the Court below has found that so far as the second provision is concerned, the deed of wakf has been carried into effect ; not only has Rs. 50 been spent on charity, but a student has been maintained "if not from the outset, at least for a considerable time." The maintenance of the student apart from the almsgiving to the poor shows that the Judge is not right in thinking that the Rs. 50 mentioned in paragraph 3 is the same sum as mentioned in paragraph 1. The very objects are different, one is in "the way of God," which means "the support of religion," the other for alms [176] to the poor. The members of the family cannot get more than what has specifically been reserved for them; out of the balance, in any case not less than half the income, a portion is given to purposes which would be denominated charitable in the English sense, the remainder is to be spent in pious acts for the good of the soul of the endower, who, according to the Subordinate Judge, went to Mecca with no hope of returning alive.

But it is said the preamble shows that he had no pious motive, for the first object he mentions is the perpetuation of his name. This argument proceeds upon a misapprehension of the inner life of the people whose law we have to administer. Among the Mussulmans, it is the general practice to invoke the names of their deceased ancestors at certain religious festivals, especially the shah-e-barat, commonly called the Shubrat, to spread flowers and light candles or chiraghs over the grave of the deceased, to have the Koran recited, particularly if the family is possessed of means, on the spot where he died. Herklot in his Qanoon-i-Islam describes the ceremonies performed at the time of Shubrat or Shah-e-barat. In the month of Ramazan, on one of the nights believed to be the "night of excellence" mentioned in the Koran, "when the angels and the spirit descend to the earth at the command of their Lord," it is usual to offer fatihas for the dead; also in Rajjab, the month of "the Aseension." If the deceased was a saintly individual, besides the usual fatihas, Urs is performed on the anniversary of his death. In the wakfnama in the case of Shah Amir Alum, these were the ceremonies provided for. Nothing is more bitter or agonising to a Mussulman than the idea of having nobody left to offer up fatihas, prayers, naiz, etc., for him after death. His name is "perpetuated" in these pious acts and in the alms which are distributed on these occasions. This is what a Mussulman understands by the words "for the perpetuation of my name," "for keeping my name alive," etc.

This wakfnama is totally different from the wakfnama in the case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amar Chand Kundu (1). To hold that a wakf, the benefaction of which is bestowed wholly or in part on the wakif's family and his descendants, is invalid, [177] would have the effect, in my opinion, of sweeping away an important branch of the Mussulman Law, with which are associated and intermixed the dearest religious interests of the people.

For all the reasons I have given above, I am of opinion that the wakfnama in question created a valid endowment, and that these appeals should be allowed and the suits dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

There seems to be another difficulty in the plaintiffs' suits. It is not quite clear whether all the persons interested in the wakf have been made parties; certainly the Talib-ul-ilm is not a party. I am inclined to think these suits fall within the purview of the ruling of their Lordships in Bishen Chand Basawut v. Nadir Hossain (2), and ought to be dismissed on that ground also.

GHOSE, J.—The plaintiffs in these cases are creditors of one Haji Bikani Mia. In execution of the decrees obtained by them against Bikani, they attached certain properties as belonging to him, but this was opposed by Bikani upon the ground that he had on the 4th Aughran 1281 (1874) dedicated the properties as wakf, and that he had since been holding them as mutwalli. This opposition succeeded, whereupon the creditors brought the suits from which the appeals before us have arisen, upon the ground that the deed of wakf propounded by Bikani was a nominal transaction, that he was holding the properties as owner, and that therefore the properties were liable to be sold for satisfaction of their decrees. The suits were defended by Bikani, upon the ground that the said deed did constitute the properties as valid wakf according to the Mahomedan Law, and that it was a bona fide transaction.

Both the Courts below decreed the suits. The Subordinate Judge distinctly found that Bikani had no pious object in view, that the wakf was but a device to perpetuate the property in his family, and that, notwithstanding the deed, Bikani held the property, not as mutwalli, but as owner, and that the endowment was but nominal. The District Judge in appeal considered the case not exactly in the same way as the Subordinate Judge did. He [178] treated the questions raised as mixed questions of law and fact, but in the result came to the same conclusion as the Subordinate Judge. He held that there was no intention of a conveyance to pious uses at all; that the trust was in complete abeyance from 1281 (1874) to 1293 (1886), when the deed was produced for the first time to save the property from creditors; that Bikani never professed to act as a mutwalli; that there was no substantial dedication to charitable uses at some time or other; that to all intents and purposes the deed was practically a deed of family endowment, and that the pious acts done by Bikani, as indicating a compliance with the objects stated in the deed, were such as would be commonly performed by all pious and well-to-do Mahomedans. The Judge however held, with reference to the provision made in the deed for pious purposes, that the properties were subject to a charge of Rs. 75 a year, and that they should be sold subject to such charge. I should here mention that in dealing with the question of law on the subject, the Judge relied upon and guided himself by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (1) and a decision of this Court (Tottenham and Trevelyan, JJ.) in the case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (2).

(1) 17 C. 498 = 17 I. A. 28.

(2) 15 I. A. 1 = 15 C. 323.

On appeal to this Court, a Divisional Bench (Petheram, C.J., and Hill, J.) being of opinion that there was a conflict between two decisions of this Court, one by Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Trevelyan, in the case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (2) already referred to, and the other by Mr. Justice O'Kinealy and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose (3), as bearing upon the question of the validity of the deed of wakf in question according to the Mahomedan Law, has referred the case to a Full Bench, with special reference to the question: "Whether the disposition of the grantor's property made by the deed of the 4th Aughran 1281 (4), was a valid wakf of the property dealt with by the deed."

[179] The case has been argued at great length before us, and various questions as bearing upon the Mahomedan Law, and the conclusions arrived at by the District Judge in appeal have been discussed by the learned counsel on either side.

I should here premise that the case before us is not between two Mahomedans, but between a Hindu, who is the creditor, and a Mahomedan, the debtor. Section 37 of Act XII of 1887 provides as follows:—

"Where in any suit or other proceeding it is necessary for a Civil Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste, or any religious usage or institution, the Mahomedan Law in cases where the parties are Mahomedans, and the Hindu Law in cases where the parties are Hindus, shall form the rule of decision, except in so far as such law has, by legislative enactment, been altered or abolished."

(2) "In cases not provided for by sub-s. (1) or by any other law for the time being in force, the Court shall act according to justice, equity, and good conscience."

This case is governed by the 2nd clause of the section, and the Court has here to act according to "justice, equity, and good conscience."

Cases often occur in our Courts where the parties to a suit are of different persuasions, and one of them relies upon the particular law which governs him as the inception of his title, and the Court has to consider that law. Take, for example, a case like this: a Hindu creditor attaches certain property for satisfaction of his decree obtained against a Mahomedan; a Mahomedan female thereupon claims the property as being in her possession in lieu of dower, she being his wife. If the creditor questions her status as a wife, the Court has to determine the question whether the parties were married according to the Mahomedan Law. So in the case where a property seized in execution is claimed by a Mahomedan as under a gift from the debtor, a Mahomedan, the Court has to determine whether the gift is valid according to the Mahomedan Law. But while the Court goes into these questions, it does so, not because the Mahomedan Law applies to the Hindu, but because "justice, equity, and good conscience" require that they should be considered. In like manner in the case before [180] us, we have to consider whether the property which the creditor desires to sell is still the property of Bikani, and as such is liable to be sold for his debts or whether he has made a valid dedication of it as wakf, and as such it is inalienable.

Before considering what may be the effect of the findings arrived at in this case by the lower appellate Court, it will be necessary to see what may be the Mahomedan Law on the subject so far as it bears upon the particular case before us.

According to Abu Hanifa, the great Oracle of Mahomedan Jurisprudence, as Mr. Hamilton describes him to be in his preliminary discourse on the Hedaya, wakf (quoting from Hamilton's translation of the Hedaya, Vol. II, Book XV, p. 334) "signifies the appropriation of any particular thing in such a way that the appropriator's right in it shall still continue, and the advantage of it go to some charitable purpose in the manner of a loan." There is a difference of opinion as to whether Hanifa considered wakf to be valid, and we find it stated that "the most approved authorities however declare it to be valid according to him, but since (like a loan) it is not of an absolute nature, the appropriator is held to be at liberty to resume it, and the sale or gift of it is consequently lawful." But according to his disciples (Abu Yusuf and Abu Mahomed), Hedaya, p. 335, "wakf signifies the appropriation of a particular article in such a manner as subjects it to the rules of divine property, whence the appropriator's right in it is extinguished, and it becomes a property of God by the advantage of it resulting to his creatures." "The two disciples therefore," so says the Hedaya, "hold appropriation to be absolute; and consequently that it cannot be resumed, or disposed of by gift or sale, and inheritance also does not obtain with respect to it."

The Hedaya then gives (pp. 335—337) the respective arguments of Abu Hanifa and his two disciples; it is unnecessary to refer to them at any length, but it may be useful to refer to one of the arguments of the two disciples. And it is this—"There is a necessity for the appropriation being absolute in order that the merit of it may result for ever to the appropriator; and this necessity is to be answered only by the appropriator relinquishing his right in what he appropriates, and dedicating it solely to God, [181] which dedication, as being agreeable to law in the same manner as that of a mosque, must therefore be made in the same mode."

There was, however, a difference of opinion between the two disciples in a most important matter in this connection; Abu Yusuf asserting that "the right of property is extinguished upon the instant of his saying 'I have appropriated' (and such is also the opinion of Shafei), "because that is a dereliction of property, in the same manner as a manumission"; Mahomed, on the other hand, maintaining that "it is not extinguished until he appoint a procurator, and deliver it over to him, and decrees are passed upon this principle": "The reason of this," says Hedaya (p. 337), "is that the right of God cannot be established in an appropriated article but by implication, in the consignment of it to his creature; (as a transfer to the Almighty, who is himself the proprietor of all things, although it cannot be effected actually and expressly, yet it may be so dependently), it therefore becomes subject to the rules of divine property dependently, and consequently resembles Zakat and alms gift."

The Hedaya refers to another difference of opinion between Hanifa and Mahomed on the one hand, and Abu Yusuf on the other, and that is with regard to the question whether the appropriation is valid unless the appropriator destines the ultimate application to objects not liable to become extinct. (Hedaya, p. 341). Abu Yusuf maintained that "where the appropriator names an object liable to termination (as if he were to say 'I have appropriated to Zeyd') it is valid, and after the death of Zeyd it passes as an appropriation to the poor, although the appropriator had not named them. The argument of Hanifa and Mahomed upon this point is that appropriation requires an extinction of right of property, without a transfer of it, and as this, like manumission, is of perpetual nature, it follows that if a thing be appropriated to a finite object, the appropriation is imperfect, whence it is that an appropriation is rendered void by making it temporary in the same manner as a sale is made void by limiting its duration." The argument of Abu Yusuf in this connection was that "the design of the appropriator is to perform an act of piety acceptable to God, and this is fully answered in either case; because piety on some occasions may consist in the appropriation to a terminable object, [182] and it may at other times consist in the appropriation of a thing to an interminable object; the appropriation is valid in both instances."

The Hedaya deals with another matter, in which there also existed a difference of opinion, and that is in regard to the question whether the reservation by the appropriator of the whole or part of the property appropriated during his own life-time of his Amwalid (slave who has borne her master a child) or Moddabir (slave who has been promised emancipation) is valid. Abu Yusuf was of opinion that such reservation was lawful, while Mahomed was of a contrary opinion: he held it to be unlawful, and the Hedaya states (p. 349) "such is the opinion of Hilla Kazi and Shaifei. The argument in favour of Mahomed's opinion is stated to be—

"That appropriation is a gratuitous act, effected in the transfer of property to God, by delivering over the thing appropriated to a mutwalli or procurator; (for a transfer to the Almighty, who is himself the proprietor of all things, although it cannot be effected actually and expressly, yet it may be so dependently); and the reserving of the whole or part of the income arising from it to his own use is repugnant to this, because the delivery cannot be made to himself. The case therefore resembles the reserve of an alms gift, and also the reserve of a part of a mosque; in other words, if a person were to assign certain property to the poor, stipulating at the same time that his right in part of it shall continue, the alms under such a condition are unlawful; or if the founder of a mosque stipulate that his right in a part of the mosque shall continue, this opposes the legality of the whole foundation; and so also in the case in question."

"First.—The prophet was accustomed himself to consume the revenue arising from what he had appropriated. Now the use would not at any rate be lawful, unless the appropriator had previously stipulated it for himself at the time of appropriation; the prophet consuming the revenue, therefore, argues that it is lawful for an appropriator to reserve that to his own use.

"Secondly.—Appropriation implies the owner of a property destroying his right in that property by a transfer of it to God, under some pious intention (as was formerly stated), and such being the case, where an appropriator reserves a part or the whole of the revenue arising from what he appropriates to his own use, it follows that, in so doing, he reserves to himself a thing which is the property of God (not that he reserves to himself what is his own), and a person's reserving to himself a thing which is the property of God is lawful; thus if a man build a caravanserai, or construct a reservoir, or give ground for a burial place, reserving to himself the right [183] of residing in the caravanserai, or of drinking water out of the reservoir, or of interment in the burial place, it is lawful, and so likewise in the case in question.

"Thirdly.—The design in appropriation is the performance of an act of piety; and piety is consistent with the circumstance of a person reserving the revenue to his own use, as the prophet has said "A man giving a subsistence to himself is giving alms."

With reference to the last passage just quoted, Mr. Hamilton makes the following observation:—

"As where (for instance) a man appropriates the whole of his property, thus reducing himself to poverty; in which case the charity is as effectual with respect to him (where he necessarily reserves a sufficiency from the product for his own sustenance) as with respect to any other pauper."

I have thought it necessary to refer at some length to the Hedaya, which is a book of great authority among the Mahomedans, as also to the arguments of the learned doctors on the subject, in order to see what is the true foundation upon which a wakf. I mean valid wakf, depends; and that is, as I understand it, the dedication solely to God with a pious intention, and the total relinquishment of the wakf's right in the property appropriated.

It will be observed that some of the Imams were so very particular about this that they held that the ultimate application of the income of the property dedicated must be expressly to objects not liable to extinction, that the appropriator must sever all connection with the property, and that the reservation by him of the income for his own use or for the use of his own people during their lives is invalid.

Baillie in his Digest of Mahomedan Law treats the subject very nearly in the same manner as the Hedaya does. The book is a translation of the Fatawa-Alamgiri, and that treatise in Book 9, Chap. 1, after giving the meaning of wakf according to Abu Hanifa, states:—

"According to the two disciples, wakf is the retention of a thing in the implied ownership of Almighty God, in such a manner that its profits may revert to or be applied for the benefit of mankind, and the appropriation is obligatory, so that the thing appropriated can neither be sold, nor given, nor inherited. In the Ayoon and Yutuma it is stated that the Fatawa is in conformity with the opinion of the two disciples."

[184] And then, in speaking of what is called the pillars of wakf, the Fatawa-Alamgiri says (quoting from Baillie) that "the cause or motive is a seeking for nearness; and Baillie, with reference to this passage, in his note at the foot of p. 559 (2nd Edition), says 'that it is intended to refer to Almighty God.' And we find it stated at p. 576 in the Chapter entitled 'of the proper objects of appropriation,' that—

"An appropriation for the rich alone is not lawful. An appropriation for travellers is lawful; but it is to be applied to the poor among them, exclusively of the rich. And if one should say to perform the hujj every year with the produce, or 'to bestow every year in charity instead of my sins of omission' or 'to pay my debts,' it would be lawful, if the ultimate destination were a perpetuity for the poor."

And lower down in the same page it is said "In the Book of wakf by Hullal, it is stated that an appropriation for the paralyzed is valid, and should be applied to the poor among them, exclusively of the rich."

In Macnaghten's Principles of Mahomedan Law, in the chapter "on endowments" at p. 69, it is stated:—

"An endowment signifies the appropriation of property to the service of God, when the right of the appropriator becomes divested and the profits of the property so appropriated are devoted to the benefit of mankind."

The conclusions I have drawn from an examination of the Hedaya are, I think, supported by the passages in Baillie and Macnaghten I have just referred to, and are consistent with certain other passages in Baillie, as also in Durr-ul-Mukhtar, Fatawa Kazi Khan, and Fath-ul-Kadir (books not translated or published in English), which have been brought to our notice by the learned counsel for the appellant. And in the translation of a portion of the Tahtavi which has been supplied to me by a senior translator of the High Court, I find it stated, with reference to a text favouring a wakf in favour of the rich and then in favour of the poor, that 'a wakf in favour of the rich exclusively is invalid, because kurbat (an approach to God) is required initially, and there can be no wakf unless there is benefaction. This is what is given in the Bahr-ur-Raik from Tartusi."

Bearing in mind the principles I have deduced from the Mahomedan Law authorities, let us see how the subject has been [185] dealt with by our Courts from time to time, how have they understood what is a dedication solely to God, and what is a pious intention according to the Mahomedan Law.

In the case of Moohummud Sadik (1), decided in the year 1798, the law officers, who were consulted, gave their opinion by stating "that wakf according to the opinions of Yusuf and Mahommed (which on this point are adopted as law) implies the relinquishing the proprietary right in any article of property, such as lands, tenements and the rest; and consecrating it in such manner to the service of God that it may be of benefit to men; provided always that the thing appropriated be, at the time of appropriation, the property of the appropriator, as is specially stated in the Bahr-ur-Raik."

The question which the learned Judges in that case had to consider was indeed different from the one which is now before us, but I think it may be useful to refer to the opinion of the law officers which was given and accepted in that case.

In the case of Hyatee Khanum v. Koolsoom Khanum (2), it appears that a deed of wakf purported to dedicate a certain property for the purposes of a mosque, and it provided that after defraying the charges of the establishment in keeping up the mosque, the surplus of the profits should be divided between the trustee, who in that case was the wife of the endower, and his other wives. The law officers who were consented in that case treated this deed as a deed for pious uses. The precise question which was discussed in that case by the learned Judges was somewhat different, but the wakf was upheld as regards that share of the property which it was held the endower had a right to dedicate. It will be observed that the primary object of the wakf in that case was religious, and it was only the surplus left after defraying the charges of the mosque that were to be shared by the trustee and the other widows of the endower.

The next case that I desire to refer to is that of Doe d. Jaun Beebee v. Abdollah Barber (1) decided in 1838. The deed of wakf in that case states in the first place that the endower grants [186] and disposes of the property appropriated as a pious dedication to please God, who is above all, on the following conditions:—

"I will appropriate as much of the produce thereof as is required for my own use unto the said purpose, after defraying the revenue and taxes thereof, and the remainder to hereditable and charitable purposes, and my several relatives, that is, my grandson and granddaughter and daughter-in-law and daughter's son and daughter's daughter who are now receiving maintenance, living together united in meals, shall continue to receive the same in like manner, and the power of increasing or decreasing the number of incumbents according to the increase or decrease in the produce will remain with me, and the repairs of the mosque, and salary of the mowuzz in the khattab, and other expenses connected therewith in the season of the Ramazan Mabareke and the Eed shall be defrayed from the produce, and the person, who is hereafter appointed mutwalli, will enjoy the same powers as I myself possess." (2)

The document then provides that the endower shall continue mutwalli as long as he lives, and also provides for the appointment of succeeding mutwallis, and in the third paragraph it states "after my decease, neither my heirs nor the mutwalli will have the smallest right to sell or give away or transfer the abovementioned lands in any manner; whatsoever part thereof is expended in hereditable, charitable, and benevolent purposes, shall be disbursed under my own control and direction;" and it then winds up by saying, "these few words are therefore written by way of a voucher of a pious donation to serve as a binding and decisive document when occasion requires."

The first, and I may say the main question, which was raised in that case, was as regards the construction of this document: whether it was a will or a deed of wakf. Ryan, C.J., thought it right to refer certain questions for the opinion of the Law Officers of the Court. The first question that was referred was "whether, according to Mahomedan Law, an endowment to charitable uses is valid, when qualified by a reservation of the rents and profits to the donor himself during his life." The third question was "whether the endower can lawfully constitute himself mutwalli or trustee," and the fifth question was "whether the instrument in question was a will or [187] deed of endowment." To the first question the Law Officers answered as follows:—

"There is a difference of opinion between Abu Yusuf and Mahommed touching the wakf or consecration of lands with a reservation and setting apart of any portion of the profits and produce thereof for the support of the wakif or consecrator.

(1) Fulton, 345.

(2) Fulton, 346.

"Abu Yusuf considers the act legal, and Mahommed deems it illegal. The legal opinions of most of the learned uphold the opinion of Abu Yusuf which is to be found in the Chulpee or Commentary of the Shurrai Yakya, the Fatawa Alamgiri, the Kazi Khan and the Kaffi."

The answer to the third question was—

"It is lawful for the wakf or consecrator to become mutwalli or procurator and to reserve the profits of part of the consecrated lands for his own use and his descendants, as will be found in the Hedaya, Kazi Khan, and the Alamgiri."

And the answer to the fifth question was "this paper is a deed of wakf and not a will." It would appear that the Law Officers referred in support of their answers, among others, to a passage in the Fatawa Alamgiri which runs thus :—

"Whenever a wakf is made of land or other property, and the party making the same reserves the whole of the profits thereof to himself or a part only during his own life and after that for the use of the poor, herein Abu Yusuf has said, 'this wakf is right,' and the learned of Bulluck (a town in Turan) have decided conformably to this opinion of Abu Yusuf, and the decisions are in conformity therewith, for to induce persons to wakfs. The like is to be found in the Sograh and the Nesaub, and also in the Moojmuraul only," and then referring to the Chulpee and some other books, it was stated that—

"In the opinion of Abu Yusuf it is right or lawful for the appropriator or consecrator to direct the profits to his own use and to make himself mutwalli, but not right in the opinion of Mahommed."

The Chief Justice held that the deed in question was a wakf and not a testamentary devise; and then upon the question whether the appropriator and the mutwalli could be one and the same person, and whether the appropriator could reserve a part of the property so appropriated to his own use for life, the Chief Justice in the first place referred to the conflicting opinions of Abu Yusuf and Mahommed, and then held that upon the authorities quoted by the [188] Moulvis, the opinion of Abu Yusuf should be considered as the better law and sanctioned by the more recent authorities. The Court accordingly held that the wakf was good. It will be observed that there could be no doubt that the intention of the appropriator was pious, and there were various expenses which were enjoined for the repairs of the mosque, the salary of the mowuzz, and for the Ramzan and Eed festivals.

The several members of the family who were to be maintained were expressly mentioned, and the deed does not bestow the income of the property to the descendants generation after generation, but the appropriation of a part of the income was confined expressly to certain individuals therein named. This could not possibly have the effect of creating a perpetuity in favour of the family, but upon the demise of the individuals named, the whole property would go to charitable purposes.

In the case of Jewun Doss Sahoo v. Shah Kubeer-ood-deen (1) decided by the Judicial Committee, it would appear that the grant was a Royal grant, and the produce was to be applied to charitable purposes. The deed that the Judicial Committee had to consider is the same as was the subject-matter of controversy in the case of Qadira before the Sudder Dewany Adalat (2); and having referred to the Hedaya and after considering the conflicting opinions of Abu Yusuf and Mahommed, and also referring to certain Fatwas and the decision of the Sudder Dewany Adalat in the case of Kulb Ali Hoosein v. Syf Ali (1), where the Fatwa of the Law Officers was to the effect "that the appropriation of land or other property to pious and charitable purposes is sufficient to constitute wakf without the express use of that term in the grant," the Judicial Committee held that the endowment being a perpetual wakf, any alienation of the property was invalid.

In the case of Khodabundha Khan v. Oomutul Fatima (2) the testator had during his lifetime allotted two-thirds of his property among certain heirs, and in regard to the remaining one-third he provided by a deed that from the proceeds the expenses of religious acts which it was incumbent upon him to perform, and which he had omitted, as well as those in connection [189] with the Imambara, should be performed; and the executor was enjoined to perform such religious acts; and then after making certain provisions by way of pensions to certain parties, he provided that the surplus should belong to Mussumat Janee Khanum, and after her demise, to Tussuduck Hossain. The learned Judges held that this was an absolute devise in favour of Tussuduck Hossain subject to certain trusts and a life interest in Janee Khanum and that the deed did not create a wakf, for, as they observe, referring to the case of Moohummud Sadik (3) "that the word wakf imports property to which the appropriator has relinquished his right and which is consecrated in such a manner to the service of God that it may be of benefit to men."

In the case of Dalrymple v. Khoondkar Azeezul Islam (4) it was held that "if an endowment be wholly wakf, i.e., if all the profits arising therefrom are devoted to religious purposes, the mutwalli is not competent to grant a lease extending beyond his lifetime. But if the office of mutwalli be hereditary and he has a beneficial interest in the endowed property, such property must be considered as heritable property burdened with certain trusts." And in the case of Khaja Surwar Hossein v. Khaja Syed Hossein Khan (5), where a question was raised whether the property, the subject-matter of the suit, was wakf or not, the learned Judges defined the words "wakf property" thus:—"Property devoted to the deity on relinquishment of proprietary right;" and they held that the party from whom the plaintiff in that case claimed held the property subject only to certain trusts, and they referred to the case of Moohummud Sadik in the first volume of the Select Reports.

The next case that I shall refer to is Bibee Kuneez Fatima v. Bibee Saheba Jan (6). There was an ayma grant by a certain Mogul Emperor at a quit rent. The learned Judges (Kemp and Glover, JJ.) in delivering judgment in the case made the following observations:—"Now it is very clear that this is not a grant constituting a wakf. There is no dedication of properties solely to the worship of God or to any religious or charitable purposes." And they held that the grant was to an individual in his own right [190] and for the purpose of furnishing the means for the subsistence of the grantee and nothing further, although the consideration for the grant was the charitable disposition of the grantee and the expenses which he apparently voluntarily incurred in supporting poor students, and food and shelter to travellers.

In the case of Khajah Hossein Ali v. Shahzadee Hazara Begum (1), where the deed of wakf provided for the performance of certain ceremonies at the great Mahomedan festivals for the relief of the poor and the travellers, and where after payment of the expenses to be incurred for these purposes, and of the Government revenue, the residue was to be expended in the maintenance of certain specified relatives, it was held that it was a good wakf; and Mr. Justice Kemp, after referring to the conditions in the deed, observed as follows:—

"It will be seen that the poor are provided for, which is the primary object of every wakf. Settlements in favour of relations who are specifically named are made. Such an endowment is in every respect a lawful one under the Mahomedan Law.

In the case of Muzhur-ool-Huq v. Puhraj Ditarey Mohapattur (2) decided by Kemp and Jackson, JJ., where the endowment was made for the purpose of supporting a mosque, feeding travellers, educating poor students, and so forth, and where it was provided that from the remaining profits the expenses for marriages, burials, and circumcisions of the members of the family of the mutwalli were to be provided, the wakf was held to be valid, and Kemp, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed as follows:—

"We are of opinion that the mere charge upon the profits of the estate of certain items which must in the course of time necessarily cease, being confined to one family and for particular purposes, and which after they lapse will leave the whole profits intact for the original purposes for which the endowment was made, does not render the endowment invalid under the Mahomedan Law. A person may make an endowment settling lands on himself and enjoying the profits during his lifetime, and after his lifetime devoting the profits to the support of the poor, the main object of the Mahomedan Law being that the profits of the land endowed should be endowed for a purpose which always remains in existence. Now the poor are always [191] with us, and therefore a man making an endowment and enjoying the profits during his lifetime to go to the poor after his death, does not make the endowment for an uncertain or non-existent object."

It will be observed that in the deed in question, provision was made for the expenses of marriages, burials, and circumcisions of the members of the family of the mutwalli. This I take it was a provision confined to a certain number of individuals and the charges in respect of which "must," as stated by Kemp, J., "in the course of time necessarily cease, leaving the whole of the profits intact for the original purposes for which the endowment was made;" and the learned Judge expressly remarked that the main object of the Mahomedan Law is that the profits of the land should be endowed for a purpose which always remains existent. This is a decision upon which, as will be seen hereafter, the Judicial Committee, in the recent case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (3) expressly relies.

In the case of Doyal Ohand Mullick v. Syed Keramat Ali (4) where the endowment was created for keeping up a mosque and for certain charitable purposes, and the deed provided that the appropriator's son and son-in-law should appropriate his goods and chattels to the performance of the religious and charitable purposes mentioned, and to the maintenance of his widow and two female slaves, and that they should share the balance between themselves, it was held to be a valid wakf; and Glover, J., in delivering judgment, says among other matters:—

"There might possibly be some question as to whether all the arrangements made by the testator in the wasiutnama come under the denomination of wakf, using the word in its strictest sense as something appropriated to works of religion."

And further on he says, referring to Baillie's Digest upon the matter, and to the fact that a mosque was to be erected and so forth, that "that would be a proper object of Mahomedan faith, and therefore a proper object of wakf, for it would be a seeking for nearness."

[192] In the case of Abdul Ganne Kasam v. Hussen Miya Rahimtula (1) Melvill, J., in delivering judgment, after referring to the authorities on the subject, observes as follows:—

"We think that the balance of authority is strongly in favour of the conclusion that to constitute a valid wakf there must be a dedication of the property solely to the worship of God or to religious or charitable purposes."

And later on he says:—

"We think that it is necessary in order to constitute a wakf that the endowment should be to religious and charitable uses; and that it is not sufficient that the mere term wakf should be used in the grant. To hold otherwise would be to enable every person by a mere verbal fiction to create a perpetuity of any description."

There the deed of wakf provided that during the lifetime of the appropriators, they should live on the property with their families and children, and that they should not be allowed to sell the property, and that when any of the appropriators should die, his wife and children should remain in the house, and so on. This deed was held to be invalid.

In the case of Fatma Bibi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay (2), where a certain Mahomedan young lady conveyed property to trustees upon trust, upon the condition that during her lifetime the trustees should pay the rents and profits to her for her sole and separate use, and after her death to her children, grandchildren and other descendants for ever; that the rents and profits only were to be distributed and the corpus was to be kept intact; and that on failure of descendants, the rents and profits should be expended in charitable purposes, such as expenses of poor pilgrims, and so forth, it was held by West, J., to constitute a good wakf and as such irrevocable. This case, no doubt, is in favour of the contention of the appellant. On turning, however, in this connection to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (3) it would be seen that their Lordships regarded some of the observations by West, J. in the case of Fatma Bibi as extra-judicial.

[193] The next case that I should like to refer to is that of Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Huq (4). The deed in this case was to the effect that the appropriator had made a wakf of a certain property in children, with the income of the property to have kathom recited in a mosque, give food to the mollahs, and where the settler reserved to herself an option of dealing with the property as a special fund for the maintenance of her children, if any, it was held that this did not create a valid wakf. Ayyar, J., observes—

"The criterion is whether from the contents of the document it could reasonably be inferred that a wakf or an endowment for religious and charitable use was intended. It should also be borne in mind that the creation of a perpetuity, except for and in connection with the ultimate destination of property to such use, would be open to objection."

And later on he says:—

"It seems to me that unless the ultimate application of the property to religious or charitable use can be predicted with certainty from the deed of settlement, it cannot be said that one essential ingredient, namely, application to charity, is not wanting and that a valid wakf is created."

[195] In the case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdry v. Amarchand Kundu (1), which came before the Judicial Committee, the deed purported to dedicate certain properties for defraying the expenses of a brick-built musjid and two madrassas and a lodging-house belonging to the appropriator, and it provided that the grantor's three sons should be appointed mutwalli in gradation of rank; that the mutwalli, after defraying the expenses of the mosaref and the necessary collections of the zemindari, should take from the residue his monthly allowance, pay over the allowance due to the naibmut-walli, naib-ul-maniab and his daughters, as specified in the schedule, and continue to perform the stated religious works according to custom, and keep his eye to the legitimate objects of the mosaref; that the surplus that might be left after meeting the above-mentioned expenses should be added to the wakf estate; that the persons getting monthly allowances should have no power to assign or charge them in any manner; and that the mutwalli should have the power to increase or decrease the allowances of the members of the family as well as their own salaries. The Judicial Committee observed as follows:—

"Their Lordships do not attempt in this case to lay down any precise definition of what will constitute a wakf, or to determine how far provisions for the grantor's family may be engrafted on such a settlement without destroying its character as a charitable gift. They are not called upon by the facts of this case to decide whether a gift of property to charitable uses which is only to take effect after the failure of the grantor's descendants, is an illusory gift, a point on which there have been conflicting decisions in India. On the one hand their Lordships think there is good ground for holding that provisions for the family out of the grantor's property may be consistent with the gift of it as wakf. On this point they agree with and adopt the views of the Calcutta High Court stated by Mr. Justice Kemp in one of the cited cases." Muzhurool Huq v. Phuraj Ditarey Mohapattur (2).

And then their Lordships referred to the following portion of that learned Judge's judgment:—

"We are of opinion that the mere charge upon the profits of the estate of certain items, which must in the course of time necessarily cease, being confined to one family, and which after they lapse will leave the whole property intact for the original purposes for which the endowment was

(1) 17 C. 498=17 I. A. 29.

(2) 13 W. R. 235.

[196] made, does not render the endowment invalid under the Mahomedan law."

Their Lordships further observed—

"On the other hand they have not been referred to, nor can they find, any authority showing that according to Mahomedan Law, a gift is good as a wakf unless there is a substantial dedication of the property to charitable uses at some period of time or other."

And they proceeded to add—

"Their Lordships therefore look to see whether the property in question is in substance given to charitable uses."

Then, with reference to the particular deed before them, they observed as follows :—

"There is a great deal in the deed which is designed for aggrandisement of the family property and for keeping it perpetually in the hands of the family. The provisions for accumulation in para. 4, the attempt to save salaries from alienations and from creditors in para. 5, the provisions for appointment of male issue as mutwallis in para. 3, coupled with the allowances to other male issue and to wives and daughters of such issues in paras. 7 and 8, all indefinite in point of duration, and, as their Lordships think, intended to be commensurate with the existence of the family; the direction in para. 7 that new mutwallis should bring all the private acquisitions into a settlement,—all these things point to the same end, the mere use of property available for the family."

And later on they say :—

"If indeed it was shown that the customary uses were of such magnitude as to exhaust the income or to absorb the bulk of it, such a circumstance would have its weight in ascertaining the intention of the grantor. But the Court in the execution proceedings considered that the charitable outlays which he contemplated were of small amount compared with the property. The Subordinate Judge in this suit does not deal with the matter. The High Court says that the plaintiff has carefully withheld evidence as to value, and believes it was much more than he represented. For all that appears there is no reason to suppose that the charitable use would absorb more than a devout and wealthy gentleman might find it becoming to spend in that way."

The conclusion at which their Lordships arrived was that the deed in question did not constitute a valid wakf.

This decision by the Privy Council was followed in the case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhry v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1) by [197] Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Trevelyan, and that is one of the two cases referred to in the referring order. The language and the contents of the deed, which the learned Judges had to consider in that case, were to some extent similar to the terms of the deed now before us; and the Court after reviewing all the previous cases on the subject held that the deed did not constitute a valid wakf.

There are two other cases recently decided in this Court, one, Piran v. Abdool Karim (2), which however, does not really touch the question we have to consider in this case; and the other, the case referred to in the referring order, Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose (3). In this latter case the facts were that two Mahomedan ladies were owners of a certain taluq. They purported to make a wakf of that property by a deed. One of the ladies subsequently died; thereupon the other became under the terms of the deed the mutwalli. She entrusted the management at first to her husband, and after his dismissal, to the first two defendants in the suit by an am-mukhtarnama. The property was leased out afterwards to the third defendant, who was a brother of the first two defendants. It appears that the zemindar recovered a rent decree due on account of the taluq against Kamrunnissa, and the decree not having been paid up, the taluq was sold in execution of the decree at a time when Kamrunnissa was dead, and was purchased by the first three defendants in the name of the fourth. Thereupon a suit was brought by Kamrunnissa's husband, it being alleged that the conduct of the defendants in allowing the property to be sold and in purchasing it themselves was in breach of the fiduciary position in which they stood, and that, therefore, they were not entitled to retain it, and that the sale itself was a fraudulent one. Ameer Ali, J. differed from the District Judge as to whether there existed a fiduciary relationship between the plaintiff and the defendants, and whether the fiduciary relation that had existed between Kamrunnissa and the defendants had come to an end upon her death. Upon both these points the learned Judge held for the plaintiff, and he was of opinion that it did not lie in the mouths of the defendants to say that their fiduciary relationship was one of a personal character, and that, [198] therefore, whether there was an actual fraud on the part of the defendants or not, the plaintiff as representing the endowment was entitled to demand a reconveyance just in the same way as Kamrunnissa could if she had been alive. Having thus decided the case in favour of the plaintiff, the learned Judge proceeded to consider whether the view taken by the Judge of the Court below as to the effect of the wakf was correct or not. With great deference to the learned Judge I should say that he was not called upon, regard being had to the conclusion that he had already arrived at, to discuss the question of Mahomedan Law that was raised in the case, and upon which the District Judge had no doubt expressed an opinion. But however that may be, the learned Judge did go into the question, and after considering various treatises on Mahomedan Law, he held that the deed of wakf was a valid one. So far as the deed which came up before the learned Judges in that case is concerned, I may be permitted to say that the conclusion at which they arrived is unassailable, but there are various observations in the judgment, the propriety of which has been questioned before us, but which I think I am not called upon in this case to discuss.

I have now referred to all the cases which seemed to me to bear upon the question that has been raised in the case now before us, and I think I may say that all the cases, with the exception of the two cases decided by West, J. and Farran, J. respectively, and with the exception perhaps of the case in Fulton's Reports, all the other cases take but one view, viz., that the primary object of the endowment must be either religious or charitable, and that the intention must be a pious intention in the sense in which that expression is ordinarily understood, and not an intention to benefit the settler's family only. If the primary object be either religious or charitable, I take it that the dedication is solely to God with a pious intention, and that it has the effect of totally extinguishing the wakif's right in the property dedicated.

So far as the case in Fulton's Reports is concerned, there was a pious intention, and although the appropriator reserved to himself the power of appropriating for his own use whatever amount he might require, still the remainder was to be applied to charitable and religious purposes, as also to the maintenance of the members [199] of the family named therein. This was not, as I understand it, in perpetuity, and the whole of the proceeds would in no distant time go to charitable and religious purposes.

The deed of the 4th Aughran 1281 which is now before us, in the preamble, sets out distinctly what is the main object of the endowment. The settler states, "I now think it advisable to lay down, according to our Mahomedan sharah, certain rules in respect of the properties mentioned in the schedule given below, whereby my name and memory may be perpetuated for ever, my sons and daughters and their descendants may be decently maintained out of the income of those properties, and the properties may not suffer in consequence of disputes among my sons and daughters aforesaid or their descendants." He then says that he makes a "permanent wakf of the undermentioned properties in favour of my two sons, etc., and after them the successive descendants of my said sons and daughters, and on their death in favour of the poor, the indigent and the beggars residing in the town of Dacca." In para. 1 the appropriator says, "after my death whoever may be the mutwalli shall, out of the net income or balance remaining after payment of the sudder revenue * * * spend Rs. 50 annually in the name of Allah (i.e., for religious purposes) and pay Rs. 100 annually to my eldest son, Rs. 100 annually to my youngest son, Rs. 50 to each of my said daughters, and Rs. 50 annually to my said wife." The deed then states that the balance is to be added to the wakf fund; that after the death of his wife, the Rs. 50 payable to her is to be added to the wakf fund; and that on the death of any of the sons and daughters, the money payable to the deceased is to be divided among his or her children according to Mahomedan Law, but that in the event of any such person dying without issue, the amount payable to him or her is to be credited to the wakf estate. It then provides that none of the persons to whom an allowance is made shall be competent to transfer his or her allowance, and that the said allowance should not be attached or sold in execution of any decree for anybody's debt.

The next paragraph provides that the mutwalli for the time being shall use his name as mutwalli on the Mofussil, Hazuri, and Court papers connected with wakf properties; and after meeting out of the income of those properties the expenses mentioned [200] above, he shall purchase immoveable property with the balance that may accumulate for the benefit of the wakf.

The 3rd paragraph provides that whoever will be the mutwalli shall in the name of God give away Rs. 50 in charity to the poor, and that one student must always be maintained.

The next paragraph provides for the appointment of mutwallis, and says that none except some one or other among the children of the sons and daughters shall be mutwalli, and that no outsider shall be appointed as such; and the fifth and last paragraph winds up by saying that after his death the mutwallis shall be competent to spend any amount of money they think proper for the sake of his salvation.

Now, no doubt, in this deed the word wakf is used, and there is a provision in the first paragraph to spend Rs. 50 in the name of Allah, and in the third paragraph the mutwalli should give away Rs. 50 in the name of God in charity to the poor, and that one student should be maintained; but the question is what was the true intention of Bikani Mia when he executed the deed of the 4th Aughran 1281. Was his intention to dedicate the property solely to God or to create a perpetuity in the family? The Court of first instance, as I have already observed, came to a distinct finding that the endowment was nominal. The learned Judge for reasons somewhat different from those given by the Court of first instance has arrived at the same conclusion. He has referred to various circumstances indicating what the intention of Bikani Mia was, and one of the arguments used by him is that there was no substantial dedication to charitable uses. In this latter respect, I take it, he has only followed the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (1), but whether he is right in this or not, it seems to me that the Judge has come to a finding that the intention of the grantor was not a pious intention, and that the document was never intended to be used, and was never acted upon, as a valid wakf. I take it that the learned Judge has come to this conclusion upon the internal evidence afforded by the deed itself, and with reference to the acts of Bikani himself subsequent [201] to the execution of the deed. If the question in every case is one of intention, I think that the conclusion arrived at by the Judge cannot be assailed. The deed was, according to the Judge, really a family settlement with a charge upon it to the extent of Rs. 75 a year for charitable purposes, and that charge the Judge has upheld. I desire here to point out that many of the observations made by the Judicial Committee in the case of Ahsanulla will fit in this case; and I fail too see how, if the Privy Council were right in that case (and it must be taken that they were right), we can hold that the deed before us created a valid wakf.

It was strongly contended before us by the learned counsel for the appellant that a settlement of property by way of making provision for one's support and for the support of his descendants, how low soever, is itself a pious and charitable act according to the Mahomedan Law, and therefore the deed in question cannot be set aside upon the ground that there was no pious object in view, there being a contingent reversion to the poor; and certain passages from some of the Mahomedan Law Treatises, especially Book IX, Chap. III, ss. 2 and 3 of Baillie's Digest, were quoted before us in support of that position.

These passages might possibly support this view, but that is not the view which has been accepted in our Courts, at any rate in this side of India ever since the year 1798 down to the present time. In two or three cases only, no doubt, the wakf was affirmed when there was provision made for the support of the settler and the members of his family; but, as I have already observed, in those cases the persons to be maintained out of the produce of the property were distinctly mentioned, and the property was not to go down to the descendants, how low soever, leaving the poor a very remote contingent reversion. Abu Yusuf, in one of the arguments which I have already referred to, said that piety was consistent with the circumstance of a person reserving the revenue to his own use, because the prophet had said, "a man giving subsistence to himself was giving alms." I understand this passage to mean that when a property is really dedicated to God, a man might reserve the revenue thereof for his own use during his lifetime, and the decision of Mr. Justice Kemp [202] in Muzhurool Huq v. Puhraj Ditarey Mohapattur (2) is, I think, consistent with this argument. However that may be, it seems to me that the case is different where a person consecrates his property not really to God, reserving to himself and to certain persons named the income thereof during their lifetime, but with a view of benefiting himself and his descendants only, ties up the property in such a manner that the income would go to him and to his heir in perpetuity, the reversion to the poor being mentioned simply to enable the settlor to describe the settlement as wakf. And in this respect it seems to me that we have to guide ourselves by the interpretation which the expression "pious intention" has received for a long series of years in our Courts; and it is too late now to disturb the rulings upon that point.

(1) 17 C. 498 = 17 I. A. 28.

(2) 13 W. R. 295.

In the case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (1), already referred to before the Privy Council, Lord Hobhouse is reported in the course of argument to have expressed himself thus:—

"There is no trace in these cases of the doctrine that a man's gift to his own family is itself a pious use."

And Lord Watson is reported to have said:—

"There must be complete dedication to make a wakf, the deed must not give a mere spes successionis."

In the case of Deedar Hossein v. Zuhoor-oon-nissa (2), where the question was one of succession according to the Imamiah Law, the Judicial Committee, with reference to s. 15, Reg. IV of 1793, observed as follows:—

"If each sect has its own rule according to the Mahomedan Law, that rule should be followed with respect to litigants of that sect. Such is the natural construction of this regulation, and it accords with the just and equitable principle upon which it is founded, and gives effect to the usages of each religion which it was evidently its object to preserve unchanged; we see no doubt therefore that we ought to interpret the Regulation of 1793 to adopt the usage or law of each sect, unless there be a course of Judicial decision or established practice to the contrary."

[203] In the case of Chotay Lall v. Chunnoo Lall (3), with reference to the question of the Hindu law that was raised in the case, the Judicial Committee said:—

"Their Lordships think that after the series of decisions which have occurred in Bengal and Madras, it would be unsafe to open them by giving effect to arguments founded on a different interpretation of old and obscure texts; and they agree in the observations which are to be found at the end of the judgment of the High Court, that Courts ought not to unsettle a rule of inheritance affirmed by a long course of decisions unless indeed it is manifestly opposed to law and reason. They do not think this rule is opposed to the spirit and the principle of the law of Mitakshara; on the contrary, it appears to them to be in accordance with them."

And in the judgment in the same case in this Court, Couch, C.J., observed (4)—

"Certainly when we have the various decisions of the Sudder Court here upon the law which is applicable in this suit, and the decision of the High Court at Madras upon a similar law, in which no substantial difference can be pointed out with reference to this question, we ought not to unsettle the law which appears to have been received on this side of India for the last 50 years on account of the opinion of a Judge of the High Court at Bombay, however learned he may be. The consequences at the present time would be most serious. Courts ought always to bear in mind that it is no light matter to reverse a series of decisions which must have been acted upon for many years and have been regarded as declaring what was the law."

That being the view which both the Privy Council and this Court have expressed more than once, I do not think it would be right now to unsettle the law as it has been adopted here for a long series of years, merely because there may be texts in the Mahomedan books which favour the idea that a settlement upon one's self and his children in perpetuity is a pious act.

There is one other matter to which I should like to refer in this connection, although, perhaps, in the view I have already expressed, it may not be necessary to do so, and it is this—Bearing in mind that the plaintiff is a person of a different persuasion from the defendant, and that the Mahomedan Law according to Act XII of 1837, s. 37, is not to be applied in this case strictly, but tempered by the rule of justice, equity and good conscience, is [204] it right that we should give effect to this deed so as to deprive the creditor of his remedy? It will be observed that there is no disposition of the proceeds of the property during the settlor's lifetime. It is only after his death that the income is to be partly applied to the payment of fixed allowances and to the small charities mentioned, and the balance is to be accumulated to the credit of the Trust Fund. It seems to me that, at any rate, so far as the proceeds of the property during the lifetime of Bikani Mia are concerned, they are seizable by the creditor for the satisfaction of his debt, and it seems to be a matter for serious consideration whether in a case like this, where a person, in the name of wakf, makes provisions for his family in perpetuity and enjoys the property himself, as before, as owner, it would be just, equitable, or consonant with good conscience that the settlement should be a protection against the claim of a creditor of a different persuasion.

In the view I have expressed, I am of opinion that these appeals should be dismissed.

As regards the cross-objection to the decree of the District Judge, relating to the charge of Rs. 75 a year upon the property of Bikani Mia, I think that it should be disallowed. By the deed on the 4th Aughran 1281, Bikani did create a valid charge in favour of the poor and students to the extent of the amount just mentioned, and there is no reason why this charge should not be affirmed.

TREVELYAN, J.—In this first place I think that no question of law really arises in these second appeals. There can be no doubt upon the authorities quoted to us at the bar that if it appears from the evidence in the case and the conduct of the supposed wakf that he never had any real intention to create a wakf, no such wakf can be held to be created, although he may have purported to create one. Apart from the other authorities cited, Mr. Ameer Ali at p. 349 of his Tagore Law lectures applies to wakfs the principle applied to Hindu endowments in the case of Gunga Narain Sircar v. Brindabun Chunder Kur Chowdhry (1), and I agree with him in thinking that it is so applicable. It was there held that the tests of a bona fide or a nominal endowment [205] are: "how did the founder treat this property, or how have his descendants treated it; has the income of the endowed lands been continuously applied to the object of dedication?"

The Court of first instance has held very clearly that the alleged wakif had no intention of creating a wakf, and that the document was a nominal one, i.e., a mere sham.

This he has held from the conduct of the alleged wakif about the time of the execution of the wakfnama. The District Judge on appeal has not said that he agrees with this finding, but he nowhere says that he dissents from it. He says that the excuse given by the appellant for not registering his title as mutwalli is a very lame one, and also says that as the income consists in part of rents of houses and lands in Dacca, it is difficult to conceive of an individual who really intended to make a wakf, being unable to produce a single scrap of paper to show his outlay and accounts. Mr. Hill suggested that these observations in the judgment were not intended as the Judge's own observations, but as the contentions of the respondent before him. I do not agree to this. I think they are his observations with reference to the contentions which are there set forth. I am borne out in this view by the sixth ground of appeal which shews how the judgment was first understood by the legal advisers of the appellant. With regard to what was done by Haji Bikani Mia, the Judge says—

"The evidence in fact shows that much that is relied on as indicating a compliance with the objects stated in the deed are acts which are commonly performed by all pious and well-to-do Mahomedans without any coercion."

The Judge finds that the portion of the deed as to Rs. 50 for the poor and as to the provision for a student has been acted upon, and was intended to be carried out from the commencement. As I understand the Judge's findings of fact, this was the only portion which was intended to be carried out. As he in effect finds that the main portion of the deed was never intended to be acted upon, and that the appellant never treated himself as mutwalli, but only made those gifts as any other pious Mahomedan would do, I do not think that the Judge ought to have given any effect to the deed, and he ought not to have made the charge which he has made. [206] The circumstances of the High Court case to which he refers were entirely different. In that case the Judges gave full effect to the deed so far as in law it could be given effect to, and acted on the assumption that the donor intended to make the gift which by the deed he purported to make. On the facts found by the Judge, I think he ought to have dismissed in toto the appeals to him. Having regard to the recent Privy Council decisions it is clear that we are not entitled in second appeal to disturb in any way findings of fact. Although in consequence of the findings of fact the question referred does not, in my opinion, arise in this case, and therefore it would not be necessary to express an opinion on it, it is right that we should consider it, as my learned colleagues do not all take the view that Mr. Beighton intended to determine the questions of fact, in the way in which I think he has determined them. The question referred to the Full Bench by the Division Bench is whether the disposition of the grantor's property under the deed of the 4th Aughran 1281 was a valid wakf of the property dealt with by the deed. The learned Judges, who referred this case, give as their reason for referring it, that they are unable to reconcile the case of Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose (1), decided on the 18th of March last by Mr. Justice O'Kinealy and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, with the judgment of Mr. Justice Tottenham and myself in Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1). In his judgment in the case to which I have referred, Mr. Justice Ameer Ali points out that the facts in the case before Mr. Justice Tottenham and myself do not bear the least analogy to the case before him.

He, however, makes observations in that case which are calculated to throw a doubt upon the views expressed in the judgment of Mr. Justice Tottenham and myself.

The terms of the wakfnama in the present case do not, I think, resemble those of the wakfnamas in either of the cases cited, and after hearing the argument in this case, I think it would have been possible for the referring Bench to have decided this case without referring any question to the Full Bench. Although the learned Judges, who referred this case, have not expressed the point (if any) upon which they differ from either of the cases [207] mentioned in their order of reference, I understand that this reference has been made in consequence of the conflict between Mr. Justice Ameer Ali's observations and those made by Mr. Justice Tottenham.

I agree in thinking that, having regard to the decision of the Privy Council, in Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (2), and to the decisions of this Court, the wakfnama in the present case cannot be treated as containing valid provisions, and I hold accordingly. I need not refer to the cases, as they are discussed at length by my learned colleagues.

There can be no doubt that in questions of Mahomedan and Hindu Law alike, the course of the decisions of the Privy Council and of this Court must first be considered. Attempts to disturb the decisions by reference to texts and the vernacular writings of ancient lawyers tend only to unsettle the law and to disturb the rights of persons who have acted according to the decisions of the Court. The Mahomedan lawyers of this day would be more likely to advise their clients and draw instruments in accordance with the view taken by this Court, than with regard to ancient fatwas and text books.

In a Hindu case, Hori Dasi Dabi v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (3), Mr. Justice Louis Jackson says—

"I confess that it seems to me to be among the advantages for which the people of this country have in these days to be thankful, that their legal controversies, the determination of their rights and their status, have passed into the domain of lawyers, instead of pundits and casuists, and in my opinion, the case before us may very well be decided on the authority of cases without following Sreenath, Achyatanand and others through the mazes of their speculations on the origin and theory of gift."

I would respectfully appropriate these observations to the present case.

As I have said, I agree in thinking that the present wakfnama is invalid. I also agree in thinking that it is unnecessary to decide the question whether a gift to a man's descendants for ever is good, provided there be a subsequent gift to the poor or for other religious or charitable purposes. I use the word "charitable" in [208] the English sense, as that is the sense in which it is used in the decisions in English Courts and in the translations into English. We have been invited to use the word "charitable" in what is called the Mahomedan sense, i.e., to use a word in another language which may mean another thing.

(1) 18 C. 399.

(2) 17 C. 498=17 I. A. 28.

(3) 5 C. 228 (242).

All I need say as to this question is, that after a long argument in this case I see no reason to depart from the decision at which I recently arrived in the case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1). I think that the cases cited clearly show that under the law as administered by this Court a wakf is only valid if its substantial object is for a religious or charitable purpose.

I need only add with reference to the question as to whether any number of titles are dependent on wakfnamas of that description, that there is no evidence of such fact before us, that it has not been asserted at the bar, and that I have no such experience.

In my opinion this appeal should be dismissed with costs, and the cross-objection should be allowed with costs.

PRINSEP, J.—These five second appeals have been referred to a Full Bench by an order of Petheram, C.J., and Hill, J., of the 4th May last.

The cases admittedly will be governed by the same judgment.

It is stated in the order of reference that "the only question" which has been argued "before the learned Judges," and as it is admitted "that the only question in these cases, is whether the deed, dated the 4th Aughran 1281 (2), and executed by the defendant Haji Bikani Mia, constituted the properties with which it dealt wakf properties within the doctrines of Mahomedan Law."

The reason for the reference is said to be that the case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1), decided by Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Trevelyan on the 24th February 1891 and the unreported case of Meer Mahamed Israio Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose (3), decided by Mr. Justice O'Kinealy and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali on the 18th March last, are contradictory, and that as the learned Judges "are unable to reconcile the case last cited with that of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhry [209] v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1), they refer to the Full Bench the question whether the disposition of the grantor's property, made by the deed of the 4th of Aughran 1281, was a valid wakf of the property dealt with by the deed."

The terms of the original order of reference, which did not leave the appeals for the final decision of the Full Bench, but made that decision dependent entirely on an answer to the question submitted, were not in accordance with the rules of this Court, and in this respect the order of reference was amended in the course of the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant so as to leave the decision of the appeals to the Full Bench. But even as the cases thus amended were before the Full Bench, the reference was not in accordance with the rules of this Court. Those rules run thus:—

"I. Whenever one Division Court shall differ from any other Division Court upon a point of law or usage having the force of law, the case shall be referred for decision by a Full Bench.

"II. If the question arise in an appeal from appellate decree, the Court referring the case shall state the points upon which they differ from the decision of a former Division Court, and shall refer the appeal for the decision of a Full Bench.

(F.B.).

It has, however, been found convenient, in order to attain the object of the decision of cases by a Full Bench, to consider any point referred regarding which diametrically contrary opinions have been expressed by two Division Benches. Such cases have, however, become rare of late years. If therefore the two cases mentioned in the order of reference were contradictory and could not be reconciled, there would, in my opinion, in the absence of any special circumstances, be no valid objection to the hearing of these cases by the Full Bench. The object of references to a Full Bench is to settle the law for the local Court until it shall have been otherwise enunciated by a Superior Court, such as that of their Lordships of the Privy Council. It is so expressed by Peacock, C.J. in Prosunno Coomar Pal Chowdhry v. Koylash Chunder Pal Chowdhry (1). In the case before us, in my opinion—and I express it with some hesitation and with every respect to [210] that of the learned Judges who have made this reference—the reference cannot properly fulfil such an object. The case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (2), is now under appeal to Her Majesty in Council. The transcript of the record in that case was forwarded to England early in September last, and before the vacation, so that an early decision of that appeal may be shortly expected. Even, therefore, if the law were unsettled by two contradictory decisions, it is undesirable that the settlement of the point at issue should be complicated by a third decision of greater authority, probably, than either of those two decisions, but in itself not unlikely to be set aside by a superior Court, by the hearing of the appeals to be considered by the Full Bench. It is not proper that we should criticize the law laid down by a Division Bench of this Court which is under appeal to Her Majesty in Council, and more particularly when an early delivery of the judgment of that superior Court may be expected. Personally, therefore, on this ground alone, I should have preferred that these cases should not be heard by a Full Bench. Some of my colleagues, however, pressed for the trial, and I was therefore unwilling to offer any opposition.

But on another ground I think that the matter has not been properly brought before the Full Bench, and may state that this objection did not become apparent until the facts of the two cases said to be contradictory had become known in the course of the arguments of learned Counsel. For this reason I did not think it necessary to offer any objection on this ground. In the latter of the two cases, Ameer Ali, J. pointed out that the facts of the case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (2) do not bear the least analogy to the case under trial before him. The learned Judges who have referred the appeals now before us held that they were contradictory. But after a careful consideration of these cases, I have no doubt that the opinion expressed by Ameer Ali, J. is correct, and that the two cases are not contradictory because the judgments delivered proceeded on different grounds.

In the case of Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose (3) it was not absolutely necessary to consider whether the property [211] in suit was wakf. The fiduciary relation held by the defendant entitled the plaintiff to a reconveyance of the property whatever its character as wakf or not as wakf. The Court, however, proceeded afterwards to consider whether the property was wakf. And as it was pointed out by the learned Advocate-General, the remarks of the learned Judges on this part of the case were not essential to the decision. In the case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1), it was held that there was no dedication, as the Court found that the alleged appropriator never really intended to give up his proprietary right in the particular property. The deeds in the two cases were, moreover, of an entirely different character and expressed in entirely different terms. If the Court trying the later case had differed from the view of the law in the earlier case on any point raised also before it, I apprehend that the learned Judges would have abstained from setting themselves in opposition, but would, as usual, have submitted the particular point for decision by a Full Bench.

(1) B.L.R. Sup. Vol. 759 (768) = 8 W. R. 428 (434).
(2) 18 C. 399.

(3) 19 C. 412.

Under such circumstances, in order to bring this reference strictly within the terms of the rules of this Court, the referring Bench should have pointed out which of these two cases was on all fours with the case then before them, and they should then have expressed an opinion that the judgment in that case enunciated the law in a manner in which they did not agree.

The case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1), which is now under appeal to Her Majesty in Council, bears a resemblance to the present case, and argument has been addressed to us by learned Counsel to show that the law on which that judgment proceeded is erroneous, and is not in accordance with the Mahomedan Law which this Court is bound to administer in such cases. This in itself would, I think, make it undesirable and indeed improper for us to express any opinion in anticipation of the result of the appeal to a superior Court.

On behalf of the appellant it has been contended that it is the function of a Full Bench to express its opinion on any point of law even if that opinion be contrary to the law laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council, and that this Court would be bound [212] to follow such enunciation of the law. I cannot for one moment accede to this proposition, for it is entirely contrary to the object for which under our rules Full Benches formed of a larger number of Judges than the Ordinary Benches of this Court are constituted. Instead of settling the law, an attempt to reopen a matter already finally settled by the highest Court would only create confusion. To assert or to exercise such a power on the part of a Full Bench would moreover amount to the gravest judicial indiscretion.

Mr. Woodroffe for the respondents in reply pointed out that, with the knowledge of the fact that the point of law argued in this case and raised in Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1), was now under appeal and would shortly be considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council, the decision of this Full Bench contrary to the opinion expressed in the former case would not be to carry out the real object of references to a Full Bench, but would be an attempt to dictate to the Privy Council a view of the law which a larger number of Judges than that constituting the Bench in the case under appeal entertain, and thus in some degree to embarrass the decision of the appeal in that case. As I have already stated, it is for considerations of such a character that I personally should have preferred to postpone the trial of these cases until the decision of the appeal now before their Lordships of the Privy Council.

(F.B.).

The matter for our decision in these appeals is simply whether the deed of the 4th Aughran 1281 constitutes a valid wakf such as is binding under the Mahomedan Law.

The suits have been brought by decree-holders seeking to attach and sell property covered by this deed in execution of decrees obtained against the grantor who has constituted himself the mutwalli, the attachment of this property in execution of those decrees having been removed on the objection of the debtor that the property is not his personal property, but wakf and inalienable.

Both the lower Courts have given decrees in favour of the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge, as a Court of first instance, found from the conduct of the grantor and the terms of the deed itself, that it was not the intention of the grantor to make a valid [213] wakf; that he never seriously thought of the total extinction of his descendants and of the probable contingency of a reversion to the poor; that he never gave any effect to the wakf, but continued to enjoy the property as before, and even confessed, before some respectable pleaders, that he had no mind to give any effect to the deed. The Subordinate Judge accordingly found that the endowment was nominal and no bar to the attachment and sale of property in execution of the decrees against the debtor. The District Judge in appeal practically affirmed the decree of the first Court; he modified it in so far as to hold that a valid charge on the property was created by the deed to the extent of an allowance of Rs. 75 only on behalf of the poor and students. The District Judge followed the judgment in the case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1), finding that the terms of the document in that suit were singularly like those of the document before him, and he added that in fact the preamble is almost word for word identical.

The terms of the District Judge's judgment have raised some doubt whether he found in concurrence with the first Court that the intention of the grantor was not to constitute a valid wakf under the Mahomedan Law. There is no doubt that he does not differ from the first Court in this respect, and in some passages of his judgment it would seem that he was inclined to concur. His attention, however, seems to have been principally directed to the consideration of the Mahomedan Law in construing the terms of the deed before him. The argument was distinctly raised before the District Judge on appeal by the respondent in support of judgment of the first Court, and is set out in his judgment. The learned Judge seems to have confined his attention to what he considered the only point in the case, having reference to the judgment of the Privy Council in Mahomed Ashanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (2), namely, whether there was a substantial dedication to charity in the case before him. His finding is that there was no such dedication, and inasmuch as the learned Judge expresses no dissent from the finding of the first Court that it was not the intention of the grantor to create a valid wakf under the Mahomedan Law, I am of opinion [214] that it must be held that, although expressed in a somewhat different form, the finding of the District Judge was in accordance with that of the first Court.

In this view I think that there is no point of law arising in these second appeals, and that the decrees of the District Judge should be affirmed and the appeals dismissed on this ground.

(1) 18 C. 399.

(2) 17 C. 498 = 17 I.A. 28.

The opinion which I have expressed seems to render it unnecessary that I should proceed further to discuss the other questions which have been argued before this Full Bench for eight days, in the course of which there has been considerable discussion on complicated points of Mahomedan Law, and their application to cases such as that brought by the plaintiffs in these suits. For this reason, and more especially as my opinion already expressed is not that accepted by some of my other colleagues, I think it desirable that I should proceed further with these cases.

The matters discussed, and on which our opinion has been desired, raise the question what is a valid wakf under the Mahomedan Law. The extreme position contended for, on the one side, is that it is competent to the proprietor of immoveable property to create a wakf, that is, a religious endowment declaring that during his lifetime and that of his lawful heirs, such persons shall in turn be mutwallis of such property, having absolute control over all income derived therefrom, but that in default of such persons, the estate should go to the poor; the dedication of the proprietorship to God, so as to divest the appropriator, and the ultimate bestowal on the poor or some such object, on failure of the descendants of the appropriator being sufficient to constitute a wakf.

I think, however, that it is unnecessary to enter into any minute consideration of what may or may not be a valid wakf under the Mahomedan Law, as obtained from the learned Doctors, because I find that that law has been settled by our Courts by a long course of decisions, commencing from 1798, and that it is only in recent times, as I shall presently show, that there has been any tendency to question the law so laid down.

The first reported case on this subject is that of Moohummud Sadik v. Moohummud Ali (1), decided by the Sudder Dewany [215] Adawlut on the 6th December 1798. The object of the grant in that case was the maintenance of a durgah, and of the buildings and lands attached thereto, the grantee and his heirs having been appointed for the superintendence of this duty. There is no question that the object of this wakf was strictly religious. The next case Hya-on-nissa v. Mofuk-hir-ol-Islam (2), decided on the 17th September 1805, related also to an establishment strictly of a religious character. In Meer Nusrut Ali v. Meer Casim Ali (3), decided on the 17th September 1805, a religious endowment was set up, but it was found that there was no assignment for pious purposes, the property being heritable, and consequently partible amongst all the heirs of the alleged grantor. In Hyatee Khanum v. Kool-soom Khanum (4), decided on 4th September 1807, the endowment was for the maintenance of a mosque, and the wife of the appropriator was appointed mutwalli, with direction to defray the charges of the establishment out of the profits of the particular property, and it was further provided that, out of the surplus remaining after defraying such charges, she should reserve to herself a $9\frac{1}{2}$ annas share, and that the other wives were to share in the balance. This was held to be a valid endowment so far as the particular share of the appropriator in these properties. In Kulb Ali Hoosein v. Syf Ali (5) the wakf was for pious and charitable purposes, such as the support of religious mendicants and students, and the repairs of mosques and other public edifices, the general superintendence being confided to a certain person and his heirs and successors for ever. The subject of the grant in Qadira v. Shah Kubeeroodeen Ahmud (1), was the well-known religious establishment at Sasseram, and the object of the wakf was strictly religious and charitable within the meaning accepted by us. It may be mentioned here that it is only owing to the meaning of this term that the difficulty in a great measure has arisen.

The case subsequently came before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on appeal.

[216] In Abul Hasan v. Haji Mohammad Masih Karbalai (2), decided on the 17th February 1831, the endowment was for a cemetery, a monastery, and a shrine, for strictly public or religious purposes. In Muhammad Kasim v. Muhammad Alum (3) decided on the 30th July 1831, the endowment was of a religious character, the land being dedicated as pirotar, that is, for the worship of a saint. In Shah Imam Bukhsh v. Beebee Shahee (4), decided on the 5th March 1835, the object of the wakf was the maintenance of a durgah. In chronological order the next case is that of Doe d Jaun Beebee v. Abdollah Barber (5), decided in the late Supreme Court in March 1838. I propose to refer to this case later on, and will therefore proceed to the next case in order of time, that of Jewun Doss Sahoo v. Shah Kubeeroodeen (6), decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1840, and in that case the object of the endowment was the maintenance of the well known khankah at Sasseram, a religious and charitable establishment which formed the subject of one of the cases in the Select Reports already referred to. In Moulvee Abdoola v. Rajesri Dossea (7) decided on the 19th July 1846, the endowment was also of a religious character, namely, the maintenance of a mosque. In Binder-soondree Dassea v. Meheroonnissa Khatoon (8), decided on the 20th January 1853, a claim was set up that a certain portion of the land in suit was wakf, but it was found that there was no documentary evidence that the land was uniformly appropriated as wakf, and no property can be considered as such unless it be satisfactorily established that it has been specially so appropriated. In Hajee Nooroollah v. Meer v. Waris Hossein (9), the parties were found to be holding separate shares of a certain land, calling it wakf, while they used it for their own private purposes. The claim made that the lands were wakf was disallowed. In Khojeh Sirwar Hossein Khan v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (10), decided on the 28th June 1853, the grant declared a joint right in all the lineal descendants of the appropriator to share without any actual division of the proceeds of the property with the duties attaching to them as regards the maintenance of the tomb, and it was declared that all such persons were entitled to share according to their rights of inheritance under Mahomedan Law in the proceeds of the endowed property, and all must be held to have an interest in the general administration of the endowment. These real object of the wakf was, as I understand it, the performance of certain duties in regard to the maintenance of a tomb, and the monies given to the descendants of the appropriator were burdened with this duty. It was only after a due discharge of this duty that they would properly appropriate the income of the endowed property to their own private use. In Khodabundha Khan v. Oomutul Fatima (1), decided on the 21st February 1857, the deed which was set up as constituting a wakf was declared to constitute an absolute devise to one Tussuduck Hossain, subject to certain trusts and a life interest of Janees Khanum on the surplus proceeds of the property, and it was further declared that this deed did not create a wakf in the sense in which that term is used in Mahomedan Law, for that term, as ruled in Moohummud Sadik v. Moohummud Ali (2) (a case already cited by me), imports property in which proprietary right is relinquished, and which is consecrated in such manner to the service of God that it may be of benefit to men. The learned Judges of the Sudder Court also held that, in interpreting the deed, the intention of the person executing it must be looked to, and that to do so, "all parts of it should be considered in relation to each other, so as, if possible, to form one consistent whole."

In Agha Mahomed Eusoof Mooshadee v. Abool Hossein Khan (3), decided on the 22nd April 1857, the object of the endowment was stated to be solely for religious purposes, for a mosque, an imambara, and for repairing a tomb of the grantor's ancestors, and the appropriator then appointed himself superintendent or mutwalli. The only question raised in that case was the right of succession to the office of mutwalli. In Dalrymple v. Khoondkar Azeezul Islam (4), decided on the 31st March 1858, it was held [218] that where an endowment is wholly wakf, that is, where the whole of the profits are devoted to religious purposes, the mutwalli has no authority to grant a lease extending beyond the period of his own life, but if the office of mutwalli is hereditary and the incumbent has a beneficial interest in the heritable estate, the property is vested in the mutwalli and his heirs. And it was further held that in such a case the mutwalli might exercise the right to grant leases even in perpetuity. In the same reports, at p. 1218, in Mahomed Munnoo Chowdree v. Hajra Beebee (5), decided on the 1st July 1858, there was apparently some interest for the family of the alleged endower. The Court found that the plaintiffs do not style the land sued for by them wakf, of which the proprietary right has been relinquished, and which has been consecrated in such a manner to the service of God that it might be of benefit to men; that they assert that it was their heritable property, the profits being appropriated to the service of the musjid; in other words, that it was an estate of inheritance charged with certain trusts. The case was remanded for retrial by the lower court in order to determine the nature of the property claimed, whether it be strictly endowed, or whether it was heritable property subject or not to certain trusts. If it was the former, it was held by the Court that its alienation by sale would, of course, under the Mahomedan Law, be illegal; if of the latter description, that it would be heritable and capable of being sold. In Bibee Kuneez Fatima v. Bibee Saheba Jan (6), decided on the 8th August 1867, the grant recited that in consideration of the charitable disposition of the grantor and the expenses which he voluntarily incurred in supporting poor students, in giving alms to mendicants and food and shelter to travellers, the grantor remitted in the future payment of cesses and requested the grantee to give the grantor the benefit of his prayers. This was held not to constitute a valid wakf, as there was no dedication of properties solely to the worship of God or to any religious or charitable purposes.

The next case is that of Khajah Hossein Ali v. Shazadee Hazara Begum (1), decided on the 25th August 1869. From the terms of the deed, as set out in the judgment of Mr. Justice Markby, [219] it appears that the object of the wakf was the care of travellers and the poor, the maintenance of certain specified Mahomedan festivals, and afterwards for the personal expenses of the appropriator as well as for his family. The main, if not the only, issue in that case was simply whether the property under mortgage was a proper subject of wakf under the Mahomedan Law; and this was allowed, no question being raised, nor indeed could be properly raised, as to the validity of the wakf in other respects. The primary and substantial object of the wakf was of a religious and charitable character. The next case is that of Muzhurool Huq v. Puhraj Ditarey Mohapattur (2), decided on the 2nd March 1870, and this case is deserving of special mention, because a portion of the judgment has been quoted with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In describing the wakf it was stated that the "primary objects with which the lands are endowed under the Mahomedan Law, and which are the only objects, are to support the mosque and to defray the expenses of worship conducted in that mosque. . . It is first provided that from the profits of the endowed lands the mosque will be repaired and lighted and furnished on certain festivals; that travellers are not to be allowed to go away hungry; that an establishment, including a Muazzun, or caller to prayers, and other necessary servants of the mosque, are to be kept up; that mendicants are to have alms given to them; that a certain number of poor scholars are to be educated in Arabic, which necessitates the employment of a teacher; and lastly that from the remaining profits the expenses for the marriages, burials, and circumcisions of the members of the family of the mutwalli were to be defrayed. This was to be done after the primary objects for which the endowment was made, and which objects have been already detailed above, were fully accomplished."

The judgment proceeds in these terms :—

"We are of opinion that the mere charge upon the profits of the estate of certain items, which must in the course of time necessarily cease, being confined to one family, and for particular purposes, and which, after they lapse, will leave the whole profits intact for the original purposes for which the endowment was made, does not render the endowment invalid under the Mahomedan Law. A person may make an endowment settling land on [220] himself, and enjoying the profits during his lifetime, and after his lifetime, devoting the profits to the support of the poor, the main object of the Mahomedan Law being that the profits of the land endowed should be endowed for a purpose which always remains in existence. Now, the poor are always with us, and therefore, a man making an endowment, and enjoying the profits during his lifetime, to go to the poor after his death, does not make the endowment for an uncertain or non-existent object."

In this case the family of the mutwalli was provided for after the religious and charitable purposes for which the wakf was created had been satisfied, or, to repeat the words of the judgment, "This" (that is the application of funds to the family) "was to be done after the primary objects for which the endowment was made were fully accomplished." In Doyal

Ohund Mullick v. Syud Keramut Ali (1), in which case Mr. Justice Kemp was again one of the Judges, decided on the 30th June 1871, the same view was taken. The object of the appropriation was stated to be "the setting apart of a piece of land for the ultimate site of a mosque, and for the present use of Mahomedans as a place of meeting on the great festivals of their religion where the Koran might be read and charitable doles made," and these objects were held to constitute a valid wakf when accompanied by a solemn dedication to God. The next case on the subject is that of The Advocate General v. Fatima Sultani Begum (2) decided on the 21st February 1872. The wakfnama is described as reciting that the appropriator had built a mosque in Bombay, and "declares that he thereby makes a legal, firm and clear endowment of the whole and every part of his garden, etc., in favour of the mosque, and that such endowment is made in such way that whatever income derived from the garden, etc., there may be remaining, after deducting their expenses, shall be expended in making the necessary repairs and in defraying the expenses of the mosque, and if after defraying such expenses there should be any surplus, then that surplus should be expended in defraying the expenses of the mourning of the founder, the chief of the martyrs." It then provides that the guardianship of the mosque rests with the endower during the term of his natural life, and after his decease it rests with any one of his relations who may be intelligent and [221] of good reputation, provided he shall be resident in Bombay, otherwise the guardianship shall rest with any Shiraz merchant of good reputation. The suit related to the appointment of a mutwalli, but the wakfnama shows that the endowment was strictly for religious and pious purposes, although the appropriator and his descendants were in turn appointed mutwallis, and as such to attend to the distribution of the proceeds of the endowment. Similarly in Abdul Ganne Kasam v. Hussen Miya Rahimtula (3), it was held on the 31st January 1873, that to constitute a valid wakf there must be a dedication of the property solely to the worship of God or to religious and pious purposes. The deed in that case which created a wakf of certain property in favour of the donors and their family and children did not constitute a valid wakf.

The next case is that of Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Huq (4), decided on the 2nd February 1881. In that case there was an assignment of a share of certain properties for a mosque and its expenses, and out of the remainder, specified shares were stated to have been made wakf in favour of each of two daughters and their respective descendants in turn so long as they existed, and on their failure these properties were to be applied to the poor and needy. It was held that the shares of the properties given to these daughters and their descendants did not constitute a valid wakf, and they were made liable to sale for the debts of the ladies. The other share in the properties which was given for the maintenance of the mosque remained untouched. In Luchmiput Singh v. Amir Alum (5), decided on the 3rd July 1882, the wakf was created for the expenses of a musjid and a tomb, the servants of a certain Asthan and for performing certain worships at the tomb, and certain relations of the appropriator were appointed mutwallis. Provision was also made that certain debts should be first paid, and it was declared that the manager should afterwards apply the property towards the religious uses created and the maintenance of the settlor's grandsons and their male issues, and it was held that the subject of the wakf first stated, [222] that is, for the maintenance of the mosque and the tomb, were all distinctly religious, and, to some extent, involved charity to the poor; and further, that the subsequent direction that the manager should maintain the future male descendants of the wakf did not necessarily change its character. The wakf was accordingly maintained.

In Jugatmoni Chowdrani v. Ramjani Bibee (1), decided on the 22nd February 1884, the wakf was for the purpose of the maintenance of the mosque and a madrassa, and the proceeds from the property appropriated were divided into three portions— $\frac{1}{3}$ rd for the expenses of the maintenance for the mosque, $\frac{1}{3}$ rd for the maintenance of the madrassa, and the remaining $\frac{1}{3}$ rd for the maintenance of the mutwalli. The wakf in this case also was confirmed.

Of the other cases decided by this Court, it is necessary only to mention the two cases cited in the order of reference. We have, moreover, two cases decided by the Madras High Court to which special reference is unnecessary.

There are, next, two cases decided by the Bombay High Court. The first was decided by West, J.—Fatmabibi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay (2). The other case was decided by Farran, J.—Amrutlal Kalidas v. Shaik Hussein (3)—in which the last-mentioned case was followed. In reference to these cases which proceed on a somewhat different principle from all the cases previously cited, and support the argument on behalf of the appellant in the cases now before us, their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (4) point out that "the observations of Mr. Justice West are of an extrajudicial character, as the case in which they were uttered did not raise the question." There is, lastly, the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case last mentioned, in which the intention of the appropriator in the creation of the wakf was held to be of vital importance in deciding whether the deed set up constituted a valid endowment, and it was held in that case that as there was no reason to suppose that the charitable uses provided for by the deed would absorb more than [223] a devout and worthy Mahomedan gentleman might find it becoming to spend in that way, there was no indication of any intention to constitute a valid wakf.

In the case of Doed. Jaun Beebee v. Abdollah Barber (5) the matter to which the attention of the Court was directed was the objection taken that the deed did not constitute a valid wakf, but was rather a will and executed under the name of wakf as a device to divert the order of inheritance under the Mahomedan Law. The Court, it will be observed from the terms of the first question put to the Law Officers, regarded the endowment as one to charitable uses, but doubted whether it was valid when qualified by a reservation of the rents and profits to the donor during his life. The opinion of the Law Officers on this and on the other questions referred goes somewhat upon the terms of those questions. No doubt the Mahomedan Law Officers consulted pronounced it to be a valid wakf. But no objection was taken, nor was the question considered by the Court itself that a settlement of that nature was not a dedication to God or for the service of man in so far as it provided in the present instance for the maintenance of the appropriator and his family with an obligation to apply an undefined portion of the proceeds to certain religious purposes. It is noteworthy, too, that in the deed in that case power was given to the appropriator to increase or decrease the number of those who were, as members of the family, entitled to receive maintenance according to the increase or decrease in the produce. I did not therefore regard this case as any serious interruption to the current of cases decided by the Sudder Dewany Adawlut. So far, then, it appears from all the cases in our reports, commencing in 1798, to the present time, with the exception of the two cases in the Bombay High Court and the case in Fulton's Reports which can be distinguished, that the primary and substantial object of every wakf which was recognized as constituting a valid endowment, was the maintenance of some religious institution or to carry out some charitable purpose in the ordinary signification of that term. Whenever there was provision made for any other object, such as the support of the appropriator or any member of his family, it was always of a subsidiary [224] character, and in such cases it was regarded as constituting a special charge on the proceeds of the endowed land after the original object was satisfied.

There is no case in which a wakf was allowed in which the primary object was the maintenance of the appropriator and his family and his descendants except in one of the cases cited in which the wakf was disallowed. Having regard, then, to the current of decisions which have settled the law at least on this side of India, I should not be prepared to adopt any new view of the law unless it were laid down by some higher authority than one of our Indian Courts. I would quote here the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chotay Lall v. Chunnoo Lal (1), "that after the series of decisions which has occurred in Bengal and Madras, it would be unsafe to open them by giving effect to arguments founded on a different interpretation of old and obscure texts," and "that the Courts ought not to unsettle a rule (of inheritance) affirmed by a long course of decisions, unless, indeed, it is manifestly opposed to law and reason." The view of the Mahomedan Law pressed on us at the hearing of these appeals is certainly new to our Courts, and I may say that I have no recollection during a long experience of its ever having been addressed to me. It certainly has never found any place in any of our reports, nor can we find in any of our reports cases where wakfs founded on the principles which we are asked to adopt were ever brought before our Courts. It is almost impossible to account for the absence of any such case, if the view now pressed on us has been extensively recognized and adopted; for cases are constantly arising in which endowments as wakf are set up in bar of execution of decrees for debt against the attachment and sale of properties held by a Mahomedan.

It has been stated that if the law as hitherto laid down be adopted, it will affect numerous large and valuable estates, but no authority has been given for this statement, and I am certainly not aware of any such cases. It seems to me rather that if the law be changed it would have a very serious effect on titles acquired on the strength of the hitherto recognized law in this respect founded generally on sales in executions of decrees held [225] by our Courts in which claims as wakf have been disallowed. The only effect upon existing titles of a re-affirmance of what appears to me to be the existing law laid down by the Courts would be to operate as a warning to persons holding estates under such settlements that such estates cannot be protected by a given religious or charitable dedication from the usual legal liability for debts incurred by them.

It has been contended by the learned Advocate-General that in the decision of this and other similar matters, involving a consideration of the Mahomedan law, and equally Hindu Law, in which our Courts have been required to observe such laws, if one of the parties be not of one of those religions, the Courts in applying such special law should be guided by principles of justice, equity, and good conscience. It is unnecessary, perhaps, to express any opinion on this point for the purposes of the appeals before us in view of the conclusion at which I have arrived. But it is a matter for serious consideration whether under what may be termed a family settlement, providing that, on default of any member of such family, the proceeds of the property under settlement should go to the poor or to any other charitable or religious purposes, the members of such family should, by a strict application of the Mahomedan Law be exempt from being compelled to pay their lawful debts and thus be assured of a regular certain income.

I have discussed the question connected with the Mahomedan Law to be administered by our Courts relating to wakf, because considerable argument has been addressed to us on this point, but, as I have already stated, on the main questions the appeals must fail, since on the findings of the District Judge, no second appeal lies, and it becomes unnecessary, in my opinion, to answer the question referred to us.

In regard to the objection raised by the respondent to the order of the District Judge, allowing a charge of Rs. 75 for the poor and students, I find that such a charge was allowed by the Judges of this Court in Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (1), and was not set aside by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the judgment as reported in L. R., 17 Ind. App. 28. I see no reason, therefore, to disallow it in these appeals.

[226] PETHERAM, C.J.—The plaintiffs in this suit are the holders of a decree against the defendant Haji Bikani Mia for Rs. 3,448-2 annas 8 pie and interest, and in execution of it attached certain properties as belonging to him and being in his possession. Upon this, he applied for the release of the property, on the ground that it does not belong to him, but is a portion of a wakf estate of which he is the mutwalli.

The application was allowed, the property released, and the present action brought to set aside the order of release and to obtain a declaration that the property is liable to attachment and sale in satisfaction of the plaintiffs' decree.

The question is whether a deed executed by Bikani Mia, on the 4th of Aughran 1281 (19th November 1874), and registered by him in the Registry of Dacca, was effectual to create a valid wakf of the properties dealt with by it, and so to render them inalienable. The instrument in question was executed shortly before Bikani Mia set out on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and at the time of its execution he was in possession of sufficient property, over and above that dealt with by the instrument, to satisfy all debts which he had incurred or for which he was liable at the time.

(1) 17 C. 498 = 17 I. A. 28.

After reciting the reasons for its execution the instrument proceeds:—

"I do hereby make a permanent wakf of the undermentioned properties in favour of my two sons, my four daughters, and my wife, and after them the successive descendants of my said sons and daughters and their descendants, and on their death, i.e., in the case of my said sons and daughters dying issueless, in favour of the poor and indigent and the beggars residing in the town of Dacca. Taking the said wakf properties out of my ownership and possession I hold them in possession as mutwalli under the terms of this wakf. As long as I shall live, I myself shall continue to be the mutwalli, and as such shall do everything according to the terms of the said wakf. On my death my two sons, Sriman Abdul Rahaman Mia and Sriman Abdul Sobhan Mia, shall, as hereinafter provided, be appointed mutwallis in my place."

The instrument then provides that the mutwallis shall always be selected from Bikani Mia's descendants, that after his death the mutwallis shall be competent to spend any amount of money they think proper for the sake of his salvation, and that after his death they shall in every year give away Rs. 50 in charity and maintain one student; that they shall pay Rs. 50 a year to the [227] wife, and Rs. 100 a year to each of the two sons, and Rs. 50 to each of the four daughters and to the descendants of each of these six persons until they are exhausted, and that the residue of the income shall be accumulated by the mutwallis for the purpose of increasing the wakf estate.

The Subordinate Judge, before whom the suit came in the first instance, decreed it on the ground that the transaction was a nominal one, and could not have been made with any real intention that it should be acted upon.

The District Judge has, as I understand his judgment, considered the question solely with reference to the construction of the deed, and has come to the conclusion that it created a valid wakf or endowment to the extent of Rs. 75 a year, that being the amount specifically allotted to charities, and that, subject to a charge for that amount, the properties are alienable, notwithstanding the execution of the instrument by the owner. From his decree the defendant appealed to this Court, and the plaintiff filed a cross-objection to the allowance of the charge for the Rs. 75 a year. The appeal came before a Division Bench which consisted of Mr. Justice Hill and myself, and upon the argument the plaintiff relied on the judgment of Tottenham and Trevelyan, JJ. in the case of Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (1), in which case, as I understand the judgment, the Division Bench held that a wakf or consecration must be for the benefit of a body which from its nature cannot fail, i.e., for the public or for some class of the public, and that though the consecration may be subject to a condition by which the usufruct of the consecrated estate is reserved partially ^{and} _{or} temporarily for the benefit of particular individuals, such condition or reservation must not be of such a character as to render the grant for the benefit of the permanent body inoperative and illusory, and that a condition that the whole income of the consecrated estate should be paid to the members of a particular family so long as any member of it remained in existence, would have that effect.

The defendants relied on the judgment of O'Kinealy and Ameer Ali, JJ. in the case of Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose, not yet reported (1). In that case, as I understand the judgment, the Division Bench held that "A wakf or consecration may be for the benefit of a body of beneficiaries, which must from its nature be permanent, but such body may be made up of different classes which may enjoy the income in shares or one after the other, and some of which may from their nature be of only temporary duration; but if there is included in the entire body of beneficiaries some class which from its nature cannot fail, the wakf is valid, and the property inalienable from the date of the wakf or dedication."

We were unable to reconcile the principles laid down in these two cases, and we thought, and I think still, that the present case must be decided in accordance with one or other of those principles, and that the only course open to us was to refer the matter to the decision of a Full Bench. We accordingly referred to this Bench the question whether the disposition of the grantor's property made by the deed of the 4th of Aughran 1281 was a valid wakf of the property dealt with by the deed.

The reference was afterwards amended by us at the suggestion of some of the Judges of this Bench by adding the words, "we also refer the decision of the Special Appeal to the Full Bench," and this Bench is now called upon to answer the question referred to it by the Division Bench and to dispose of the appeal.

The Mahomedan Law-books which have been principally relied on in the argument are the Hedaya, which was written about 1196, and was translated by Mr. Hamilton at the request of Warren Hastings, and the Fatawa Alamgiri which was commenced in 1656 by order of the Emperor Arungzeb, and parts of which were translated into English by Mr. Baillie, and form the book known as Baillie's Digest. A description of these two books and of their value as authorities will be found in the Introduction to Morley's Digest, pp. 267 and 289. The subject of wakf is dealt with in Book 15 of the Hedaya, vol. II, p. 334, Hamilton's translation, and Book IX, Chapters 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of Mr. Baillie's work. If we were called upon to decide the question as to which the two Division Benches of this Court have differed, upon what we [229] find in the Mahomedan books alone, I think it would be very difficult to arrive at a conclusion, as there are passages in the books which may be cited in support of either view; but this part of the law has been the subject of many judicial decisions in our own Court, and is, I think, concluded by the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (2). In that case the deed is not set out in full in the report, but Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of the Committee describes it as follows:—

"At the outset of the deed the grantor adverts to his age and his coming death, and says—I hereby appropriate and dedicate as 'fisabillilah' wakf in the manner provided in the paragraphs mentioned below—the properties now in question and other property there described—for defraying the expenses of the brick-built musjid of my grandfather, Jorip Mahomed Chowdhry, at my own family dwelling-house in the village of Paragulpore, and of the two madrassas at my own ancestral homestead, and my lodging-house in the town of Chittagong and sadir warid (persons coming and going), and I pray to God that He may in his mercy accept and preserve the same for ever for being applied to those purposes.

"The 'paragraphs mentioned below' are 13 in number.

"Paragraph 1 appoints the grantor's three sons to be mutwallis of the wakf properties in a gradation of rank, and it contains some very elaborate instructions respecting the management of the property.

"Paragraph 2 runs as follows :—

'The mutwalli after payment of the proper expenses of the mosaref and the necessary costs of collections of the zemindari and the salaries of mookhtars and other servants and the expenses of litigation and the like, and all other charges which may be incurred on the occurrence of any peril or emergency, out of all kinds of income and profits of the endowed properties, according to the long-standing practice, shall take from the residue his own monthly allowance, pay over the allowance due to the naib-mutwalli and naib-ul-maniab and my daughters as specified in the schedule, and continue to perform the stated religious works according to custom. He shall, having regard to the provisions contained in the first paragraph, keep his eye to the legitimate objects of the mosaref, and not commit extravagance and waste or practise fraud in connection therewith. The balance that may be left after meeting the above-mentioned expenses shall be kept in a proper, that is to say, a safe place under the supervision and management of all the three persons.'

"The schedule provides Rs. 100 per month for the first mutwallis, Rs. 90 for the second, Rs. 80 for the third, and Rs. 30 for the daughters.

[230] "Paragraph 3 provides for the succession of mutwallis in case of retirement or death. It is very inartificially expressed, and in some contingencies might be difficult to apply. But for its bearing on the construction of the deed, it is sufficient for their Lordships to say that in their judgment it was meant by its framer to provide for a perpetual succession of some of the male members of his family as mutwallis, to be appointed either by existing mutwallis, or by a Committee, or by an officer of Government.

"Paragraph 4 provides for the addition to the wakf of surpluses occurring under para. 2.

"Paragraph 5 declares that the persons getting monthly allowances shall have no power to assign or charge them, and that creditors shall have no claim against them.

"Paragraph 7 declares that if 'the mutwallis' have sons exceeding three in number, for those who are not mutwallis, the mutwallis shall fix a monthly allowance. Those persons are to live on their own earnings in professions, trades or service; but when any one becomes a mutwalli, he is to bring into the wakf all the property he has got.

"Paragraph 8 provides that if 'any one' dies leaving no sons, his wife and daughter shall receive allowances. It then continues—'It shall be competent to the mutwallis, having regard to the income and expenditure of the wakf properties, to proportionately increase or decrease these allowances as well as their own salaries and those of the other salaried persons, and no one shall be able to raise any objections to the same.'

The Committee held that the disposition made by such a deed was not a bona fide dedication, and did not render the property inalienable, as its real object was not a charitable one, but was to make arrangements for the aggrandisement of the family and to make the property inalienable, and it being established that a settlement for these purposes is not valid as a wakf according to Mahomedan Law, it must follow that the wakif's family cannot themselves be the primary object of the settlement, as, if it were, the natural effect and object of such a settlement would be to keep the estate in the family and so to provide for the maintenance and aggrandisement of the family, and on the authority of this case I think that it must now be held to be settled law that a wakf or consecration must be in the first instance for the benefit of a body which from its nature cannot fail, i.e., for the public or for some class of the public, and that though the consecration may be subject to a condition by which the usufruct of the consecrated estate is reserved partially ^{and} _{or} [231] temporarily for the benefit of particular individuals, such conditions or reservation must not be of such a character as to render the grant for the benefit of the permanent body inoperative or illusory. I do not, however, think it necessary in the present case to express any opinion whether a condition that the whole income of the consecrated estate should be paid to the members of a particular family, so long as any member of it remained in existence, would have the effect of rendering the grant for the benefit of the permanent body inoperative or illusory. This is the question upon which their Lordships of the Privy Council declined to decide; it is one of great importance, and upon which Mr. Justice Ameer Ali informs me many titles in India depend. A perusal of the Mahomedan books which I have mentioned has created in my mind the impression that at the time when they were written such dispositions were treated as valid, and I think that at the present time the weight of authority, as far as the decisions of the Courts established by the English Government are concerned, is in favour of their validity, and as it has been argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that their view is supported by the current of authority, I think it well to see what the decisions on this question have been, though in the result I do not propose to express any opinion upon it.

In the month of March 1838 the case of Doe d. Jaun Beebee v. Abdollah Barber (1) was decided by Sir E. Ryan, C.J. and Grant, J. after consultation with the Mahomedan Law Officers; the material parts of the deed in that case were as follows:—

"First.—Whereas the aforesaid lands subject to rent are situated in the Town of Calcutta, I will appropriate as much of the produce thereof as is required for my own use unto the said purpose, after defraying the revenue and taxes thereof, and the remainder to hereditary and charitable purposes and my several relatives, that is, my grandson and granddaughter and daughter-in-law and daughter's son and daughter's daughter, who are now receiving maintenance, living together united in meals, shall continue to receive the same in like manner, and the power of increasing or decreasing the number of incumbents according to the increase or decrease in the produce will remain with me, and the repairs of the mosque and salary of the Mowuzz in the Khattab and other expenses connected therewith, in the seasons of the Ramazan Mabareke and the Eed, shall be defrayed [232] from the produce, and the person who is hereafter appointed mutwalli will enjoy the same powers as I myself possess.

"Second.—I will continue mutwalli as long as I live, and on my decease my daughter's son Abdollah, son of Shaikh Joomun, inhabitant of Calcutta, will become mutwalli; after the said Abdollah, one from among my relations who is the most fit and possesses integrity, temperance, intelligence and respectability, and appears most deserving.

"Third.—After my decease, neither my heirs nor the mutwalli will have the smallest right to sell or give away or transfer the above-mentioned lands in any manner; whatsoever part thereof is expended in heredit-able and benevolent purposes, shall be disbursed under my own control and direction."

The Court held that the appropriation was valid and the property in-alienable. In the case of Fatma Bibi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay (1), Mr. Justice West held that a deed, the material portion of which is as follows, constituted the property dealt with by it wakf and inalienable:—

"1. Upon trust during the lifetime of the plaintiff, to pay the rents and profits of the said premises to the plaintiff for her sole and separate use, without power of anticipation.

"2. Upon trust after the death of the plaintiff, to pay the rents and profits of the said premises to such one or more exclusively of the others or other of the children or grandchildren or other the descendants of the plaintiff, at such age or time, or respective ages or times if more than one, in such shares and with such future and executory or other trusts for the benefit of the said children or grandchildren or other descendants, or some or one of them, with such provisions for their maintenance and edu-cation either at the discretion of the trustees or trustee for the time being of the said indenture, or of any other person or persons, and upon such condition with such restrictions and in such manner as the plaintiff should by deed or will appoint, and, in default of any such direction or appoint-ment, and so far as no such direction or appointment should extend, upon trust to pay the said rents and profits to and amongst the children or grandchildren and other descendants of the plaintiff for and during the term of their natural lives or the life of any of them, in such shares and proportions and in such manner for their maintenance or education, or otherwise as the said trustees or trustee for the time being should think fit. Provided always, and it was by the said indenture agreed and de-clared, that its object was to make such a settlement of the said premises that the rents and profits thereof should alone be divisible amongst the children, grandchildren and other descendants of the plaintiff for ever.

[233] "3. In the event of there being no children, grandchildren or other descendants of the plaintiff, or, there being such, in the event of such child or other descendants dying without leaving any child or children, upon trust to stand possessed of the said premises and of the rents and profits thereof in trust for the said Mahomed Ali bin Mahomed Ameen Rogay and his heirs to be devoted by them to charitable uses according to the law of Mahomedans, either in paying the expenses of poor and indigent pilgrims going to Mecca, establishing charitable institutions, in donations to and building mosques, in payment of the funeral expenses (or marriage expenses) of poor people, in sinking wells or constructing tanks, or in such other manner as the said Mahomed Ali bin Mahomed Ameen Rogay, his heirs, executors or assigns should think fit."

In the case of Amrutlal Kalidas v. Shaik Hussein (2) Mr. Justice Farran held that a deed the material portions of which are as follows constituted the property wakf and inalienable:—

"The third defendant Shumsudin in his written statement admitted the mortgage to the plaintiff. He, however, alleged that by a wakfnama or deed of endowment, dated 17th May 1871, Miya Bundu (the father of the three defendants) gave the property in question, together with three other properties, to his heirs and descendants for religious and charitable purposes, and declared that the office of mutwalli should be held by his wife Asha Bibi and the second defendant, with power to delegate the said office to whomsoever they should choose; and he further declared that after deducting all outlays in respect of the said properties, the said mutwallis should divide the annual income thereof into four regular shares, and make over one of such shares to each of the three sons and their respective descendants for their expenses, and out of the remaining share pay half thereof to his widow Asha Bibi, and the other half to his sister Shaban Bibi; and it was by the said wakfnama further declared that, if none of the heirs of the settlor should survive, the income of the whole of the property should be distributed among Mahomedan fakirs and indigent people; and further, that the said properties should not be sold or mortgaged by any one; and that if any one should seek to do so, then the claim should be null and void."

In the case of Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Huq (1) Mr. Justice Morris and Mr. Justice Tottenham held that a deed of which the material portions are as follows did not create a valid wakf, and that the property was alienable:—

"I have assigned eight annas of the above-mentioned endowed properties for the mosque built by me, and the expenses thereof. Out of the remaining eight annas, I have made wakf of four annas in favour of Mussumat [234] Jamila Khatun alias Dhun Bibi, daughter of my daughter, and her descendants, as also her descendants' descendants so long as they may continue to have offspring; and when they no longer exist, then in favour of the poor and needy. I have made wakf of the remaining four annas in favour of my daughter Bibi Budrunnessa and her descendants as also her descendants' descendants how low soever, and when they no longer exist, then in favour of the poor and needy. * * * After payment of the Government revenue and the collection charges, etc., and after deduction of the mutwalli's towliat right from the proceeds of the above-mentioned endowed properties, the surplus, whatever it may be, shall be divided as follows:—i.e., four annas thereof shall be given to Jamila Khatun alias Dhun Bibi, and four annas thereof to Budrunnessa Bibi, inasmuch as four annas share has been endowed in favour of each of the said ladies, etc.

"Golam Sharuff appointed his wife Nosima Bibi as the first mutwalli; on her death, the mutwallis were to be Dhun Bibi and Budrunnessa Bibi, the first defendant, 'both of whom will get the towliat right in two equal shares. One of the male descendants of each of these two Mussumats, so long as such descendants may continue to have offspring, shall be appointed as mutwalli of the endowed properties, and each of the two mutwallis so appointed shall get the towliat right in two equal shares'."

There are many expressions to be found in the various cases on this subject, which indicate that, of late years at all events, the opinion of many of the Judges has been that only such dispositions of property as would come within the meaning of charitable dispositions in the ordinary English meaning of the words would constitute valid wakf, but I believe the four cases I have cited are the only ones in the books in which the question is decided whether a reservation of the income of the consecrated estate for the benefit of a family so long as it existed would render the grant for a charitable purpose inoperative and illusory, and inasmuch as in three out of these four cases it was held that the dedication was valid, notwithstanding the reservation, it seems to me that at the present time the weight of authority is in favour of that view.

It now remains to consider whether the consecration in the present case was for the benefit of a body which from its nature cannot fail, and if it were, whether the reservations out of the grant for its benefit are of such a character as to render the grant itself inoperative or illusory. I think that the disposition of the wakf property which the grantor intended to effect by this deed was not for [235] the benefit of the poor of Dacca, which is the permanent body mentioned in the deed, but was merely for the aggrandisement of his own family and to render the property inalienable. I think that his intention as shown by the deed was that the sum of about Rs. 75 only should be expended in charity—of about Rs. 400 in the maintenance of the family, and that the remainder should be accumulated with the object of creating a great estate, and if this view of the meaning of the deed is correct, it is manifest that its object could not have been to benefit the poor. It is said that the meaning of the clause which gives the mutwallis power to spend whatever they might think fit for the benefit of the grantor's soul is in effect a power to spend the whole income, after deducting the Rs. 400, upon the poor, but reading the deed as a whole, I cannot think that such was the grantor's meaning. I think his intention was to create a great family estate, and I do not think such a purpose is one for which a valid wakf can be created within the doctrine laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. My answer to the first question referred to this Bench is that the disposition of the grantor's property made by the deed of the 4th Aughran 1281 was not a valid wakf of the property dealt with by the deed, and as that is, in my opinion, the only question in these appeals, I think that the appeals should be dismissed and the cross-objections allowed with costs in all Courts.

According to the opinion of the majority of the Judges, the result will be that the appeals will be dismissed with costs and the cross-objection will also be dismissed, that is, the order of the District Judge relating to the charge of Rs. 75 a year on the property of Bikani Mia will be maintained with costs in proportion.

BASHI CHUNDER SEN (Plaintiff) v. ENAYET ALI AND ANOTHER
(Defendants).^{*} [5th August, 1892.]

Estoppel—Purchaser at execution sale—Representative—Mortgage by alleged benamidar—Evidence Act (I of 1872,) s. 115.

E, being in possession of the documents of title, mortgaged land to the plaintiff. E and his father A borrowed money from one R, who obtained a decree against A, and purchased the land at the execution sale. In a suit for foreclosure of the plaintiff's mortgage against R and E, the lower Courts held that A was the true owner, but the lower appellate Court did not decide whether the plaintiff's mortgage was a valid transaction.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1399 of 1891 against the decree of Baboo Rabi Chundra Gangooly, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 16th of May 1891, affirming the decree of Baboo Ashutosh Banerjee, Munsif of that district, dated the 31st January 1890.

Held, on second appeal, that R acquired the property adversely to A, and not as his representative, and that there was no estoppel against him.

Dinendronath Sannial v. Ramkumar Ghose (1) and Lala Perbhu Lal v. Mylne (2) followed.

Held, further, that it was not necessary to decide whether the plaintiff's mortgage was valid as against A, the plaintiff not having raised the question in the lower Court, but that, assuming the mortgage to be valid, the onus did not lie upon R to prove that the mortgage was not binding upon A.

Bhugwan Doss v. Upooch Singh (3) observed upon.

ENAYET ALI, the defendant No. 1, on the 6th January 1876, borrowed from the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 150, and as security for the repayment of the money with interest mortgaged to him the landed property specified in the plaint. On the 22nd August 1878, the principal and interest remaining unpaid, Enayet Ali borrowed a further sum of Rs. 30, and executed another deed of conditional sale in favour of the plaintiff to secure the sum of Rs. 250 with interest. The documents of title relating to the land and the kabuliyat of the tenant were deposited with the plaintiff at the time of the execution of the first deed.

[237] On the 18th April 1876, Enayet Ali and his father Ahmad Ali borrowed money from the defendant No. 2, Rahat Baksh, and executed a hand-note in his favour. In 1877 Rahat Baksh obtained a decree against them, and on the 10th December 1878, purchased the property at the execution sale and obtained possession in due course. Previous to the sale Ahmad Ali claimed the property as wakf, and on the claim being disallowed in the execution proceedings, he afterwards brought a suit against Rahat Baksh which was dismissed.

The plaintiff being unable to recover the money due upon his mortgage filed, in the year 1880, a petition of foreclosure, under Reg. XVII of 1806, against Enayet Ali and Rahat Baksh, and notices (as he alleged) were issued to the defendants. Subsequently he filed the present suit against Enayet Ali and Rahat Baksh, alleging that the year prescribed by the Regulation had expired and that the conditional sale had become conclusive, and praying in the alternative (in case the Court did not think it proper to declare the sale conclusive) for foreclosure under the Transfer of Property Act.

Enayet Ali did not appear, but Rahat Baksh contested the case on the ground that Enayet had no right to the land, Ahmad being the real owner, and that his own title as purchaser at the execution sale ought to prevail. He also alleged that the mortgage by Enayet Ali to the plaintiff and the proceedings under the Regulation were fraudulent and collusive.

The Court of first instance held that Ahmad, and not Enayet, was the proprietor of the land in suit, and that he was in possession of it until Rahat Baksh purchased it and was put into possession through the Court. The Court further found that the plaintiff's deeds represented a genuine transaction on his part, but that he had advanced the money without sufficient enquiry, and that the proceedings under the Regulation were defective.

Upon appeal the plaintiff contended that Ahmad, having brought the land in the name of his son, and having allowed Enayet to deal with it as his own property, was estopped from showing the benami nature of the transaction.

The lower appellate Court, without deciding as to the bona fides of the plaintiff's mortgage, held that Ahmad Ali was the real [238] owner, and upon the question of estoppel observed—"It does not appear that it was with the knowledge and consent of Ahmad Ali that his son Enayet borrowed money from the plaintiff on the security of the land in suit. There is nothing to show that Ahmad allowed his son to deal with the land as his own. Besides, the position of the second defendant is different from that of an ordinary assignee. He is the purchaser of the right, title, and interest of Ahmad Ali in the disputed land at a sale in execution of a decree, and I do not think that he is precluded from showing that in point of fact Ahmad, and not Enayet, was the real owner."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court principally upon the ground of estoppel.

Baboo Harendra Narayan Mitra appeared for the appellant.

Baboo Durga Mohun Das and Baboo Tarakishore Chowdhry appeared for the respondent Rahat Baksh.

The judgment of the High Court (MACPHERSON and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit for possession of property the mortgage of which is said to have been foreclosed under Reg. XVII of 1806, or, if the proceedings under that Regulation are found to be defective, as they have been, for foreclosure under the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

On the 6th January 1876, the first defendant, Enayet Ali, the son of Ahmad Ali, mortgaged the property by way of conditional sale to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 150. In July or August 1878 he received a further advance of Rs. 30, and executed a fresh deed of the same character to secure that sum, as well as the principal and interest due under the first deed. Title deeds, consisting of a kobala by which Enayet Ali is said to have purchased the land, and some kabuliyats, were made over when the first transaction took place, and have been produced by the plaintiff. In 1876, Enayet Ali and his father, Ahmad Ali, borrowed some money from the second defendant, Rahat Baksh, who got a decree against them in 1877, and in December 1878 brought this property to sale in execution of his decree and purchased it himself. The sale was preceded by a claim on the part of Ahmad Ali that the property was wakf and not saleable. This was rejected, and a [239] suit which Ahmad Ali afterwards brought to have it declared that the property was wakf was also dismissed.

Both the Courts have found that Ahmad Ali was the true owner, and on this ground the lower appellate Court has confirmed the decree of the Munsif dismissing the suit without deciding whether the mortgage by Enayet Ali to the plaintiff was a bona fide transaction.

It is contended for the appellant (the plaintiff) that the Subordinate Judge has not properly dealt with the case, and that he ought to have found that there was a good mortgage by Enayet Ali, and that the respondent was estopped from denying Enayet Ali's title.

We think that as against the respondent there is no estoppel. As pointed out in Dinendronath Sannial v. Ramkumar Ghose (1), a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree is in a different position to a purchaser at a private sale, and acquires the title of the judgment-debtor, not through the judgment-debtor, but by operation of law and adversely to him. In Lala Parbhu Lal v. Mylne (1) it was also held that a purchaser at an execution sale is not the representative of the judgment-debtor, and is not estopped by the conduct which would estop the latter from denying the title of the person through whom title was claimed by the other side.

But an estoppel is only a matter of proof. If the plaintiff could take advantage of it, the effect would be to prevent the defendant from denying the title of Enayet Ali and to establish in that way the plaintiff's case. The plaintiff could, however, establish his case equally well by proving that his mortgage was good as against Ahmad Ali, whose title the defendant had acquired, and in the opinion of both the Courts established. If he had a good mortgage on the property when it was in the hands of Ahmad Ali he had, we conceive, apart from any question of estoppel, an equally good mortgage when the property passed to the defendant. But the plaintiff set up no such case as that. He asserted the title of Enayet Ali, the defendant asserted that of Ahmad Ali, and they went to trial on the issue whether the property belonged to the one or the other. That being so, the plaintiff cannot now [240] raise a case which was not raised or put in issue in the lower Courts. Had the suit been against Ahmad Ali, it might have been sufficient for the plaintiff on the issue as to ownership to prove a mortgage by Enayet Ali under circumstances which, if not rebutted, might bind Ahmad Ali. But the defendant as purchaser at an execution sale had no knowledge of the circumstances under which Enayet Ali made the mortgage, and he was entitled, if the plaintiff intended to rely on them, to have the question put in issue and fully enquired into. If we allowed the point to be taken now, we should have to remand the case for that purpose. The case is not one in which, even if we could, we should be disposed to show any indulgence. The plaintiff has remained silent for nearly 10 years, and we cannot suppose he was ignorant of the title set up by the defendant or of the litigation by which he secured it; even after the written statement was filed he did not ask for an issue on the question whether his mortgage was good as against Ahmad Ali.

In all the cases cited by the appellant, with the exception of Bhugwan Doss v. Upooch Singh (2) and Poreshnath Mukerji v. Anathnath Deb (3) the contest was between the true owner of the property, as plaintiff or defendant, and a purchaser from his benamidar. They do not, therefore, apply to the present case; nor do the two excepted cases apply. In the case of Bhugwan Doss v. Upooch Singh (2) it was found that although the name of the benamidar was used, the mortgage was in fact effected by the true owner, and in the other case it was held that a mortgagee who would be estopped by the representation of his mortgagor was not placed in any better position by his having purchased the mortgage property at a sale in execution of the decree which he had obtained on his mortgage bond.

Some reliance was placed on a dictum of Phear, J., in the case of Bhugwan Doss v. Upooch Singh (2), as showing that the onus was on the defendant to prove that the mortgage was not binding on Ahmad Ali, but the dictum, though applied to that case, referred to one in which the true owner was contesting an alienation by his benamidar. As already observed, the defendant is not a representative of Ahmad Ali.

[241] In the view taken we may assume that there was a real mortgage by Enayet Ali, and it is unnecessary to remand the case to have that point determined.

It was lastly argued that as the mortgage carried with it a guarantee of title, some relief should be given as against the mortgagor: but no such relief was asked for in the plaint, and it is too late to ask for it now. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Sale for arrears of rent—Patni sale—Mortgage security, conversion of—Surplus sale proceeds, charge of mortgagee upon—Charge—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 73.

A patni taluk having been sold for arrears of rent under Regulation VIII of 1819, the surplus sale proceeds held in deposit in the Collectorate were drawn out at intervals by the holders of money decrees against the patnidars. The plaintiff, who held a mortgage of the taluk, sued to recover from these decree-holders the amount of his unsatisfied claim. Two of the defendants pleaded that, over and above the amount taken by them, there remained in deposit sufficient money to satisfy the plaintiff, and that the other unsecured creditors who had drawn out this balance should alone be held liable.

Held, that the surplus sale proceeds were to be regarded as the shape into which the plaintiff's security was converted, and as before such conversion the security could not be split up into parts, the plaintiff was entitled to realise the balance due to him out of the whole of the surplus, as otherwise his security would be diminished.

On the 25th July 1883, the accounts being adjusted and Rs. 2,600 being found due to the plaintiff, Khairat Ali borrowed from him a further sum of Rs. 6,400 upon a further mortgage bond being executed. The debt remained unpaid, and upon Khairat Ali's death the plaintiff sued the defendants Nos. 6 to 11 and obtained a decree on the 9th May 1888, for the sale of the mortgaged properties. costs a surplus of Rs. 6,564-12-3 remained in deposit in the Collectorate. The plaintiff applied to the Subordinate Judge for the attachment of the surplus sale proceeds, but his prayer was refused on the receipt of a rubakari from the Collector stating that there was another attachment. Subsequently the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, who held money decrees against defendants Nos. 6 to 11, drew out the whole of the surplus in the following manner :—On the 30th November defendants Nos. 1 and 2 drew out Rs. 1,995-2; on the 14th December defendant No. 3 drew out Rs. 2,493-2-3, and on the 21st December defendants Nos. 4 and 5 drew out Rs. 2,076-8. The plaintiff then proceeded to execute his mortgage decree against other properties. A balance of Rs. 3,150-12 remaining due to him upon the mortgage bond, the plaintiff brought this suit to have it declared that the whole of the surplus sale proceeds were subject to his lien, and praying for a decree for Rs. 3,150-12 against the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 in such proportions as the Court should think fit.

The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff's mortgage lien was transferred to the surplus proceeds by the operation of s. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), that the plaintiff had a right to follow the surplus sale proceeds, and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were liable for the amount claimed in proportion to the sums respectively drawn out by them from the Collectorate. From this decision the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 appealed and contended (inter alia) that as there was Rs. 4,569-10 left in the Collectorate on the 30th November after they had drawn out the amount of their money decree, which sum was more than sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, the other defendants [243] who had subsequently drawn out the balance, Rs. 4,669-10 should alone have been held liable. The lower appellate Court held that the whole of the money in deposit was subject to the plaintiff's lien, and that the plaintiff was entitled to resort to any and all of the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 for payment.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rashbehary Ghose and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey appeared for the appellants.

Baboo Srinath Dass and Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee appeared for the plaintiff-respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (MACPHERSON and BANERJEE, JJ.) was delivered by BANERJEE, J.—This was a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent, who held a mortgage of a patni taluk, which has subsequently been sold for arrears of rent and free of the mortgage, to recover from the principal defendants the surplus proceeds of the patni sale which they have taken in satisfaction of decrees held by them against the defaulting patnidars.

The defence of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the appellants before us, raised (amongst other points not necessary now to consider) this : namely, that as there was left sufficient money in deposit in the Collectorate over and above the amount taken by them, they are not liable for the plaintiff's claim.

The Courts below have disallowed this contention of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and the only point argued in this appeal on their behalf is, whether the defendants are liable for any portion of the plaintiff's claim when the money taken by them out of the surplus sale proceeds still left enough in deposit in the Collectorate to enable the plaintiff to realize the mortgage debt from it.

The provision of the law bearing on the subject is to be found in s. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), which enacts that "when mortgaged property is sold through failure to pay arrears of revenue or rent due in respect thereof, the mortgagee has a charge on the surplus (if any) of the proceeds, after payment thereof of the said arrears, for the amount remaining due on the mortgage, unless the sale has been occasioned by some default on his part." It is not denied that a literal construction [244] of this section would give the mortgagee a claim on the whole and on every part of the surplus proceeds; but it is contended that the section ought to receive a more liberal construction, and that it ought to be construed so as to allow unsecured creditors of the mortgagor to realize their claims out of the surplus sale proceeds so long as they do not reduce the amount below the mortgage debt. And as in the present case the money taken out by the appellants did not reduce the amount in deposit in the Collectorate below that limit, it is argued that they ought to be exonerated from all liability.

We do not consider this contention to be sound. For though, if the amount that had been left in deposit in the Collectorate after the appellants had drawn out their money had still remained there, the mortgagee might have satisfied his claim without bringing any suit against them, still as there is nothing in the law to prevent other creditors of the mortgagor from drawing the money in deposit in satisfaction of their claims as has been done in this case, it must be held that any one who takes any portion of such money does so under the liability of being sued in case the mortgagee finds any difficulty in getting himself paid. To hold that unsecured creditors taking portions of the sale proceeds are exempt from liability to the mortgagee so long as they leave enough in the hands of the Collector would evidently have the effect of diminishing the mortgagee's security. For the persons who may take out money from the amount in deposit subsequently may not be sufficiently solvent, and the mortgagee may not be able to realize his money from them with the same facility that he might have in his realization if he got a decree against all the persons who took any portion of the money. We think that the proper view to take of the matter is to regard the surplus sale proceeds as the shape into which the mortgage security is converted, and as before such conversion the security could not be split up into parts, and the mortgagee was entitled to realize his money out of the whole of it, its conversion by sale into money ought not to affect his rights in this respect. The point taken before us therefore fails, and the second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

[6th August, 1891.]Appeal—Order of District Judge as to security—Insufficiency of security—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 263—Act XXVII of 1860, s. 6.

No appeal lies against an order made, whether in pursuance of the directions of the High Court or otherwise by a District Judge as to security, on the ground that such security is insufficient.

Monmohinee Dasse v. Khetter Gopal Day (1) referred to.

IN the matter of an application by the petitioner, the widow of one L. T. Lucas, for a certificate of administration under Act XXVII of 1860 to the estate of her husband, which application was opposed by the present appellants, the High Court directed the District Judge of Backergunge to take security in the sum of Rs. 10,000 from Mrs. Lucas, the security to be such as in his discretion he considered sufficient for that sum. Mrs. Lucas was accordingly called upon by the District Judge to furnish security, and she offered certain properties, which the District Judge, being of opinion that they were fully worth Rs. 10,000, accepted as sufficient.

Against that order of the District Judge the objectors appealed to the High Court, on the ground that the properties offered by Mrs. Lucas as security were insufficient.

Mr. Bell with Baboo Boykant Nath Das, for the appellants.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), with Baboo Saroda Churn Sen, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

No authority has been shown to us for holding that an order of this kind is appealable on the ground suggested. We find that this Court has directed that the District Judge shall require security to an amount laid down by this Court, the security being [246] such as in his discretion he shall consider sufficient for that amount. It appears to us that it would be in the highest degree inconvenient to treat such an order as has been passed by the Judge as appealable. The Indian Succession Act provides by s. 263 that orders made by the District Judge shall be subject to appeal to the High Court under the rules contained in the Code of Civil Procedure so far as these rules are applicable. So far as that section furnishes us with a guide by analogy as to whether this order is applicable or not, the conclusion is that it is not so, because no provision is made by the Code of Civil Procedure for an appeal against an order made, whether in pursuance of the directions of this Court or otherwise, by a Subordinate Court, founded on the ground that security insufficient in point of quality has been accepted. Such orders are not appealable at all, and we think that we ought to follow that analogy in the absence of any thing to the contrary being shown. Then it is said that this is in fact an appeal in which the whole matter is before us, that the whole of the matter of the grant of the certificate is before us, and that therefore, treating it in that way, we ought to deal with this question of security as arising in the appeal generally upon the whole matter. This Court in the case of Monmohinee Dassee v. Khetter Gopal Dey (1) declined to act upon that view in a case under Act XXVII of 1860, an appeal with reference to a security order, in which the Court in considering whether s. 6 of that Act did or did not provide an appeal for such a case, held that it did not, saying, with reference to an authority cited in favour of the appeal, there is nothing which affirms this Court's power to hear an appeal as to any other matters than those which are connected with the propriety or otherwise of an order made granting a certificate; apparently considering that the question of the kind now before us as to security is not one involving the question of the propriety or otherwise of the granting of a certificate.

We think that we must hold that no appeal lies in this case. The appeal will accordingly be dismissed, and we think that the parties should bear their own costs.

A patni taluk was sold in execution of a decree, but the auction-purchaser, although he obtained possession, did not get himself registered in the zemindar's serishtā. In a suit by the zemindar against the former holder of the patni for rent due for a period previous to the sale, held, that the suit lay against him, and that the rights of the zemindar were not affected by the existence of the remedy provided by s. 7 of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1819.

Lukhinarain Mi'ter v. Khetter Pal Singh Roy (2) referred to.

[R., 14 Ind. Cas. 49 (50).]

THIS was a suit brought by the plaintiff Tincowri Dasi to recover arrears of rent from Assar 1293 to Magh 1296 in respect of a patni taluk. The defendants admitted having held the taluk up to the end of Aughran 1294, corresponding with the 15th December 1887, but contended that, as the patni taluk was then sold in execution of a decree and purchased by one Suresh Chundra Banerji, they were not liable for rent which accrued after that date. The auction-purchaser had obtained possession of the taluk, but did not get himself registered in the zemindar's serishtā as he disputed the amount of fee payable by him.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit.

The judgment of the High Court (PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In this case the appellants were the holders of a patni, their interest in which has been sold in execution. The purchaser in [248] execution has not agreed with the zemindar with respect to the amount of fee payable by him on the transfer of the patni to his name under the provisions of s. 5, Reg. VIII of 1819. The purchaser appears to dispute the amount of that fee, and as the result of the controversy the purchaser at the execution-sale has not got himself registered, and although he is in possession, the rent for which this suit is brought against the old tenant is undoubtedly unpaid. A decree has been given by the lower Court against the old tenant for the amount of the rent due, and he appeals. No question has been raised in the argument before us as to the fact of the rent being due, or as to the amount of the rent which is due, but it is contended that inasmuch as the former owner of the patni who has lost it in the execution-sale is not in possession, and inasmuch as the purchaser is in possession, the suit ought not to have been allowed to proceed against him, but that the purchaser who is in possession ought to have been proceeded against under the terms of s. 7 of Reg. VIII of 1819, and it is also contended that inasmuch as that section confers upon the zemindar the exceptional power of attachment through a sezawal against the purchaser in possession, that by implication ought to be treated as constituting the only remedy of the zemindar, when the assignee of the tenancy is in possession, and as taking away the power of suing the old tenant. In the case of Luckhinarain Mitter v. Khetter Pal Singh Roy (1) cited by the Subordinate Judge, s. 7 of the Regulation is thus referred to:—"The zemindar or other superior holder in certain cases is empowered to attach the property, if the subordinate holder neglects to register his name and to hold it in trust for the subordinate holder, and in all cases until the transfer is registered the old tenant and the tenure itself are liable for the rent due." Now, it appears to us that we cannot challenge the law so laid down by this Court many years ago. Whether this is a casus omissus in the law, or whether the former tenant, compelled in this suit to pay the rent of a property of which he is not in possession, has any remedy against the unregistered purchaser in possession, provided it be established that that purchaser has refused unreasonably and improperly to get himself registered in [249] the zemindar's books, and thereby to relieve the former tenant from liability, is a matter which is not before us, and which we have no right to determine. What we have before us is simply this question, does or does not this suit lie against the old tenant, and we think we are bound to hold that it does, and that the rights of the zemindar, as stated in the judgment of this Court, to which we have referred, are not affected by the existence of the remedy provided by s. 7, and that there is no defence to the suit.

We must therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885), s. 158—Incidents of tenancy, Application to determine—Dispute as to tenancy—Landlord and tenant.

The object of s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is merely to provide a summary procedure for settling disputes between landlord and tenant in regard to the particulars referred to in clauses (a), (c) and (d) of the section. Though clause (b) does authorize the Court to determine the name and description of the tenant, this was not intended to and does not authorize the Court to decide conclusively disputes as to the right to possession of the land. An issue, therefore, regarding a dispute as to the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties in a proceeding under s. 158 can only be decided collaterally, and does not arise between the parties in such a manner as to make the decision upon it res judicata between them in a subsequent regular suit.

Bhopendro Narayan Dutt v. Nemye Chand Mondul (1) and Debendro Kumar Bundopadhyaya v. Bhupendro Narain Dutt (2) referred to.

[R., 21 C. 378 (333); 30 C. 339 (363).]

THE plaintiff Raja Peary Mohun Mukerjee sued to eject Ali Sheikh, the defendant No. 1, from and recover possession of a certain plot of land.

[250] The plaintiff alleged that he was in khas possession of the land in question, that the defendant No. 1, contrary to his order, and in collusion with Promodanandan Gossami, the defendant No. 2, took possession of the land, alleging that he had obtained an amalnama from the latter; that the plaintiff as the landlord cancelled, the said amalnama and settled the land with Motilal Mandal, the defendant No. 3, that thereupon the defendant No. 1 made an application under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to have it declared that he was the plaintiff's tenant in respect of the disputed land and obtained a decision in his favour; that against this decision an appeal was preferred, but it was dismissed for default. The plaintiff prayed that the amalnama granted by the defendant No. 2 might be declared invalid, and that the decree passed in favour of the defendant No. 1, under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, might be set aside.

The main defence of the defendant No. 1 was that the suit was barred as being res judicata by reason of the decision in his favour under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The defendant No. 2 alleged that he as the agent of the plaintiff had settled the land with the defendant No. 1.

The Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that the contention of the defendant No. 1 was right, and that the suit was barred under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, and his decision was upheld by the District Judge.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court on the grounds (a) that s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was applicable only to cases of an admitted tenancy, and not to cases where the existence of the Baboo Pran Nath Pundit, for the appellant.

Baboo Saroda Prasanna Roy, for the respondents.

[251] The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiff in this suit seeks to eject the defendant No. 1, Ali Sheikh, from a certain plot of land, and to obtain khas possession of the land himself. He also prays that a lease of the land granted by the defendant No. 2 to the defendant No. 1 may be declared invalid, and that a former decree passed on an application by the defendant No. 1 under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in which it was declared that the defendant No. 1 was his (i.e., the present plaintiff's) tenant in respect of the land in dispute, may be set aside. It is alleged that the defendant No. 2 was formerly the plaintiff's gumastha, and that when he let the land to the defendant No. 1, he exceeded his powers, and that the plaintiff subsequently let it to the defendant No. 3, who according to the plaintiff ought now to be in occupation of it, but who has been kept out of it by the defendant No. 1.

Both the lower Courts have held that the suit is barred by the rule of res judicata; inasmuch as it has been already decided in the application under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that the defendant No. 1 is the plaintiff's tenant in respect of the land. They have therefore dismissed the suit.

In appeal the plaintiff contends that the present suit is not barred by res judicata, that the Courts which decided the application under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act were not Courts of competent jurisdiction, inasmuch as they were not entitled in such a proceeding to decide between the plaintiff and the defendant whether there existed the relation of landlord and tenant between them: in other words, it is said this matter was not directly and substantially in issue between the parties in the previous proceeding, as it is only in cases in which the relation of landlord and tenant is admitted to exist between parties that a Court can entertain an application under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The question appears to be a somewhat difficult one. On the one hand, in favour of the appellant there appear to be the following considerations: (1) that the words in the section "on the application of the landlord or the tenant of the land (not on the application of a person alleging himself to be the landlord or the tenant of the land)" seem to point to the conclusion that the Court [252] is meant to deal under s. 158 with the case of an admitted tenancy; (2) the section while enumerating the points to be determined by a Court does not say that it is to determine the question of the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant. It therefore does not seem to contemplate the existence of a dispute on this point, and (3) that the court-fee payable on the application under s. 158 is either 1 anna or 8 annas according as the value of the subject-matter of the suit is below or above Rs. 50. It can hardly have been intended by the Legislature that an important question, such as that of the relation of landlord and tenant, should be adjudicated on on payment of such an insignificant court-fee duty. Then in the case of Bhupendro Narayan Dutt v. Nemye Chand Mundul (1) it has been said that "if the appellants had altogether denied the respondent's tenancy, they must have brought an action of ejectment, but by acknowledging him as their tenant, they seem to bring themselves within the provisions of the section." This passage certainly favours the view that it is only in case of an admitted tenancy that Courts have jurisdiction under s. 158. Again, in the Full Bench case of Debendra Kumar Bundopadhyaya v. Bhupendro Narain Dutt (2) it is said:—"It is, we think, clear that the petitioners assert that no tenancy in fact existed between themselves and the opposite party at or before the date of the petition, and the admission of a tenancy, we think, merely amounts to an expression of willingness on their part, that a tenancy should now be treated as existing in order to give jurisdiction under s. 158, and so to enable them to remove the opposite party from the land. This admission does not in our opinion bring the case within the meaning of the section, the object of which is to enable the Court to ascertain what are the incidents of the existing arrangements between a landlord and his tenant, and not to enable the Court to make a new contract between the parties between whom no contract was in existence at and before the date of the application." This extract, too, is in favour of the view that a Court has jurisdiction under s. 158, Bengal Tenancy Act, only when a tenancy is admitted, and that it should not under that section proceed to decide a dispute as to the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties to the application.

[253] On the other hand, it may, no doubt, be said that when the section gives the Court power to determine "the name and description of the tenant (if any)" it gives it authority to decide such a dispute; for, if there be such a dispute, the name and description of the tenant cannot be decided without enquiring into and deciding the dispute. But we are of opinion that such an issue can only be decided collaterally, and that it does not arise between the parties in a proceeding under s. 158, in such a manner as to make the decision upon it res judicata between the parties in a subsequent regular suit. In our opinion the object of s. 158 is merely to provide a summary procedure for settling disputes between landlord and tenant in regard to the particulars referred to in cls. (a), (c) and (d) of the section. Though cl. (b) does authorize the Court to determine the name and description of the tenant, this, we think, was not intended to and does not authorize the Court to decide conclusively disputes as to who is the tenant or as to who is entitled to the occupation of the land. The section in other words does not empower the Court to decide disputes as to the right to possession of the land. It could not in a proceeding under s. 158 of the Act pass a decree for possession; so that if it were to decide such questions it might declare one person entitled to possession, while another might ostensibly hold, and might continue to hold, actual and direct possession of the land. Further, the section does not empower the Court to bring all persons claiming to have rights on the land before it. It might therefore be, if the respondent's contention as to the meaning of the section be correct, that the Court would decide questions of the right to possession without having all the persons having conflicting claims to the land before it. This seems to have been the case in the previous suit between the present plaintiff and the defendant No. 1; for the defendant No. 1, the applicant in that proceeding, did not make the defendant No. 3, who the plaintiff alleges is the tenant of the land, a party to his application under s. 158. Under these circumstances we decree the appeal and remand the suit to the Court of first instance to be decided on its merits. Costs to abide the result.

Second Appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885), s. 153—Cesses, suit for—Bengal Act IX of 1880, s. 47—Appeal in cases under Rs. 100—Meaning of 'rent.'

Although the Bengal Tenancy Act declares that in ss. 53 to 68 and in ss. 72 to 75, "rent" includes cesses, yet these are enabling provisions, passed to extend the meaning of "rent," and it in no way interferes with the law refusing a right of appeal in suits below Rs. 100 in value, which law is made applicable to suits for cesses by s. 47 of Bengal Act IX of 1880.

[F., 4 C.L. J. 119 (120).]

THE suits out of which this appeal (and five other appeals) arose were brought to recover road and public works cesses from the defendants. The suits were each below Rs. 100 in value, and the only question material to this report was whether a second appeal lay to the High Court, to which the defendants appealed, both the lower Courts having decided in favour of the plaintiff.

The judgment of the Court (O'KINEALY and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

These appeals were heard together, and our decision in any one of them will govern the others. They have been laid for the recovery of road cess and public work cess, and are each of small value. The question raised for our decision is whether an appeal lies to this Court.

It is not denied that if the ordinary procedure for realizing rents by suit is followed, as directed by the Acts under which cesses are levied, no appeal would lie; but it is said that because the definition of "rent" in the Rent Act also includes cesses for [255] certain purposes, suits for cesses should not be treated as suits for rent, and that a second appeal lies.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 194 of 1891, against the decree of J. Crawford, Esq., Judge of Hooghly, dated the 11th of December 1890, affirming the decree of Baboo Gopal Chunder Banerjee, Munsif of Hooghly, dated the 21st of December 1889.

No doubt the Act declares that in ss. 53 to 68, both inclusive, and in ss. 72 to 75, both inclusive, "rent" includes cesses, but we think that these are enabling provisions passed to extend the meaning of "rent," and it in no way interferes with the law refusing a right of appeal in suits below one hundred rupees in value, which law is made applicable to suits for cesses by s. 47 of Bengal Act IX of 1880.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

ABDUL HOSSEIN (Decree-holder) v. FAZILUN (Judgment-Debtor).^{*}
[10th August, 1892.]

Limitation Act, 1877, sch. II, art. 179, cl. 4—Execution of decree—Step-in-aid of execution.

In execution of a decree certain property was attached and the sale proclamation issued and served. Prior to the sale the decree-holder applied to the Court executing the decree to release a portion of the property from attachment, and stating that he had, at the request of the judgment-debtor, decided not to proceed with the sale, asked that the sale might be postponed and the case struck off the file, the attachment, so far as the remainder of the property was concerned, being maintained. The application was acceded to and the case struck off the file. On a subsequent application to execute the decree, held, that the above application was not an application to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of cl. 4, art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act of 1877, as it had rather the effect of temporarily retarding the execution, and that the application to continue the attachment under the circumstances of the case, even supposing it to have been a substantive application apart from the other prayers coupled with it, had merely the effect of leaving things precisely where they were, and did not advance the execution in any respect whatsoever.

[F., 30 C. 761 (770) = 8 C.W.N. 351; R., 3 C.L.J. 240 = 10 C.W.N. 209.]

[256] THE facts of the case which give rise to this appeal were as follows :—

In a suit brought by one Jalaluddin against Cherag Ali, the plaintiff on the 31st August 1881 obtained a decree for Rs. 2,104. Cherag Ali died on the 19th October 1882, being succeeded by his wife Mussamut Amiran, daughter Mussamut Mustakimini, and nephew Noorodin. It appeared that one Lal Behari Lal held a money decree of the Munsif's Court against Jalaluddin, and in execution thereof caused the decree in the suit of Jalaluddin against Cherag Ali to be attached and sold by the Munsif. The sale took place on the 15th February 1888 and realized only Rs. 175, and Abdul Hossein (the appellant in this appeal) and one Dwarka Pershad became the purchasers, and by virtue of that purchase they sought in these proceedings to execute the decree so obtained by Jalaluddin.

The present application to execute that decree was made on the 27th February 1890, and in the first instance a note was issued under s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code to the legal representatives of Cherag Ali. Certain objections to the application were filed by them, but were disallowed on the 14th June 1890, owing to their non-appearance in support of them. Notice was then issued under s. 248, and the legal representatives came in and filed several objections, the only one material for the purpose of this report being that execution of the decree was barred by limitation.

It appeared that the last application for execution of the decree by Jalaluddin was filed on the 11th January 1887, and the sale proclamation was served on the 6th February 1887. On the 7th March following, Jalaluddin filed an application asking the Court to release a part of the property from attachment and to strike off the case, keeping in force the attachment upon the remaining property, and on the 8th March the Court struck off the case from the file, but directed the attachment to continue.

It was urged on behalf of the objectors before the Subordinate Judge that the application of the 7th March 1887 was an application to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of cl. 4, art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, [257] and they relied on the case of Ghansham v. Mukha (1) as supporting that contention. Upon that contention the Subordinate Judge observed as follows:—

“In that case the judgment-debtor presented an application, showing that an adjustment had been made between him and the decree-holder, that he had paid Rs. 10, and that he promised to pay the balance thereafter. The decree-holder filed a receipt certifying payment of the Rs. 10, and the case was struck off. The Allahabad High Court held that the application was a step-in-aid of execution of the decree as provided by art. 179, sch. II of Act XV of 1877. The application no doubt furthers the execution to the extent of Rs 10. In the present case the property had already been attached, sale proclamation was served, and the property was to be sold on the appointed date, when the decree-holder represented to the Court that he wanted to release from attachment a portion of the property. And as regards the rest of the property, at the verbal request of the judgment-debtors, he had decided not to proceed with the sale, and so he asked the Court to release a part of the property, postpone the sale that was to come on, and strike off the case, keeping the attachment over the rest of the property in force. I think this application, far from being a step-in-aid of execution, was a step just the other way, and there is no analogy between the two cases. Here not a pice was paid by the judgment-debtors. The application asking the Court to strike off the case was a step to postpone or delay execution, and the prayer to keep the attachment in force was not a step-in-aid of execution, for the attachment had been already made, and asking the Court to keep the attachment in force did not further execution. I therefore hold that the decree-holder cannot have a fresh start of three years from the 7th March 1887, when Jalaluddin made his last application. The case of Nukanna v. Ramasami (2) has been cited, but that turned upon the language used in cl. 4, art. 167 of the Limitation Act of 1871, whereas the language of cl. 4 of art. 179 of the present Act of 1879 is something different.”

(1) 3 A. 320.

(2) 2 M. 218.

[258] The Subordinate Judge then went on to consider as to whether certain proceedings taken by the present appellants prevented the application from being barred, but as these formed no portion of the grounds relied on in the High Court, it is immaterial to notice them or the other points raised in the Court of first instance. Deciding the question of limitation in favour of the judgment-debtors, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the application.

The decree-holder appealed to the District Judge, whose judgment upon the question of limitation was as follows:—

"The point of limitation depends upon the legal effect of the application of the original decree-holder Jalaluddin, which was filed on the 7th March 1887. In this application the decree-holder prayed the Court to release a portion of the property attached, and to strike off the case from the file, keeping in force the attachment upon the remaining property. On the authority of the rulings in Jamnadas v. Lalitaram (1), Nukanna v. Ramasami (2), Ghansham v. Mukha (3) and Chowdhry Paroosh Ram Das v. Kali Puddo Banerjee (4), it has been strenuously contended that the mere application to continue the attachment is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of cl. 4, art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, and hence the present application for execution is not barred by limitation. Dr. Stokes in his Anglo-Indian Codes, vol. II, pp. 951 and 1002, doubts the correctness of the Allahabad ruling cited above, and the opinion expressed by the Subordinate Judge also receives support from Mainath Kuari v. Debi Baksh Rai (5) and Fakir Muhammad v. Ghulam Husain (6). As the rulings on this point do not seem to be uniform, I decline to interfere with the finding of the Subordinate Judge with regard to it, and I accordingly reject the first ground of appeal."

The District Judge having decided the other points raised in favour of the respondents, dismissed the appeal.

Against that decree Abdul Hossein, one of the decree-holders, now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

The present respondent, Mussamut Fazilun, was the widow of Shaikh Nooruddin, one of the persons originally joined as representatives of Cherag Ali.

Baboo Mohini Mohan Roy contended that the application of the 7th March 1887 was a step in aid of execution, and cited and relied on Nukkanna v. Ramasami (2), Ghansham v. Mukha (3), Sitla Din v. Sheo Prasad (7), Jamnadas v. Lalitaram (1), and Umiashankar Lakhmiram v. Ohhotalal Vajeram (8).

Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee, for the respondent, pointed out that Nukkanna v. Ramasami (2) was a decision on the wording of the Limitation Act of 1871, which materially differs from that of the Act of 1887, and cited Mainath Kuari v. Debi Baksh Rai (5), Rajah Muhesh Narain Sing v. Kishanund Misr (9), and Dharanamma v. Subba (10).

The judgment of the High Court (MACPHERSON and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

The only question in this appeal is whether the appellant's application of the 7th March 1887 had the effect of keeping the decree alive. Both Courts have held that it had not, and, we think, rightly. The application in question was put in on the day on which some of the properties were to be sold under the proclamation issued. By it the appellant asked the Subordinate Judge to remove the attachment from a portion of the property which was to be sold, to continue the attachment on the remaining portion, and to strike the case off the file. We cannot regard this as an application to take a step in aid of the execution of the decree. [260] It was rather an application which had the effect temporarily at all events of retarding the execution. Without going so far as to say that no case could occur in which an application which had that effect might not still be in furtherance of execution at some future period, we may say that this was not the case here. There is nothing in the nature of the application to show that it would have that effect, or that it was in any way either immediately or in the future in aid of the execution of the decree. No decision of this Court which has any bearing on the present case has been cited to us. The case of Nukanna v. Ramasami (1) at first sight seemed to be applicable. There an application to stay the sale and continue the attachment was held to be a step which would keep the decree in force. That decision was, however, under the old Limitation Act, the language of which is different from that of the present Act. Some cases have also been cited from the Allahabad series, but they do not appear to us to affect the present question. The mere continuance of the attachment in the present case, even supposing that to be a substantive application apart from the other prayers contained in it, had merely the effect of leaving things precisely as they were, and not advancing the execution in any respect whatsoever.

There is a further question whether the execution of the decree is not also barred by a compromise between the parties. In the view which we take on the question of limitation it is unnecessary to consider this. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

KRISHNA ROY (Plaintiff) v. JAWAHIR SINGH AND OTHERS
(Defendants).^{*} [24th August, 1892.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244—Question in execution of decree—Parties to suit—Alteration of decree by Court executing decree.

The plaintiff purchased a one-gunda share in estate No. 831 and obtained a decree for possession against the defendants. While the plaintiff's [261] suit was pending, and before he took out execution under the said decree, partition proceedings took place. By the partition proceedings the defendants' interest in the estate No. 831 was converted into a smaller estate, No. 2218, in lieu of their share of the whole estate. The plaintiff then brought a separate suit to have it declared that the defendants' interest in estate No. 831 had passed to estate No. 2218. Held, that the suit was not barred by s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. The required transformation of the defendants' interest could not be effected without altering the decree which was given in the former suit. The question that arose in the suit, although it was one between the same parties as those in the former suit, could not be regarded as a question relating to the execution of the decree in the former suit, and therefore the Court in execution proceedings had no authority to make the necessary alteration in the decree.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

On the 25th September 1872 one Rangit Sing sold a two-gunda as share of an estate to the plaintiff and to the father of the defendants, each of them acquiring a one-gunda share. The vendor not having given possession, the purchasers sued to recover possession and obtained a decree on the 20th November 1872.

Subsequently the plaintiff was kept out of possession of his one-gunda share by the defendants, and sued to recover possession of his one-gunda share of taluka Khun Karampore. He got a decree on the 30th November 1885, and that decree was confirmed on the 11th January 1887. The plaintiff then applied for the execution of his decree and thereon for the possession of the one-gunda share of 17 mouzas which fell into the defendants' pati. In the meantime partition proceedings had been started and completed before the plaintiff's application for execution could be heard. The partition proceedings resulted in the formation of a separate pati for the defendants' share, including within it the share purchased from Rangit. The former suit brought by the plaintiff, as already stated, was for a one-gunda share in the 17 mouzas of taluka Khun Karampore which was after the partition proceedings not in the defendants' possession. The application for execution having failed, the plaintiff brought this suit to have it declared that the share sued for in the first suit had by the partition proceedings been included in the defendants' pati. The Munsif held that it came within the defendants' pati. The Subordinate Judge held that the [262] plaintiff was precluded from bringing such a suit by the terms of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, as amended by Act VII of 1888, on the ground that the point in question was a "question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to the execution thereof." He was of opinion that it should have been decided finally in the execution of the decree already obtained by the plaintiff; and that if the lower Court decided against the plaintiff decree-holder, he had a right of appeal which he was bound to exercise without resorting to a separate suit. He therefore decreed the appeal without costs and dismissed the suit.

From this decree the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Atool Krishna Ghose, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (MACPHERSON and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows:—

20 C. 260.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff-appellant to recover possession of a one-gunda share out of a nine-and-half-gundas share which has been formed into estate No. 2218 of the Collector's towzi, on the allegation that the plaintiff had obtained a decree for a one-gunda share out of the share possessed by the defendants in the estate out of which the said estate No. 2218 has been formed and which was No. 831 in the Collector's towzi; that before the decree obtained by the plaintiff could be executed, the parent estate No. 831 had been partitioned by the Collector and the defendants' share in the same had been formed into a separate estate, No. 2218; and that the plaintiff's prayer for execution of the decree obtained by him was opposed by the defendants, on the ground that he could not obtain the relief that he asked for in execution of his decree.

The defendants raised various objections in the defence, but they were disallowed by the first Court, and the plaintiff's claim was decreed by that Court.

On appeal by the defendants, the lower appellate Court, without going into the merits of the case, has thrown out the suit [263] on the ground that it is barred by s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the proper course for the plaintiff was to have sought for the relief he now asks for, in execution of the decree obtained by him in the former suit.

In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that this judgment is wrong, and that the Court executing the former decree could not give the plaintiff the relief he now seeks to obtain by reason of the altered state of things that had resulted from the partition by the Collector.

We think that this contention is valid. The decree in the former suit gave the plaintiff a one-gunda share of mehal No. 831, which consisted of 17 mouzahs, in every one of which the defendants had a share before the partition, and out of that share the plaintiff's one-gunda share was to come. The result of the partition has been to give the defendants the entire 16 annas of a certain number out of those 17 mouzahs, and in the remaining mouzahs the defendants have no longer any right. The undivided one-gunda share in the parent estate, which represented the plaintiff's share before the partition, according to the decree obtained by him, must now find its equivalent out of the estate No. 2218, that is, the particular mouzahs or parts of mouzahs to which the right of the defendants has now been limited; and though this mode of reduction has not involved any change in the value of the plaintiff's interest, it certainly does involve a change in the subject-matter of that interest; for whereas under the decree obtained by the plaintiff in the former suit he was entitled to a one-gunda or a 1-320th part of estate No. 831, which comprised a large tract of land, the result of the partition has been to transform that share into a larger share, i.e., according to the plaintiff to a 2-19ths share of a smaller tract of land within defined boundaries and forming the present estate No. 2218. This transformation could not be effected without altering the decree that was given in the former suit. The question therefore that arises in the present suit, though it is a question between the same parties as those in the former suit, cannot be regarded as a question relating to the execution of the decree in the former suit. If anything, it is a question relating to the alteration of the decree in the former suit now rendered necessary by the altered state of things brought [264] about by the Collector's partition; and no Court of execution has any authority so to alter the decree that is sought to be executed in the execution proceedings. The decision of the lower appellate Court is, therefore, in our

of the 5 annas share of the estate which the Court of Wards then represented. The notice of this certificate was served on the 10th September 1885. Ram Narain objected to this certificate on the ground that the rent being payable jointly to Girja Nath, Satendra Nath and Manmotha Nath, the Court of Wards could not legally demand payment of it separately on behalf of the two shares only without joining Manmotha Nath, the joint-owner of the 3 annas share of the estate. The Deputy Collector decided adversely to Ram Narain on the 15th February 1886 and his decision was upheld by the Collector on appeal on 26th July 1887. The ganti was therefore sold by auction on the 13th October 1887, and was purchased by the defendants Girja Nath and Satendra Nath for Rs. 300. The suit was instituted on the 9th May 1888.

The only material defence was that the suit was barred by limitation, as it had not been brought during one year from the date of the service of notice.

The Subordinate Judge found that the certificate was illegal and the sale void.

[266] On appeal the District Judge came to the same conclusion, and on the question of limitation observed as follows:—

“The provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1880, are of a very stringent and summary character, and hence it seems only just that parties imagining themselves aggrieved by acts of the Revenue authorities, purporting to be done in compliance with that law, should be allowed full opportunity of having the legality of such proceedings tested by a suit in the Civil Courts, if they are willing to incur the risk and expense of ultimately resorting there. The remarks of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhavani Ojha (1) afford authority for saying that s. 14 of the Limitation Act is applicable even to proceedings arising out of orders made under Bengal Act VII of 1880. This view also seems to be supported by the ruling of Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (2); although it is true that the special period of limitation referred to in that case was the period under the Registration Act and not the Public Demands Recovery Act, still the principle is the same. The decision in Sadhusaran Singh v. Panchdeo Lal (3), relied on by the appellant, is far from being fatal to the plaintiff's case.”

Mr. Pugh and Baboo Surendronath Motilal, for the appellants.

Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit to set aside a sale purporting to have been made under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The lower Courts have both decided in favour of the plaintiff, and this is an appeal against that decision.

Two points are enough in this case for us to deal with. The first is the question of limitation; and secondly, a question which does not seem to have been discussed before the District Judge, viz., the validity of the certificate. We should gather that the question of the validity of the certificate was not debated before the District Judge, inasmuch as he does not consider that question in his judgment at all, but simply deals with the question as to whether the suit was barred by limitation. It will be convenient, therefore, to deal with the question of limitation after dealing with the question of the certificate.

(1) 14 C. 9.

(2) 10 C. 265.

(3) 14 C. 1.

[267] The certificate was granted in respect of arrears of rent said to have been due by a plaintiff, Ram Narain (leaving aside the names of persons erroneously entered as parties), in respect of the ganti, a share in which he is the owner of. The defendants 1 and 2 had been [together with Manmotha Nath, not a party to this suit] under the Court of Wards; and it has been found that before Manmotha Nath was released from the guardianship of the Court of Wards, rent was payable jointly to defendants 1 and 2, and to him in respect of their zamindari share in the ganti rent. Manmotha Nath was released from the wardship, and a certificate or what purported to be a certificate was issued by the Collector in which there was a demand for the proportionate share of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the ganti rent payable by the holders of it to the superior tenure. After Manmotha Nath was released it does not appear that any rent was collected from Ram Narain on behalf of defendants 1 and 2 in respect of the ganti. Now assuming as we do from the finding of the lower Court that there was a legal right to claim rent payable to defendants 1 and 2, and to Manmotha Nath together, there is nothing in the case to show that separate rent was legally claimable in respect of a share of the total rent appropriate to the interests of defendants 1 and 2. An express agreement to pay these shares of rents or payments of those shares of rents from which an agreement may be inferred might constitute a claim for demand of separate payment in proportion to the rent. But there is nothing of that sort in this case. We have been referred to certain evidence, which we must take it is the only evidence in the case which could be used, in support of the conclusion that separate rent was claimable legally in respect of the shares of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. That evidence consists merely in the assertion by one witness that after Manmotha Nath was released from the guardianship of the Collector he received rent appropriate to his individual share in this mehal. It is not stated from what tenants the rent was received; it is not said what amounts were received, nor is Ram Narain named as one of those who paid him his separate share. In fact that evidence is nothing to the purpose. We have it then that at the date of the issue of the certificate and prior to the date of the notice, which must have [268] been given in form 3 of the schedule to the Act, there was no right at law to claim from Ram Narain separate payment of the share of rent appropriate to the interest of defendants 1 and 2. A suit brought in their names for that amount alone must have been dismissed. There was, therefore, no sum due in respect of arrears of rent from Ram Narain to those two persons, by which of course is meant to those two persons separately. Strictly speaking, no sum was legally due to them from him at all. There was a liability to pay the total rent, or such portions of it, as had been made separately payable by an agreement express or implied: but only that. As to them, there was no such agreement, and therefore there was no amount claimable separately by them at law.

It is argued that the Collector's certificate, which must be founded upon the manager's verified notice (verified as a plaint) is a sufficient answer to the observation that no arrears of rent were due by this defendant to these two particular persons separately. We think there is no foundation for such a proposition. The law does not allow the Collector to make by his certificate a sum legally claimable and recoverable which was not claimable and recoverable legally before he issued it. This Act was passed to devise a speedy and convenient remedy for the recovery of money due, but it does not in any way empower a Collector first to make a sum due and then to levy it under a certificate. A certificate for money in respect of a claim which has no foundation whatever at law ought not to issue. Section 8 provides "that no certificate duly made under the provisions of this Act shall be cancelled by a Civil Court otherwise than on one or more of the grounds" set out in that section. One of these, the 3rd, is that the amount stated in the certificate was not due by the judgment-debtor under the certificate. Here the amount was, as we have said, not due; and on this ground the certificate must be cancelled and the sale set aside.

Then as to limitation, the question is whether s. 14 of the Limitation Act applies. We think it does. The sections giving a party the right of appeal to the Collector and the Commissioner do not appear to give these officers the faculty of enquiring into a question such as has arisen here. The question was [269] raised by Ram Narain in his fifth point before the Collector, who declined to entertain it. Probably he was right and could not adjudicate upon it. The question which he had to determine was whether, assuming the claim to be legally founded, the liability under it existed. That being so, the period during which plaintiff was bona fide seeking to have redress in Courts which had no jurisdiction to deal with the question now before us must be struck out, and if that period is struck out, the suit is not barred by any period of limitation.

For these reasons we hold that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 132, 135, 147—Limitation Act (IX of 1871), art. 132—Suit on a mortgage bond—Conditional sale—Foreclosure—Bengal Regulation, XVII of 1806, ss. 7, 8—Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882), s. 67, cl. (a).

In a suit for possession of land on the allegation that it was mortgaged by the defendant's father in July 1849 to the plaintiffs' predecessors, by way of conditional sale, by a deed which fixed no time for payment, and made no provision as to the mortgagee taking possession; that the mortgagor made various payments down to 1875, and that subsequently foreclosure proceedings were instituted under Reg. XVII of 1806, and the mortgage foreclosed in 1877, the lower appellate Court found that the deed was duly executed, but that the foreclosure proceedings were irregular and invalid. Held, that inasmuch as the deed fixed no time of payment, and the suit was brought more than twelve years after the date of the mortgage-deed, and also more than twelve years after the date of the alleged last payment to the mortgagee, which was in 1875, the suit was barred by art. 132, sch. II of the Limitation Act. Having regard to the provisions of s. 67, cl. (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgage [270] being by conditional sale, the mortgagee was not entitled to the remedy by sale, and therefore art. 147 did not apply to the case.

Girwar Singh v. Thakur Nirain Singh (1) referred to.

Held also, that inasmuch as the mortgagee did not become entitled to possession after foreclosure proceedings under Reg. XVII of 1806, the proceedings having been found to have been invalid, and as the mortgage-deed did not contain any provision as to the mortgagee taking possession, art. 135 was not applicable.

THE plaintiffs in this case sued, on the 15th May 1888, to obtain possession of certain plots of land, on the allegation that their ancestor Gouri Kishore Pramanick, on the 20th Assar 1256, corresponding with the 2nd July 1849, lent and advanced the sum of Rs. 100 to one Tara Nath Bose, the father of the defendant; that Tara Nath Bose executed a deed of conditional sale in the nature of an out-and-out sale in respect of the land in question; that subsequently Tara Nath Bose made various payments, amounting to the sum of Rs. 33 annas 8, on account of interest down to the year 1282, corresponding with 1875; that on the death of Gouri Kishore Pramanick, his sons, the plaintiff No. 1, and Kuli Churn Pramanick, father of the plaintiff No. 2, on the 3rd of Joist 1283, corresponding with the 15th May 1876, instituted foreclosure proceedings under Reg. XVII of 1806 against Tara Nath Bose; that the mortgage was foreclosed on the 3rd Joist 1284, corresponding with the 13th May 1877; and that the mortgage debt still remained due. The mortgage-deed did not fix any time of payment, nor did it contain any provision as to the mortgagee taking possession of the land in question.

The defendant alleged that his father Tara Nath Bose never mortgaged or sold the land in question to the plaintiffs' predecessor; that there was no due service of notice of the foreclosure proceedings; and that the suit was barred by the law of limitation.

The Munsif found that the document relied on by the plaintiffs was executed by Tara Nath Bose; that the plaintiffs had satisfactorily proved that the transaction was intended to operate as a mortgage, and that the service of notice of the foreclosure proceedings was duly made in May 1876. He accordingly made a [271] decree for possession of the land in question, in default of the defendant to pay off the principal and interest at 12 per cent. per annum within six months from the date of the decree.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the deed in question was intended to operate as a mortgage, but on the question of the service of notice of the foreclosure proceedings upon Tara Nath Bose, he held that the service was not properly made as provided by Reg. XVII of 1806. The appeal was therefore allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Lal Mohan Das appeared for the appellants.

Baboo Tara Kishore Chowdhury appeared for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows:—

This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs for possession of some land on the allegation that the same was mortgaged by the defendant's father on the 20th Assar 1256 (corresponding with some time in July 1849) to the predecessor of the plaintiffs by way of conditional sale by a deed which was drawn up as a deed of out-and-out sale, that the mortgagor made payments on various dates down to 1282 or 1875, that foreclosure proceedings were thereafter instituted and the mortgage foreclosed in Joist 1284 or May 1877, and that the plaintiffs were consequently entitled to possession. The defendant pleaded limitation, denied the mortgage, and the regularity of the foreclosure proceedings, and raised other objections not necessary to be considered now.

The first Court found for the plaintiffs and gave them a decree for possession in default of the defendant to pay off the mortgage debt with interest within six months from the date of the decree.

On appeal by the defendant the lower appellate Court has reversed that decree and dismissed the suit on the ground that the foreclosure proceedings under Reg. XVII of 1806 were irregular and invalid.

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiffs that the lower appellate Court was wrong in dismissing the suit altogether, and that if the foreclosure proceedings under Reg. XVII [272] of 1806 were bad, the plaintiffs were still entitled to a decree for foreclosure under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.

It is unnecessary to consider that question, as the objection urged on behalf of the respondent, that the suit is barred by limitation, seems to be a fatal one.

It has been held by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Girwar Singh v. Thakur Narain Singh (1), that art. 147 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies only to those cases in which the mortgagee is entitled to the alternative remedies of foreclosure and sale. Now the mortgage in this case being by conditional sale, the mortgagee is not entitled to the remedy by sale [see Transfer of Property Act, s. 67, cl. (a)]. That being so, art. 147 of the Limitation Act does not apply to this case. The only other provisions of the Limitation Act that can possibly be referred to as applying to a case like this are arts. 132 and 135. Now art. 135 cannot apply to this case, as the mortgagee did not become entitled to possession after foreclosure proceedings under Reg. XVII of 1806, it being found by the lower appellate Court that the proceedings did not properly take place, and as the mortgage deed contains no provisions as to the mortgagee taking possession, the only provision applicable to this case is, we think, art. 132. A comparison of the language of art. 132 of the present Act, which speaks of suits to enforce payment of money, &c., with that of the corresponding article of the Limitation Act of 1871, and the fact that the first decree in a foreclosure suit under the Transfer of Property Act is one that in the first place directs the mortgagor to pay off the mortgage money, go to support this view, and if art. 132 applies, the suit is clearly barred, as the deed fixes no time of payment and the suit was brought more than twelve years after the date of the mortgage deed, and also more than twelve years after the date of the alleged last payment to the mortgagee which was in 1874.

We must therefore hold that the suit has been rightly dismissed, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

GOLAK NATH ROY CHOWDHRY (Plaintiff) v. MATHURA NATH ROY CHOWDHRY, ON HIS DEATH HIS SON AND HEIR RADHA CHURN ROY CHOWDHRY, WHO APPEARED, AND OTHERS WHO DID NOT APPEAR IN THIS APPEAL (Defendants).* [1st September, 1891.]

Lease—Osathowla—Re-entry—Forfeiture—Sale in execution—Saleable interest—Alienation by operation of law—Conditions restraining alienation—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 266.

A sued to recover possession of certain land which was leased in osathowla by his father to B. The lease expressly prohibited the lessee and his heir from making any assignment of the property either by sale or gift, but it did not contain any provision for forfeiture or for re-entry by reason of an assignment in violation of its terms, nor was there any provision restricting a sale in execution of a decree. The osathowla passed to B's executor and was sold in execution of a decree against B. Held, that the sale passed a good title. It is clear law in India, as in England, that a general restriction on assignment does not apply to an assignment by operation of law taking effect in invitum, as a sale under an execution.

Vyankatraya v. Shivrambhat (1), Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (2) and Tamaya v. Timaya Ganpaya (3), referred to.

Held also, that even if there had been a provision in the lease for forfeiture or for re-entry by reason of an assignment in violation of its provisions, it would not have the effect of invalidating the sale in execution, which has always been held not to be of itself a breach of a covenant not to assign.

B, and also his executor at the time of the sale, had an interest in the lease which was "saleable" within the meaning of s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code. Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (2) distinguished.

THIS was a suit to recover possession of a certain bari, which was let to one Boikant Nath Saha Roy by the plaintiff's father, Srinath Roy Chowdhry, by a registered lease in the following terms:—

You are to enjoy and hold the aforesaid house, together with the tank as per boundaries stated, and the entire jama jami by holding possession of it, by excavating it, raising embankment on it, by erecting ghors, and planting gardens hereditarily in good felicity, the property descending from son to grandson, and so forth. It is further stated that neither you nor your heirs nor your representatives shall be competent to transfer this osathowla right either by sale or gift, or by any other manner of alienation, or grant a murasi patta of the property to anybody. Should you or your heirs do make any such transfer or grant, such transfer or grant should not be accepted by the Court. On these conditions, receiving a kabuliyat, I execute this osathowladari patta, the 29th Assur 1272 B.S."

It appeared that one Manicka Mala Chowdhurani had obtained a decree against Boikant Nath, and on the death of the latter she took out execution against the defendant No. 3, Kisto Bundhu Roy, the executor of the estate of Boikant Nath. In execution of this decree the defendant No. 1, Mothura Nath Roy, purchased the bari in the benami name of the defendant No. 2, Kunju Behary Sen. The auction-purchaser took possession through the Court, ousted the heirs of Boikant Nath, and eventually made considerable improvements upon the property by enlarging a tank and building masonry landing-stages and walls.

The plaintiff contended that by virtue of the provisions in the lease nothing passed to the purchaser under the sale, nor was there any saleable interest within the meaning of the provisions of s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code, in Boikant [275] Nath or his executor, inasmuch as Boikant Nath was expressly prohibited from alienating the property by sale or gift or in any manner. The plaintiff did not ask for any relief against the executor.

The material defence was that the suit was not maintainable, inasmuch as there was no right of re-entry reserved in the lease; that there was no forfeiture clause; that the terms restraining alienation were not enforceable, and that the lease did not prevent a sale in execution.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, the material portion of whose judgment was as follows:—

"It is admitted that there was no express condition of forfeiture or re-entry in the lease. The clause 'if you do alienate.....it will be liable to be set aside by the Civil Court' does not necessarily imply that the lease would terminate in the event of a voluntary transfer by the lessee. The transfer would be invalid, and the position of the lessee would remain as before. The contingency of an involuntary transfer was not contemplated, and no provision was made for it, or for the case of the transferee obtaining possession. A number of rulings were relied upon by the defendant here, as in the lower Court, as supporting the contention, that without an express stipulation of forfeiture or re-entry, the defendant could not be ousted and the title of an auction-purchaser would not be affected by a clause against alienation. On the first point the rulings cited were the cases of Gooropersaud Sircar v. Phillipe (1), Gordon Stuart & Co. v. Taylor (2), Narayana Sanabhoga v. Narayana Nayak (3), Ram Nursingh Chuckerbutty v. Dwirkanath Gungooly (4). The last case was referred to only with regard to the general principle therein stated, that a forfeiture clause is to be construed strictly, and not to be extended, if possible, beyond the words in which it is expressed. The other rulings deal with cases in which it was sought to terminate leases on a breach of contract by the lessee, but there being no express forfeiture clause, the claim for ejectment was held untenable. With one exception, the persons sued in these cases were the original lessees themselves, and the Subordinate Judge considered that, although an express condition of re-entry might be necessary to enable a landlord to oust the lessee, he should be able to eject third parties without it. It does not seem to me that there is any sound basis for this distinction, or that a condition, ineffectual as against the lessee himself, can have any greater effect against a transferee of the lessee's interest.

[276] None of the above cases, however, deal with circumstances similar to those of the present case, and I pass on to the second point urged, that the position of an auction-purchaser is not affected by a condition against voluntary transfer. On this point the case of Subbaraya Kamti v. Krishna Kamti (1) is strongly in favour of the defendant's contention. There also the person sued was the auction-purchaser of property leased under a stipulation against alienation, and the landlord's case was stronger, inasmuch as there was an express forfeiture clause, and he gave notice at the time of sale of his intention to enforce it. It was held by the Court that an assignment by operation of law was not per se a breach of the covenant against alienation, and the suit for possession was dismissed. The same principle was affirmed in the case of Tamaja v. Timapa Ganpaya (2) which ruled that a clause against voluntary alienation afforded no ground for impeaching the title of an auction-purchaser, to whom the alienation was by act of law and not of the lessee. In this case it was also held that the plaintiff could not recover possession even from a private purchaser in the absence of a clause of forfeiture or re-entry in the lease. In the case of Vyankatraya v. Shivrambhat (3), it was held that a special agreement of the lessee not to allow the land to be sold in satisfaction of judgment-debts was a valid agreement. This was a decision of the same Judges who delivered judgment in the case just before mentioned, and in that judgment they referred to the case, which is in no way inconsistent with the principle there laid down. If these cases are good law, they clearly dispose of the question now in issue, and put the plaintiff out of Court so far as his present claim is concerned. On the other side, however, an argument has been advanced which certainly looks a strong one. It is based on the terms of s. 266, Civil Procedure Code, and on the ruling in Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (4). According to s. 266 the property which is liable to sale in execution of a decree includes "all saleable property..... belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which or the profits of which he has a disposing power, &c." In the case of Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (4) it was held that an usufructuary interest assigned to a Hindu widow for her maintenance with stipulations against alienation was an interest over which she had no power of disposal, and therefore not saleable in execution under s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code.

I think, however, on the authority of the two classes of rulings above referred to, that it must be held that the judgment-debtor's lease was saleable property—firstly, because there was no effectual prohibition in the lease against sale even by the lessee himself, and secondly, because even if the lessee could not sell the property was saleable otherwise, according to the construction of the law by the Bombay and Madras High Courts above referred to."

[277] The appeal was accordingly dismissed. Against that decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Evans and Baboo Grija Sanker Mozumdar, for the appellant.

Mr. Garth and Baboo Chunder Kant Sen, for the respondents.

The nature of the arguments sufficiently appear in the judgment of the High Court (PIGOT and BANERJEE, JJ.) which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit for possession of a piece of land, which was leased in osathowla by plaintiff's father to Boikant Nath Saha Roy, whose executor the 3rd defendant is. The osathowla was sold in execution of a decree against Boikant in January 1887 shortly after Boikant's death, and the plaintiff's case is that thereby by reason of the terms of the lease the auction-purchaser and his principal defendants 2 and 1 got nothing, and this suit is brought to eject them; no relief is expressly asked for against the executor.

The lease, addressed to Boikant in the usual manner, is by Sri Nath Roy, and commences thus:—"I * * * do execute this osathowladari patta without the power of disposing of the property of the patta, either by sale, gift or transfer to the effect following":—

It recites:—"You have applied to me for an osathowladari patta of the said house in order to dwell therein without the power of transferring the said house either by sale or gift." "According to your prayer, I grant you." Then follows the description of the premises. "You are to enjoy and hold the aforesaid" * * * "hereditarily in good felicity the property descending to your son and grandson, and so forth."

"Neither you nor your heirs nor your representatives shall be competent to transfer this osathowla right either by sale or gift or by any other manner of alienation, or grant a mourasi patta of the property to anybody. Should you or your heirs do make any such transfer or grant, such transfer or grant should not be accepted by the Court. On these conditions, receiving a kabuliyat, I execute this osathowladari patta."

[278] We may assume that the lessee was bound as by the kabuliyat in similar terms. But the terms of the letting are only before us in this patta.

It is contended that, by virtue of these provisions, nothing passed under the sale to defendants 1 and 2. Vyankatraya v. Shivrambhat (1), and Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (2) were relied on by the defendants, and the cases Tamaya v. Timapa Ganpaya (3) and Subbaraya Kamti v. Krishna Kamti (4) were cited and distinguished.

We take it to be clear law in India, as in England, that "a general restriction on assignment does not apply to an assignment by operation of law taking effect in invitum, as a sale * * under an execution" (Davidson's Conv., Vol. V, p. 177). The Bombay cases cited are authorities for this proposition as regards India.

In the present case there is no provision in the lease for forfeiture, or for re-entry or forfeiture by reason of an assignment in violation of the provisions of it. Had there been such a provision, it would not have the effect, we think, of invalidating the sale in execution, which has always been held not to be of itself a breach of a covenant not to assign.

The case of Vyankatraya v. Shivrambhat (1) does not affect, in our opinion, the present case. That decision only applied the special rules (perhaps it should be called exception to the general rule) that a clause in a lease is valid which expressly gives a right of re-entry by the landlord in case the term be taken in execution, the clause in the lease in that case on which the question arose "not to let the lands be attached and sold in satisfaction of judgment-debts" being held to have a similar operation, and to render a passive attitude by the lessee in respect of process of execution, to amount to a breach within the operation of the special rule in question.

In the present case there is no provision relating to process in execution, and we think the general rule applies.

It is also contended that as the lessee is expressly prohibited from alienating, there was not any interest in him or in his executor at the time of the sale which was "saleable" within the meaning of s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code, and in [279] support of this contention the case of Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (2) was relied on.

We agree with the District Judge in thinking that the decision in that case turned on the very special nature of the limited usufructuary interest there in question. We do not understand the Court as in any way departing from the general rule recognized or acted upon in the cases of Vyankatraya v. Shivrambhat (1) and Tamaya v. Timapa Ganapaya (3) by the same high authority which decided the case of Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (2). We think, in the present case, the general rule must apply, that the sale passed a good title, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Decree—Construction of decree—Consent decree—Decree in foreclosure suit—Redemption, extension of time for—Appeal, consent decree on—Interest—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 86, 87.

The plaintiffs obtained a decree for foreclosure. On appeal the lower Appellate Court made a decree in terms of s. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act, ordering the defendant to pay the amount due with interest and costs calculated up to the 28th February 1890, or in default to be foreclosed his right to redeem. and in other respects the appeal was dismissed. On the 28th February 1891 the defendant deposited in Court a sum calculated so as to include interest up to that date, but subsequently objected to pay interest after the 28th February 1890.

Held, by PETHERAM, C.J., and BEVERLEY, J. (MACPHERSON, J. dissenting) that the effect of the consent decree was to extend the time for redemption to the 28th February 1891, and that interest should be allowed to that date.

[280] RAFIKUNNESSA BIBI and another obtained a decree against Tarini Churn Sarkar for foreclosure of a mortgage. On appeal the District Judge on the 7th February 1890 made a decree in terms of s. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act, ordering the defendant on or before the 23th February 1890 to pay to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 3,000 with interest at 12 per cent. from the 25th May 1887 to the 28th February 1890, and the costs of the lower Court and interest thereon at 6 per cent. from the date of the lower Court's decree to the 28th February 1890, the costs of the appeal and interest thereon from the 7th February to the 28th February 1890, in all a sum of Rs. 4,642-5, and in default the defendant to be debarred of his right to redeem.

The defendant appealed to the High Court. On the 30th January 1891 a consent decree was made in the following terms:—

"It is ordered and decreed with the consent of the parties that the defendant be allowed one month's time to redeem, and it is further ordered and decreed that in other respects the appeal be and the same is hereby dismissed."

On the 24th April 1891 the decree-holders presented a petition to the Subordinate Judge stating that the judgment-debtor had on the 28th February 1891 deposited the sum of Rs. 5,200 as due under the decree, but that the payment of this sum had been refused by the Court Officer, on the ground that interest should not be allowed upon the principal sum due to the decree-holders from the 28th February 1890 to the 28th February 1891. The Subordinate Judge took this view of the case, observing:—"There is admittedly no order in the High Court's decree for payment of interest on the principal sum. The decree-holders now want interest on the principal up to the date of deposit, but without an express order to that effect from the High Court I cannot allow interest further than what the District Judge has allowed by his decree."

The District Judge upon appeal observed:—"Neither my judgment nor my decree gave the plaintiffs interest on the principal or costs after the 28th February 1890, and I never meant to award further interest. The respondent moved me to extend the time for redemption, but I refused to do so. So far as in me lay [231] I enforced the decision in the appellant's favour. The respondent then appealed to the High Court. The plaintiffs were awarded their costs of the appeal to the High Court with interest, but the High Court gave them no interest on the Rs. 3,000 or the costs of the Subordinate Judge's Court, or my own for the period subsequent to the 28th February 1890." The appeal was accordingly dismissed.

From this decision the plaintiffs, decree-holders, appealed to the High Court.

Upon the hearing of the appeal the Judges of the Division Bench (MACPHERSON and BEVERLEY, JJ.) differing in opinion, the matter was referred for the decision of a third Judge.

Baboo Nilmadhub Bose and Baboo Tara Kishore Chawdhry, appeared for the appellants.

Dr. Troylukho Nath Mitter, appeared for the respondent.

The opinions of the Court were as follows :—

OPINIONS.

MACPHERSON, J.—In this case the appellants obtained a decree for the foreclosure of a mortgage. The respondent appealed, and on the 7th February 1890 the District Judge made a decree in the following terms :—
"That this appeal be dismissed with costs; that the defendant Tarini Churn Sarkar do on or before the 28th February 1890 pay the plaintiffs the Rs. 3,000 expended by them with interest at 12 per cent. from the 25th May 1887 to the 28th February 1890, aggregating Rs. 997, the lower Court's costs Rs. 454-2, and interest thereon at 6 per cent. from the date of the lower Court's decree, viz., the 30th November 1889 to the 28th February 1890, aggregating Rs. 6-12-9, and the costs of this appeal Rs. 183-11, and interest thereon at 6 per cent. from this day to the 28th February 1890, aggregating annas 11-3, in all Rs. 4,642-5, and that in the event of the defendant's default the defendant's interest in the property in suit be extinguished, and the plaintiffs obtain possession thereof."

This decree was in strict conformity with the provisions of s. 87 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The respondent then preferred a second appeal to this Court. This appeal was dismissed on the 30th January 1891, the decree [282] being in these terms :—"It is ordered and decreed with the consent of the parties that the defendant be allowed one month's time from this date to redeem, and it is further ordered and decreed that in other respects this appeal be and the same is hereby dismissed."

The question now raised is whether the appellants are entitled to interest on the principal of the mortgage-money and on the costs incurred in the lower Courts from the 28th February 1890 up to the date within the extended time on which payment was made. The lower Courts have held, and I think rightly, that as the decree of this Court does not direct the payment of any additional sum by way of interest, the appellants can only recover the amounts specified in the decree of the District Judge. Section 87 of the Transfer of Property Act empowers the Court making the decree in a suit for foreclosure, upon good cause shown and upon such terms, if any, as it thinks fit, to postpone the day appointed for the payment. Reading that section and s. 86 together, it seems clear that the amount to be paid to avoid foreclosure is the amount determined under s. 86, plus the costs incurred and allowed subsequent to the decree, and plus also any additional sum which, when an extension is granted, may be made payable.

It is a mistake to suppose that an extension of the time carries with it as of course an extension of the period for which interest is to be paid. If it is intended to impose any additional liability in the way of interest, this must be expressed in terms, otherwise the amount originally fixed is the amount to be paid. Here no terms were imposed, and the effect of the consent order was simply to extend the time for payment.

The consent order is complete in itself and is quite intelligible as it stands. We are asked to so construe it as to impose upon one of the parties a liability which does not necessarily flow from it. This we should not be justified in doing. If the consent order does not express all that it was intended to express, the proper course was to get it put right by the Court which made it. We cannot speculate as to the intention of the parties.

The circumstance that the respondent at first paid in the extra interest cannot, I think, affect our decision.

[283] I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

As Mr. Justice Beverley takes a different view, the case must go before a third Judge. It will be laid before the Chief Justice for orders.

BEVERLEY, J.—In this case the appellants obtained a decree for foreclosure of a mortgage, and on the 7th February 1890 the District Judge made a decree nisi, directing that on or before the 28th of that month the defendant should pay to the plaintiffs the principal sum of Rs. 3,000 with 12 per cent. interest from 25th May 1887, and the costs of his Court and of the Court below with interest thereon at 6 per cent. from the dates of the respective decrees, the interest in both cases to be calculated to the end of the month, and that in default of such payment there should be a decree absolute for foreclosure.

Against this decree the defendant preferred a second appeal, and on the 30th January 1891 a Division Bench of this Court disposed of the appeal in these terms:—"It is ordered and decreed with the consent of the parties that the defendants be allowed one month's time from this date to redeem, and it is further ordered and decreed that in other respects this appeal be and the same is hereby dismissed."

On or before the 28th February 1891 the defendant paid into Court the full amount, calculating the interest as due up to that date, but on the plaintiffs' applying for the money an objection was raised—apparently in the first instance by some person in the office of the Subordinate Judge—that under the terms of this Court's decree the defendant was only bound to pay interest up to the 28th February 1890.

Both the lower Courts have taken this view, holding that inasmuch as the appeal was dismissed by this Court, except that by consent a fresh date was fixed for payment, the amount to be paid must be held to be that named in the decree of the District Judge of the 7th February 1890.

The question before us, then, is whether under the terms of this Court's decree the plaintiffs are entitled to interest from 1st March 1890 to 28th February 1891.

It appears to me that had this Court intended that no interest should be payable after the 28th February 1890, the decree would [284] have stated explicitly that the defendant be allowed one month's time from this day to pay up the amount mentioned in the decree of the lower Court. The words of the decree, however, are "one month's time from this date to redeem," and that must mean to redeem in accordance with the provisions of ss. 86 and 87 of the Transfer of Property Act. Under s. 87 the Court may from time to time postpone the date fixed for payment, but by s. 86 the interest would be calculated up to the substituted date, and similarly in this case I take it that the effect of this Court's decree was merely to substitute the 28th February 1891 for the 28th February 1890, in the decree of the District Judge, and the natural result of that would be that interest would be calculated up to the later date. This view of the case seems to be in accord with that taken by the Madras Court in Manavikraman v. Unniappan (1).

Further, it is to be observed that the decree of this Court was made by consent of parties, and the intention of the parties may be inferred from the fact that the defendant paid into Court interest up to 28th February 1891. It is obvious, moreover, that the plaintiffs who were then entitled to a decree absolute would scarcely have consented to forego that decree and to allow the defendant further time, unless it was understood that they would receive interest for the period in dispute.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the orders of the lower Courts should be set aside, and the interest on the principal sum and on the costs of Court calculated up to the 28th February 1891. And I think that the appellants are entitled to their costs in this matter in all the Courts.

PETHERAM, C.J. — I agree in the view taken by Mr. Justice Beverley in this case. I think the only question is what is the true construction of the agreement come to between the parties as set out in the consent order of this Court. By the consent order of this Court the appeal of the mortgagor was dismissed, and also by consent the time for redemption was extended from the 28th February 1890 to the 28th February 1891. The meaning of that, in my opinion, including the meaning of the word "redemption," is that [285] the mortgagor would be entitled to redeem his property on payment of what is due at the time of redemption. The amount due at the time of redemption would be the amount of principal and interest calculated down to the time of payment, and the time of payment having been extended down to the 28th February 1891, in my opinion under the terms of the agreement the mortgagee would be entitled to calculate his interest down to that time. That was the view of the parties, because the defendant did calculate his interest down to that time and did pay the whole amount, including that interest, into Court to be paid over to the plaintiffs, although he afterwards for some reason or other gave notice to the Court not to pay over the interest for the year, and it is contended before me now that he had a right to do that, because the decree of this Court when it was drawn up did not assess the extra year's interest. If this were a question of execution, there might be ground for contending that before the decree could be executed it must be amended by making a calculation and inserting the figure in the decree, but inasmuch as the defendant himself accepted that, and calculated the amount on that basis and paid it into Court for the plaintiffs, it seems to me there is no necessity now for making any further calculation of interest. The interests of justice in this case will be fully served by directing the Court to pay this amount, which was paid by the defendant for the plaintiffs, to the plaintiffs. The result is that the order will be in accordance with that proposed by Mr. Justice Beverley, and the mortgagee must get the costs.

HRIDOY NATH SHAHA AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. MOHO-BUTNESSA BIBEE AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*}
[17th August, 1892.]

Partition—Private partition—Putni of separate share—Subsequent partition under Bengal Act VIII of 1876, s. 128—Parties—Defendants.

The plaintiffs were co-sharers in a certain estate, T being another co-sharer. In 1818 a private partition took place between the co-sharers in [286] the course of which certain specific lands were allotted to T in severalty, the rest remaining undivided. T granted a patni lease of her share to third parties, who were thenceforth in possession; and subsequently there was a partition of the whole estate by the Collector under Bengal Act VIII of 1876, in the course of which the specific lands allotted to T in the private partition were allotted to the plaintiffs, who brought against the tenants of the land suits for rent to which they made the patnidars defendants. Held that the patnidars were properly made parties to the suits in order to try the question of the right to receive the rent as between the plaintiffs and the patnidars. Kashee Ram Dass v. Sham Mohinee (1), Ahmudeen v. Girish Chunder Shamunt (2), and Madan Mohan Lal v. Holloway (3), referred to.

Held also that, assuming that the patnidars were not parties to the partition proceedings by the Collector, they were entitled to retain possession of the lands allotted to their lessor T in the private partition, by which partition the plaintiffs were bound, notwithstanding the subsequent partition by the Collector. Ahmedoolah v. Ashruff Hossein (4), Obhoy Churn Sircar v. Huri Nath Roy (5), and Juggessur Doyal Singh v. Bissessur Pershad (6), approved. Byjnath Lal v. Ramodeen Chowdhry (7), distinguished.

Section 128 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876 does not apply to a case in which there has been a prior private partition; the estate in such a case not being "held in common tenancy" within the meaning of that section.

[F., 15 C W.N. 426=9 Ind. Cas. 539; Rel., 11 C.L.J. 95=5 Ind. Cas. 307 (309).]

THESE six appeals arose out of six rent-suits brought by the plaintiffs, who were three of the co-sharers of a certain estate, a lady of the name of Tamizunissa Bibee being the fourth co-sharer. The estate in question was partitioned by the Collector, and lot or section No. 1 was assigned to the plaintiffs, who were put into possession of such section in Joisto 1295 B.S. These partition proceedings were commenced prior to Bengal Act VIII of 1876 coming into operation, but were completed after it came into force. In 1818 a private arrangement had been come to amongst the co-sharers, by which certain lands were assigned to the various co-sharers in severalty, other lands remaining ijmali or joint as before. Among the lands assigned to Tamizunissa Bibee as her share were those held by the tenant-defendants, and from that year these tenant-defendants began to pay their entire rent to her. Tamizunissa granted a patni lease of her share of the [287] estate to Ramihon Liha, and although the patni was in respect of an undivided share, it was admitted by the parties that the patnidars, the successors of Ramdhon Laha's interest, had since 1858 been in separate possession of the lands of which their lessor was in separate possession before them, and amongst others of the lands held by the tenant-defendants, who by virtue of the private partition had been in possession of these lands for 70 years. In July 1886 Tamizunissa brought the patni to sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, when it was purchased by the appellants, and they appear to have been in possession since their purchase by receipt of rent from, amongst others, the tenant-defendants. By the Collector's partition proceedings already referred to the lands held by the defendants were allotted to the plaintiffs' share of the estate, and the plaintiffs brought these suits for rent against the tenant-defendants, making the patnidars parties to the suit in order that the question of the tenants' liability might be decided in their presence. It did not appear whether the patnidar-appellants were parties to the partition proceedings before the Collector.

Mr. C. P. Hill, Baboo Sharoda Churn Mitter, and Baboo Mokundo Lall Kundo, for the appellants.

Sir Griffith Evans, Dr. Rishbehary Ghose, and Baboo Jasoda Nandan Pramanicka, for respondents.

Mr. Hill.—The patnidars were improperly joined as parties to these suits. No decree ought to have been made against them. Advantage ought not to be taken to try questions of title by means of suits for rent. Section 128 of the Estates Partition Act has no application to the present case: First, because even assuming that by virtue of s. 3 the provisions of that Act were made applicable to the Collector's proceedings in this case, still those proceedings are only applicable to the procedure, "so far as they relate to the continuation of a partition from the point which it has reached," and not to the results and effects of the partition. Secondly, because s. 128 of that Act was not intended under any circumstances to apply to a case in which there has been a prior private partition. It is clear from the wording of ss. 12, 101 and 106 of that Act, that when in accordance with a private arrangement all or any of the co-sharers are in possession of separate [288] lands held in severalty, the estate is not held in "common tenancy" in the sense in which these words are used in s. 128; therefore that section will not apply. If s. 128 does not apply, there is nothing in the Act which interferes with the claim of the patnidars to be retained in possession. Possession given to the plaintiffs by the Collector under s. 123 was possession as against the other co-sharers only, and not as against the patnidars—Mackenzie v. Shere Bahadoor Sahi (1), Obhoy Churn Sircar v. Huri Nath Roy (2). The question before the Court is determined by Ahmedoollah v. Ashruff Hossein (3), Obhoy Churn Sircar v. Huri Nath Roy (2), and Juggessur Doyal Singh v. Bissessur Pershad (4).

Sir Griffith Evans, for the respondents.—The patnidars were rightly joined as parties to the suit, and the lower Courts were justified in trying the question of right to receive the rent as between the plaintiffs and the patnidars. The trial of that question was necessary in order to ascertain whether the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiffs and the tenant defendants existed or not, Kashee Ram Dass v. Sham Mohinee (5), Ahamudeen v. Grish Chunder Shamunt (6). The wording of s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, also supports this view. As to the other question relied upon by Mr. Hill, the principle upon which the decisions appear to be based has been overruled by the Privy Council, Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdhry (1). A partition effected by revenue authority is binding not only for revenue purposes, but settles all questions of title in respect of the estate. Moreover, some of the cases cited by Mr. Hill are cases of a complete private partition: in such cases it may well be held that the former co-sharers become separate owners of separate lands instead of undivided shares, so that no future or other partition is legally possible. But in this case the arrangement in 1818 is not shown to be in the nature of a partition, nor is it shown that it was intended to be. It was most probably only an arrangement by which for convenience the co-sharers held by consent separate and exclusive possession of certain blocks of the estate, and [289] joint possession of the rest. Such an arrangement does not in law amount to a partition, and does not form any legal bar to a subsequent complete partition, or prevent the estate being held in common tenancy, and coming under s. 128, although in making a subsequent partition, it would be equitably desirable to respect existing possession so far as possible, and to allot the shares so as to disturb the old possession as little as possible. Examples of this are seen every day in the case of family dwelling-houses, in which it is usual for certain rooms to remain for a long time, by consent or arrangement, in the exclusive occupation of certain members of the family. But such exclusive occupation is never considered as a legal bar to a suit for partition. That this was the nature of the arrangement is borne out by the fact that the patni relied on purports to be a patni of an undivided share, not a patni partly of defined lands and partly of a share in undivided lands. It is an error to treat the lands as partitioned in the legal sense of the word. The original patnidars were parties to the partition proceedings, and they are bound by them. At all events, there is evidence that the original patnidars were co-sharers in the estate, and the case ought to be remanded to ascertain if this was so or not.

Mr. Hill in reply :—In the case of Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdhry (1) the co-sharers were all prior to the partition in joint possession of undivided shares. The case was distinguished in Juggessur Doyal Singh v. Bissessur Pershad (2) by the learned Judges who tried the latter case. The real distinction is the fact that in the Privy Council case there had been no private partition among the co-sharers; the mortgagee took an undivided share of property in joint possession of all the co-sharers. If the mortgage had been of lands separately allotted to the mortgagor in the course of a private partition, the co-sharers could not have effected a redistribution of the lands so as to affect the mortgage.

The judgment of the Court (NORRIS and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

These six appeals arise out of six rent-suits that were brought by the plaintiffs under the following circumstances.

[290] The plaintiffs are some of the co-sharers in a certain estate, another co-sharer being a lady of the name of Tamizunissa. It is admitted and found as a fact by both the lower Courts that in the year 1818 a private arrangement was come to amongst the co-sharers, by which certain lands were assigned to the various co-sharers in severalty, other lands remaining ijmali or joint as before. Among the lands assigned to Tamizunissa in her share were those held by the tenant-defendants in these six suits, and it is admitted that from that year these tenant-defendants began to pay their entire rents to Tamizunissa. In 1858 Tamizunissa leased out her share in the estate in patni, and although the lease merely purports to demise Tamizunissa's undivided share in the estate, and contains no reference to the private partition or to the lands thereby assigned in severalty to Tamizunissa, it is admitted and found that the patnidars have since 1853 been in separate possession of the lands of which their lessor was in separate possession before, and, amongst others, of the lands held by these tenant-defendants. There has thus been separate possession of these lands by virtue of the private partition for the past 70 years.

(1) 1 I.A. 106.

In 1861 the co-sharers appear to have applied to the Collector to make a butwarra of the estate, and that butwarra was completed in the year 1877. Meanwhile, in July 1886, Tamizunissa brought the patni to sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, when it was purchased by the appellants before us, and they appear to have been in possession since their purchase by receipt of rent from (amongst others), the tenant-defendants.

By the Collector's butwarra, however, the lands held by these defendants have been allotted to the plaintiffs' divided share of the estate, and the plaintiffs accordingly brought these suits for rent against the tenant-defendants, making the patnidars parties to the suit in order that the question of the tenants' liability might be decided in their presence.

The first Court decreed that the plaintiffs' suit, holding that under the provisions of s. 128 of the Estates Partition Act VIII of 1876 of the Bengal Council (under which Act it is admitted that the butwarra was completed), the patni held good as regards the lands allotted in the butwarra to Tamizunissa, and as regards these lands only. And finding that a portion of the rents claimed [291] had been realized by the patnidars, it gave the plaintiffs decrees against them for that portion and against the tenant-defendants for the balance. These decrees have been affirmed by the District Judge.

Mr. Hill, who appears on behalf of the patnidars, who are the appellants before us, has taken several objections to the decrees of the lower Courts. In the first place he has contended that the patnidars were improperly joined as parties to these suits, and that a decree ought not to have been made against them, and he has cited certain authorities to show that advantage ought not to be taken to try questions of title by means of suits for rent. In our opinion, however, this contention fails. We think that the patnidars were properly made defendants in the suits, and that the Courts were justified in trying the question of the right to receive the rent as between the plaintiffs and the patnidars. The trial of that question was in truth necessary, in order to ascertain whether the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiffs and the tenant-defendants existed or not. In this conclusion we are supported by the cases of Kashee Ram Dass v. Sham Mohinee (1), Ahamudeen v. Girish Chunder Shamunt (2), and Madan Mohan Lal v. Holloway (3), and by the wording of s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In the next place Mr. Hill contends that s. 128 of the Estates Partition Act has no application to the present case, and that for two reasons.

First, he says, even assuming that by virtue of s. 3 the provisions of that Act were made applicable to the Collector's proceedings in this case, and that, we may say, is found as a fact by the lower Courts, still those provisions are only applicable to the procedure "so far as they relate to the continuation of a partition from the point which it has reached," and not to the results and effects of the partition. And, secondly, he contends that s. 128 is not intended under any circumstances to apply to a case in which there has been a prior private partition. As regards the first argument, we think it unnecessary to express any opinion, because for the second reason [292] advanced by Mr. Hill, we are of opinion that the section in question will not apply. The section runs as follows:—

"If any proprietor of an estate held in common tenancy and brought under partition in accordance with the provisions of this Act shall have given his share or a portion of it in patni or other tenure or lease, such tenure or lease shall hold good as regards the lands finally allotted to the share of the lessor and only as to such lands."

It seems clear from the wording of other sections of the Act (e.g., ss. 12, 101 and 106) that when in accordance with a private arrangement all or any of the co-sharers are in possession of separate lands held in severalty, the estate is not "held in common tenancy" in the sense in which those words are used in s. 128, and that therefore that section will not apply. In truth that section follows, and was probably based upon, the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Byjnath Lal v. Ramoodeen Chowdhry (1), in which the co-sharers were all prior to the partition in joint possession of undivided shares. We shall have occasion to refer to this decision later on.

If s. 128 be out of the way, it does not seem that there is anything in the Estates Partition Act, that will interfere with the claim of the patnidars to be retained in possession of the separate lands which they have held in severalty for so many years. It is assumed for the present that they were not parties to the butwarra proceedings before the Collector. The fact that the Collector did not allot to Tamizunissa, in accordance with s. 106, the lands of which her patnidars were admittedly in possession in severalty in accordance with the private partition will not affect the patnidars' right to retain possession of those lands. The possession given to the plaintiffs by the Collector under s. 123 was possession as against the other co-sharers only, and not as against the patnidars; Mackenzie v. Shere Bahadoor Sahi (2), Obhoy Churn Sircar v. Huri Nath Roy (3).

But Mr. Hill contends that the question before us is determined by authority, and he relies upon the cases of Ahmedoollah v. [293] Ashruff Hossein (4), Obhoy Churn Sircar v. Huri Nath Roy (3), and Juggessur Doyal Singh v. Bissessur Pershad (5). We think that these cases are all in point.

In the case of Ahmedoollah v. Ashruff Hossein (4), one of the co-sharers had granted a mokurrari of certain land which upon a private partition was included within his separate share. Subsequently there was a regular butwarra under Reg. XIX of 1814, and some of the land comprised within the mokurrari was allotted to the shares of others of the co-sharers. It was held that those co-sharers could not avoid or ignore the mokurrari grant, but on the contrary were bound by it. As Markby, J., said:—
"It is not denied that prior to the partition by the revenue authority there had been a private partition by the sharers of the estate, and I am at a loss to conceive by what possible means a title which is good originally can be got rid of by any act to which the holder of that title is not himself a party."

In Obhoy Churn Sircar v. Huri Nath Roy (1) one of two co-sharers had leased his share in patni, and there had been a private partition of the estate between the patnidars and the other co-sharer. Subsequently upon a batwarra some of the lands held by the patnidar were allotted to the other co-sharer, but it was held that he was bound by the private partition, and could not recover those lands as against the patnidar. In that case Morris, J., said:—"Had the property continued joint—that is to say, had there been no private arrangement between the four annas plaintiff-proprietors and the twelve annas patnidar-defendants—then doubtless on the occasion of a batwarra at the instance of the plaintiffs' and the patnidars' lessor, the patnidars would be bound to follow the share assigned to the latter. But when, admittedly, an independent arrangement was made between the four annas plaintiff-proprietors, and the patnidars of the twelve annas share, by which as between them the whole estate was partitioned, and this arrangement was acted on by possession following according to the partition, then I hold that the plaintiffs cannot set aside this arrangement by simply relying on a batwarra to which the patnidars were not consenting parties."

[294] The case of Juggessur Doyal Singh v. Bissessur Pershad (2) is very similar to that of Ahmedoollah v. Ashruff Hussein (3). A mokurrari grant had been made of certain land, which under a private partition was in the separate possession of one of the co-sharers of the estate. Upon a subsequent partition of the estate by the Collector, some of this land fell within the divided share allotted to one of the other co-sharers, and that co-sharer sued to eject the mokurraridar. It was held that he could not avoid the grant that was made by one of the co-sharers in pursuance of the private partition.

It has been contended by Sir Griffith Evans, who appears for the plaintiffs-respondents in those appeals, that all these cases have been overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Byjnath Lall (4) above referred to, and that a partition effected by the revenue authorities is binding, not merely for revenue purposes, but as settling questions of title in the estate.

We are not prepared to accept this contention. The case of Juggessur Doyal Singh v. Bissessur Pershad (2) was specially distinguished from Byjnath Lall v. Rammoodeen Chowdhry (4) by the learned Judges that tried it. But the main distinction, as we take it, between Byjnath Lall's case and the three cases relied on by Mr. Hill, is the fact that in the former case there had been no private partition among the co-sharers. The mortgagee in that case had taken a mortgage of an undivided share of property in the joint possession of all the co-sharers, and it was held that upon partition his mortgage became a lien upon the separate divided share of his mortgagor. Had there been a private partition prior to the mortgage, and had the mortgage been of lands assigned to the mortgagor in severalty, the case would have been different. The decision of their Lordships is based on the fact that there was no privity of contract between the mortgagee and the co-sharers other than his mortgagor, but had the mortgage been of lands separately assigned to the mortgagor by private partition, the co-sharers could not have effected a redistribution of the lands so as to affect the mortgage. The principle upon which the case of Byjnath Lall was decided is thus stated by their [295] Lordships:—"It is clear that the mortgagor had power to pledge his own undivided share in these villages; but it is also clear that he could not, by so doing, affect the interest of the other sharers in them, and that the persons who took the security took it subject to the right of those sharers to enforce a partition, and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty."

For these reasons we are of opinion that these appeals ought to succeed, and that the plaintiff's suits ought to be dismissed.

We have dealt with the question before us as it was argued, and as indeed it is dealt with in the judgments of the lower Courts, upon the assumption that the patnidars were other than co-sharers in the estate, and not parties to, and therefore not bound by the Collector's batwarra. It was, however, stated in argument before us that the original patnidars were themselves co-sharers in the estate, and joined in the application to the Collector for a partition. If this be so, the case assumes a totally different aspect, for we take it that the appellants before us can have no higher rights than those of the original patnidars whose interest they purchased. In that case the facts would not be very dissimilar from those in Sharat Chunder Burmon v. Hurgobindo Burmon (1), and we think that the decision in that case would be applicable.

The patnidar co-sharers, by assenting to the re-distribution of the lands, must be held to have waived any rights they had under the private partition, and the more so as they omitted to assert any such rights before the Collector, in accordance with the provisions of s. 106 of the Estates Partition Act. We therefore think that these cases ought to go back to the lower appellate Court for a finding of fact, as to whether the original patnidars were also co-sharers in the estate, and whether they applied to the Collector for a partition. If this issue be found in the affirmative, the decrees of the lower appellate Court will stand; if, on the other hand, the issue be found in the negative, the plaintiffs' suits must be dismissed for the reasons stated in this judgment. The costs in these appeals will follow the result.

Appeal allowed and cases remanded.

Estoppel—Estoppel caused by representation on which action has followed—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Title, as between rival purchasers, supported by an estoppel affecting the assignee of the person estopped—Notice.

The law enacted in the Evidence Act, 1872, s. 115, relating to estoppel as a consequence of declaration, act or omission causing another's belief, and action thereon, does not differ from the English law on that subject, of which the general principle is stated in Cairncross v. Lorimer (1). The main question, in determining whether estoppel has been occasioned, is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made to act on the faith of it. The existence of estoppel does not depend on the motive, or on the knowledge of the matter, on the part of the person making the representation. It is not essential that the intention of the person whose declaration, act or omission has induced another to act, or to abstain from acting, should have been fraudulent, or that he should not have been under a mistake, or misapprehension. The word "intentionally" seems to have been used in s. 115 for the purpose of declaring the law as it had been stated to be in judgments in England. On this point, the opinions expressed in the judgments in Ganga Sihal v. Hira Singh (2) and in Vishnu v. Krishnan (3) referred to and disaffirmed.

A widow had held benami, for her husband during his life, property as to which he had executed a hibanamt in her favour. After his death she mortgaged the property, her son representing her in the transaction. After her death, in a suit between rival purchasers of part of the property comprised in the hibanamt, and in the mortgage, the plaintiff derived his title from the son, having purchased his inherited share of the estate, while the defendants relied on a purchase at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by the mortgagee.

Held, that s. 115 of the Evidence Act was applicable. The son had represented that the hiba gave a right to his mother to mortgage, [297] and consequently neither he nor his representative in estate could be allowed to deny the truth of this representation, intentionally made on his part, which also had been acted on by the mortgagee; and it made no difference that the son had not had a fraudulent intention. As a result of the estoppel upon the son, any purchaser of the mortgagee's interest, at a sale regularly carried out, would have acquired a valid title to the property, although such purchaser might have been fully aware of all the circumstances.

APPEAL from a decree (4th September 1883) of the High Court (1), substantially affirming a decree (18th June 1887) of the District Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, which reversed a decree (30th December 1886) of the Munsif of Sealdah. The contest between the parties to this suit was as to their titles as purchasers of the same plot of land, a six annas share in about 1 bigha 16 cottas in Maniktola in the Suburbs of Calcutta. The question raised on this appeal related to the application of the law of estoppel, as declared in s. 115 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872. On the 28th July 1885 the plaintiff, now respondent, sued the defendants, now appellants, for a declaration of his right, and for partition, alleging that he had bought the above property from Ahmed Hossein and his sister Rahimunnissa in July 1875, taking a transfer from them in the name of Janoki Nath Chatterji. The title made by the plaintiff was that these vendors, being the son and daughter of the former owner Umed Ali Sbah Ostagar, deceased in 1879, were sharers, according to the Shera, in his estate. Umed Ali left, besides his son and daughter, a widow Arju Bibi, their mother, and another son Pakjan by another wife, Alifjan, who died before her husband. Arju Bibi died in May 1883. The defendants' title was that they had on the 12th May 1882 purchased the property at a Court-sale, which took place in execution of a decree dated 7th December 1881, obtained by Kalimuddin, a shrof, as mortgagee, the mortgage having been executed by Arju Bibi to him on the 22nd April 1880. They alleged that Arju Bibi was entitled to mortgage the property, as it had been comprised in a hibanama executed in her favour by her husband in his lifetime on the 15th January 1878, and registered on the 15th February following. This hiba was declared in the plaint to have been invalid and of no effect; but [298] the defendants in their answer alleged that the plaintiff's vendors had assented to the making of the mortgage, which Kalimuddin had obtained from Arju Bibi, the advance having been made by him for the protection of the family estate.

All the facts material to this report appear in their Lordships' judgment. Proceedings taken on behalf of Pakjan, the minor son of Umed Ali, are referred to in the judgments below. On the 15th September 1881, before Kalimuddin sued upon the mortgage of 1880, Pakjan by his next friend sued in the High Court for administration of Umed Ali's estate, including the hiba property. The general defence made by the rest of the family, who were parties, specified the hiba properties as belonging to Arju Bibi, and the mortgage was alleged to have been made by her for the necessities of Umed Ali's estate, and for the benefit of the sharers. The final judgment of the High Court, on the 29th February 1884, in that suit was that the hiba, as between the parties to that suit, was inoperative. Pakjan, in the same way, filed objections when Kalimuddin attached part of the hiba property under his decree of the 7th December 1881. These objections were disallowed. The present appellants obtained their certificate of sale on the 6th June 1882.

On issues fixed as to the validity of the hiba in favour of Arju Bibi, and on the question as to the effect of an estoppel in consequence of the acts and representations of the plaintiff's vendors and of those through whom they claimed, the judgment of the first Court was that the hiba was valid and effective to authorize the mortgage by Arju Bibi. The Munsif found that the hibanama was followed by possession by her, and was therefore valid, although the members of the family who survived her were afterwards interested in treating it as ineffective; and that they had done so after her death for that reason. But, on the ground of the estoppel, the suit was dismissed in the first Court. The District Judge, on appeal, reversed this decision and decreed the claim. He held the hiba to have been from the first invalid, Arju Bibi not having obtained possession under it until after her husband's death; while regarded as a hiba-bil-ewaz there was no consideration for it. He inclined to the opinion that the hibanama was a paper transaction, by which [299] Umed Ali's property was held in the name of his wife, in fact, benami for him. On the other question, as to the estoppel, the District Judge was of opinion that the conduct and acts of Ahmed Hossein and of Rahimunnissa were not such as to have estopped either of them from denying the validity of the hiba in this suit. They were, he observed, very young at the time, and might have honestly believed that the hiba operated in favour of their mother. Also, there was nothing to show that Ahmed Hossein had had a fraudulent intention, though, having supported the hiba at one time, he afterwards took the opposite course. The District Judge also determined that with regard to the circumstances of the sale (the fact of Pakjan's litigation among them), the defendants were not bona fide purchasers without notice. He decreed the appeal, the result being that the plaintiff was declared to be the owner of the six annas share, and entitled to partition.

The decision of the District Judge, so far as it rested on the evidence, could not be questioned on a second appeal, with reference to ss. 584, 585 of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendants tried, but failed, on the 26th July 1890, to obtain leave to appeal from the above decree to Her Majesty in Council.

The only ground then of the second appeal, which was filed in the High Court, was (as is stated in the judgment delivered by PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ.) that the plaintiff could not recover, claiming as he did under Ahmed and Rahimunnissa, because they, his assignors, were estopped from disputing the validity of the hiba, and he in this case was likewise so precluded. The High Court's judgment, reported in I. L. R., 16 Cal., at p. 152, was that these assignors were not, by acts of their own or by Umed Ali's acts, estopped from so doing; and the decision of the District Judge was affirmed. The High Court declined to hold that Ahmed Hossein and his sister were estopped from disputing the validity of the hiba.

This decision led to the present appeal preferred by the defendants.

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. H. Cowell, for the appellants, argued that neither of the vendors, Ahmed Hossein and his sister, were in a position to deny the validity of the mortgage of the 22nd [300] April 1880, or to convey their shares to a purchaser, as if no such mortgage had been made. Against Ahmed, however, it was apparent that the case was stronger than it was against Rahimunnissa. He had acted as one of his mother's *mukhtar*s on the occasion of the mortgage, and had executed the deed, not merely attesting it, as mentioned in the judgment below. This was not the only act on his part of a kind to give rise to an estoppel upon him. He received the mortgage money for his mother; and he derived benefit from the advance made by the mortgagee, as also did Rahimunnissa, in regard to the liabilities of Umed Ali's estate. In fact, Ahmed intentionally caused, or permitted, Kalimuddin to believe the hiba to be true, and to act upon that belief; and thus had brought himself within the law of s. 115 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872, which did not differ from the English law on the subject. Should this argument fail as to the daughter's conduct, at all events it held good as to Ahmed. Estoppel did not rest upon fraud in the person estopped which was no essential element; and it was unnecessary, in order to make out a complete case of estoppel against Ahmed, to show that there was fraud in the intention with which he acted. The question only was whether he had intentionally made a representation on which the mortgagee acted. It was contended that he had. Reference was made to Lichmun Chunder Geer Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh (1), Ram Coomar Koondoo v. Macqueen (2); [LORD WATSON referred to Cornish v. Abington (3), LORD MORRIS to Carr. v. London and North-Western Railway Company (4)]. Bhugwan Das v. Upooch Singh (5) was also referred to.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondent Gopal Chunder Laha, was called upon as to the case relating to the estoppel upon Ahmed Hossein only. His argument in support of the judgment of the High Court in its result upon this respondent's purchase from Ahmed Hossein of his share was that Kulimuddin, the mortgagee, had advanced his money without having made the reasonable inquiry required to be made by all who took the security of [301] property in the hands of a widow, as Arju Bibi was at the time of this mortgage. She was a person whose authority the mortgagee knew to be limited. It was incorrect to allege that she had been allowed to appear, in her husband's lifetime, as owner of the property. There had been no entry of her name in the Collectorate books as owner; Bengal Land Revenue Act, 1876, ss. 38 and 44. Ahmed Hossein and his sister were to all intents and purposes in the position of minors at the date of the mortgage, and they could hardly be treated as having been, in fact, capable of binding themselves at that time by an arrangement involving loss to them. Ahmed Hossein, in signing on his mother's behalf the deed of mortgage, acted only as instrumental in the disposal which his mother was herself making of her own interest. He did not purport to convey, or to affect, any rights of his own; and the mortgagee was content to take such a title as Arju Bibi had, without asking further security. It also had to be considered that the appellants had purchased with notice of a dispute of the title of Arju Bibi to mortgage, that being the basis of the decree that resulted in the sale to them; and that they had purchased with notice that, as between Pakjan and the other members of the family of Umed Ali, the hiba to Arju Bibi had been held inoperative in the suit decided in 1884. There was also an entire absence of evidence, showing a fraudulent intention on the part of Ahmed Hossein, or any intention on his part to mislead Kalimuddin. His intention in supporting the hiba, when he did so, might have been the result of mistake, in good faith at the time.

But intention to mislead had been treated as, and was according to decisions upon s. 115, essential to operate an estoppel, as a consequence of declaration, act, or representation. The learned Counsel cited and relied on parts of the judgments in Ganga Sahai v. Hira Singh (6) and in Vishnu v. Krishnan (7). Sections 238 and 331 of the Civil Procedure Code were also referred to.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAND.—This appeal has been brought against a judgment of the High Court at Calcutta. The case originated in the [302] Court of the Munsif of Sealdah, against whose decision an appeal was taken to the District Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs. Accordingly the High Court was precluded by the provisions of ss. 584 and 585 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, from reviewing the judgment of the District Judge on the facts which he held to be established, and under the appeal had a question of law only for determination.

The appellants, being desirous of having the scope of their present appeal enlarged to the effect of allowing them to question the judgment of the District Judge, in so far as it involved matters of fact as well as of law, presented an application to be allowed to appeal generally against that judgment, but their Lordships, on the 26th July 1890, refused this application. The appeal therefore now presents only a question of law for decision, that question being whether, on the facts as determined by the judgment of the District Judge, the respondent Gopal Chunder is estopped from maintaining his present claim.

The case has assumed considerable importance because of the argument which has been maintained as to the principles regulating the law of estoppel, founded, on the authority not only of the judgment of the High Court at Calcutta in this case, but also of other judgments in the High Courts at Madras and Allahabad, to which it will be proper that their Lordships should hereafter specially refer.

The facts which have given rise to the present controversy, as these are to be found in the judgment of the District Judge and the deeds and documents to which he refers, may be shortly stated.

Gopal Chunder having in 1885 purchased from Ahmed Hossein and Rahimunnissa Bibi, a son and daughter respectively of Umed Ali Shah Ostagar, the shares to which they had succeeded on the death of their father of certain heritable property specified in the schedule to the original plaint, obtained a conveyance of these shares in his favour, dated the 28th July 1885. In December following he filed his plaint against the appellants, who had been in possession of the property for about three years, claiming to have a declaratory decree that the sellers to him, Ahmed Hossein and Rahimunnissa Bibi, had held [303] the right to the shares of the property purchased by him, and that he might, as purchaser from them, have a decree of partition of the lands, and be put into possession of their respective shares accordingly. In defence the appellants explained that their predecessors had purchased the property, including the shares of Ahmed Hossein and Rahimunnissa Bibi, with certain other properties, at an auction sale in May 1882, which took place under a decree in a mortgage suit obtained by one Moonshi Kalimuddin against Arju Bibi, the widow of Umed Ali Shah Ostagar, and mother of Ahmed and Rahimunnissa. They alleged, in their written statement, that Arju Bibi was the true owner of the property, having acquired right to it from her husband Umed in 1878; that Arju Bibi after her husband's death, which occurred on the 6th August 1879, on the 22nd April 1880 mortgaged the properties for a sum of Rs. 2,000 borrowed by her from Kalimuddin, who, in consequence of the failure in repayment of the money lent, obtained a decree on the 7th December 1881 declaring a mortgage lien on the property, and that, under the execution decree thereafter obtained, the property was sold, when it was purchased by the appellants' predecessors in title.

According to the appellants' statement, Arju Bibi became the absolute proprietor of the property in question by virtue of a conveyance (hiba-bil-ewaz) bearing to be granted for an onerous consideration, granted in her favour by her husband, dated the 4th January and registered on the 15th February 1878 (about 18 months before he died), and it was in virtue of this title that, about nine months after her husband's death, she granted the mortgage already mentioned in favour of Kalimuddin, on the narrative that she had borrowed Rs. 2,000 from him "to meet my necessity." They alleged that Umed Ali, "in lieu of the money due to his wife Arju Bibi on account of her dower, made a bona fide gift of the disputed properties, and other properties, in favour of Arju Bibi, and put her in possession of the same;" and they further alleged that, even if the hiba by Umed in favour of his wife Arju Bibi was not effectual to defeat the rights of succession of his children, Ahmed and Rahimunnissa, from whom the plaintiff derived his title, yet they were estopped by the actings of their father during his lifetime, and separately by their own actings after his death, [304] from maintaining the invalidity of the hiba, and from either themselves, or through any purchaser from them, challenging the mortgage by Arju Bibi in favour of Kalimuddin, which is the foundation of the appellants' title.

In his plaint the plaintiff alleged that the hiba by Umed in favour of his wife was a fraudulent and collusive deed intended to defeat the rights of his creditors; that there was no such dower due as was stated in the deed, to be the consideration for granting it; that no possession of the properties was ever given to Arju Bibi, but that the transaction was benami merely, and benami without even possession. And besides issues to try the question whether the hiba had been followed by possession and was a valid instrument, a further issue was sent for trial in these terms:—

"Is the plaintiff's claim barred by the rule of estoppel, and was defendant a bona fide purchaser for value?"

The defence founded on the hiba, apart from the question of estoppel, was finally disposed of by the judgment of the District Judge. The Munsif, dealing with the issue on this part of the case and the evidence bearing on it, had come to the conclusion that the hiba was a "valid and binding document," not indeed a deed which could be supported on the ground of valuable consideration, but "a deed of gift, followed by seizin as required by Mahomedan law," and he accordingly dismissed the suit. But the District Judge reversed his judgment, and gave a decree in terms of the plaintiff's claim. In doing so, for reasons fully stated, he concludes his judgment on this part of the case by saying:—"I hold that the deed of January 1878 is invalid. It is invalid as a simple gift, because Arju Bibi did not get possession till after her husband's death; and it is invalid as a deed for consideration, because there was no consideration for it."

It follows that the only question for consideration now is that of estoppel. The plaintiff's predecessors in title, Ahmed Ali and Rahmunnissa Bibi, by virtue of their rights of succession to their father, were entitled to dispose of their respective shares of the property in question unless they were estopped from so doing either by their father's acts or by their own conduct after his death.

The plea of estoppel was held by the judgment of the Munsif to be well founded, mainly, if not entirely, on the ground of the [305] actings of Umed Ali. He held that not only had Umed Ali put his wife into ostensible possession of the property, but that he had proclaimed to all the world that he had made a valid hibz, and that, after granting that deed, in his dealings with the property he was only the agent of his wife, who was the true owner. The District Judge reversed this decision, taking a different view of the facts on which the Munsif's judgment rested, and his decision has been affirmed by the High Court.

In dealing with the question of estoppel now, it is obviously necessary to consider separately the alleged acts of Umed Ali, and the actings of his children, Ahmed and Rahimunnissa, with their respective legal consequences. It was very strongly urged upon their Lordships, chiefly on the authority of the case of Luchmun Chunder Geer Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh (1), 1873, referred to in the judgment of the High Court, that the acts of Umed Ali were sufficient to create an estoppel as against his children in a question with the purchaser from their mother Arju Bibi, the widow and benamidar, as she must be taken to have been after the judgment of the District Judge.

The section (115) of the Indian Evidence Act, I of 1872, which regulates the law on this subject is in these terms :—" When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing."

The mortgage which is the foundation of the appellant's title was not granted by Arju Bibi, the benamidar, during her husband's life and in circumstances showing that he consented to her granting the deed, in which case estoppel might have been successfully pleaded against his heirs in answer to any challenge of the deed by them. It was granted as already stated, after the death of Umed, and consequently after his children Ahmed and Rahimunnissa had become proprietors of certain shares of the property held in title by their mother as benamidar.

In the case of Luchmun Chunder a similar state of facts occurred, for there, as here, the mortgage was granted by the widow after [306] her husband's death. But in that case the husband, Ubotar Singh, had never himself held the title to the property there in question in his own name. The title was derived from a third party and taken directly to his wife, and, according to the narrative of the conveyance, the price was paid from her stridhan fund. He was never in possession of it. His wife took possession and retained it, and, as stated by the High Court in their judgment in the present case, by a long series of public acts and declarations, he did all he could to cause his wife to bear towards the public the character of owner. There were thus continuous declarations, and acts by the husband calculated to cause any person dealing with the widow to believe that she was and had been the proprietor in her own right and in possession of the property purchased.

In the present case the facts are entirely different. The District Judge has held that " in fact, Umed Ali did nothing beyond execute and register the deed of gift." " There is," he observes, " no evidence that he held out Arju Bibi to the world as the owner of the property. He never parted with the possession." There was no mutation of names in the Government registers, and practically nothing different from an ordinary benami arrangement which, as the District Judge observes, is "too common among Mahomedans to deceive anybody." It is clear that in this state of the facts there is no foundation for the plea of estoppel in so far as founded on the actings of Umed. The appellants cannot point to any declaration, act or omission on his part which they can successfully maintain could warrant them in believing, and acting on the belief, that Arju Bibi was the owner of the property which they purchased, and this has been expressly found by the District Judge.

Accordingly there remains only the question whether the plaintiff is estopped from maintaining the invalidity of the hiba in consequence of the declarations or acts of his authors in title, Ahmed and Rahimunnissa, or either of them. The District Judge has held it to be proved that they had both reached majority at the date of the mortgage, at least this is plainly implied in the language he uses. His expression is they "were practically, if not technically, infants," and "presumably under their mother's influence." Accordingly, it must be taken that [307] they were of age to consent to the mortgage being granted, or by their acts or representations to bar themselves from challenging it.

As regards Rahimunnissa, the learned Counsel for the appellant did not profess to be able to refer to any representation or acting on her part which could bar her from challenging the validity of the hiba, or the title of any one taking a conveyance by Arju Bibi, or taking a title by virtue of the mortgage granted by her. There is no case of estoppel presented against her on account of personal representations, acts, or omissions; and so soon therefore as it is settled that her claim, or that of the plaintiff in so far as he derives title from her, is not barred by any representations or acts on the part of her father, it follows that to the extent of her interest the claim of the plaintiff to the possession he demands must be allowed.

But in regard to Ahmed, and the plaintiff's claim as a purchaser from him, a very different state of facts has been proved. The High Court in dealing with this question in their judgment say:—"The circumstance of Ahmed Hossein having attested the deed of mortgage to Kalimuddin, is relied on as estopping him from questioning his mother's power to execute the documents;" adding: "we are unable to hold that the mere witnessing by him of that document, . . . or his assent to the execution of it, can create an estoppel binding on him, unless it were apparent that when he witnessed the deed and assented to it, he did so with knowledge of the invalidity of the hiba to confer upon Arju, and the fact that Arju had no power to create, a good title as against him, of which knowledge on his part there is no proof." The view of the law to be applied in the circumstances as thus stated will be immediately referred to, but their Lordships must, in the first instance, observe that the acting of Ahmed in reference to the granting of the mortgage by his mother went a great deal further than his being merely a witness to the execution of the deed; as to the effect of which, as a circumstance from which his assent to the deed might be inferred (had that been the state of the facts), their Lordships think it unnecessary here to express any opinion.

The facts, however, as appearing on the face of the mortgage itself (which is referred to in the judgment of the District Judge) [308] are not that Ahmed was a witness to the execution of the deed, for the witnesses were other persons, but that he really represented his mother in the whole transaction. He acted with Munshi Golam Hossein as am-mukhtar on her behalf under a power of attorney authorising him to do so; he signed the mortgage on her behalf and in her name; and he and Golam Hossein received the money advanced by Kalimuddin, as appears from the official certificate by the Sub-Registrar endorsed on the deed.

Their Lordships are very clearly of opinion that these actings on the part of Ahmed create an estoppel against him, or any one claiming in his right, from disputing the title of Arju Bibi to grant the mortgage to Kalimuddin. They amounted to a distinct declaration by him to the lender that the hiba in favour of Arju Bibi was a valid deed, or in any view, that if the document was open to legal objections, Ahmed as the person entitled to challenge the deed waived his right to do so, and consented for his interest to represent and to hold the hiba as valid, and consequently as giving a legal right to Arju Bibi as the proprietor to grant the mortgage. There was a distinct representation by Ahmed, professing to act as his mother's attorney that she was owner in possession, having a good title to create a valid mortgage affecting the lands. It is, in their Lordships' opinion, impossible to take any other view of the effect of Ahmed's conduct in the whole transactions, and particularly his signing the mortgage and taking payment of the money; and it is equally clear that the transaction was concluded on the footing of that representation, and that the creditor was thereby induced to lend the money on the security of the mortgage. It has been frequently said, in cases of this class, that the creditor is bound to make inquiry into the validity of such a title as Arju Bibi, the borrower here possessed, and the obligation applies with great force in the case, in which the hiba was granted without consideration, and as the least inquiry would have shown, without any possession having followed on it. But inquiry, or indeed any anxiety as to the title of Arju Bibi to grant the mortgage as proprietor in virtue of the hiba in her favour was made quite unnecessary by the representation and conduct of Ahmed, who was (so far as his share of the property was concerned) the sole person having a title or [309] interest to challenge the validity of the hiba, and to object to the granting of the mortgage which he himself signed and delivered in exchange for the money paid to him.

In this state of the facts, the terms of s. 115 of the Evidence Act directly apply to the case, for Ahmed, having by his acts and the declaration which his acts involved, intentionally caused the lender to believe that Arju Bibi, as proprietor under the hiba, was entitled to grant the mortgage, neither he, nor his representative the plaintiff, can be allowed to deny the truth of what was thereby represented, believed, and acted on.

From the terms of the judgment of the District Judge it rather appears that he might have sustained the plea of estoppel but for certain considerations which are thus stated in different parts of his judgment. He says:—"There is also nothing to show that Ahmed Hossein was not under a bona fide mistake when he supported the hiba. He knew nothing of its execution, and was a minor when his father died. Until disabused by the High Court decision, he may have honestly believed that the hiba was genuine. . . . There is nothing to show that Ahmed Hossein committed any fraud or contemplated committing any."

The District Judge further indicates that even if the plea of estoppel might have been sustained in other circumstances, yet the purchasers would be open to the objection that they cannot avail themselves of the plea as being "bona fide purchasers for value and without notice," because before the purchase was made under the mortgage sale certain judicial proceedings before the High Court (referred to in a passage in the judgment just quoted) had been taken by or on behalf of Pakjan, a minor son of Umed Ali, in which it was determined that the hiba in favour of Arju Bibi was invalid, of which proceedings the purchasers were said to have been cognizant. The High Court in the closing part of the judgment under appeal also say: "Under these circumstances we cannot hold that the Additional District Judge, either in determining as he has done, that no estoppel was created, or in holding as he has done, that the defendants do not occupy the position of bona fide purchasers without notice, was wrong; and this absolves us from considering the further question which we might perhaps have otherwise found it necessary to determine, viz., whether if [310] Ahmed and Rahimunnissa were estopped from disputing the hiba that estoppel would have been binding on the plaintiff, in the absence of proof or knowledge on his part of the circumstances that gave rise to it."

With reference to the views indicated in these passages of the judgments now under review, their Lordships think it right to say that it would make no difference in the effect to be now given to the plea of estoppel against a purchaser under the mortgage sale, though it clearly appeared that Ahmed when he acted as he did in the mortgage transaction was under the belief that the hiba was a valid deed which he could not set aside; nor is it of any moment that he neither contemplated committing any fraud, nor, in fact, committed any fraud by his acts or representations. And their Lordships must further observe that, as the mortgage was effectual as a valid title to Kalimuddin, the lender, under which in default of payment of the money lent he was entitled to sell the property, it follows that any purchaser from him under a sale regularly carried out would acquire a valid title to the property, even though he were fully aware of all the circumstances which had attended the execution of the hiba, and that it had been originally invalid.

In regard to the first of these points, the section of the Evidence Act by which the question must be determined does not make it a condition of estoppel resulting that the person who by his declaration or act has induced the belief on which another has acted was either committing or seeking to commit a fraud, or that he was acting with a full knowledge of the circumstances, and under no mistake or misapprehension. The Court is not warranted or entitled to add any such qualifying conditions to the language of the Act; but even if they had the power of thus virtually interpolating words in the Statute which are not to be found there, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that there is neither principle nor authority for any such legal doctrine as would warrant this. The learned counsel who argued the present case on either side were agreed that the terms of the Indian Evidence Act did not enact as law in India anything different from the law of England on the subject of estoppel, and their Lordships entirely adopt that view. The law of this country gives no countenance to the doctrine that in order to create estoppel the person whose acts or declarations [311] induced another to act in a particular way must have been under no mistake himself, or must have acted with an intention to mislead or deceive. What the law and the Indian Statute mainly regard is the position of the person who was induced to act; and the principle on which the law and the Statute rest is, that it would be most inequitable and unjust to him that if another by a representation made, or by conduct amounting to a representation, has induced him to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement, to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it. If the person who made the statement did so without full knowledge, or under error, sibi imputet. It may in the result be unfortunate for him, but it would be unjust, even though he acted under error, to throw the consequences on the person who believed his statement and acted on it as it was intended he should do. The general principle is thus stated by the Lord Chancellor (Campbell) with the full concurrence of Lord Kingsdown, in the case of Cairncross v. Lorimer (1860), (1):—"The doctrine will apply, which is to be found, I believe, in the laws of all civilized nations, that if a man either by words or by conduct has intimated that he consents to an act which has been done, and that he will offer no opposition to it, although it could not have been lawfully done without his consent, and he thereby induces others to do that from which they otherwise might have abstained, he cannot question the legality of the act he had so sanctioned, to the prejudice of those who have so given faith to his words or to the fair inference to be drawn from his conduct. . . . I am of opinion that, generally speaking, if a party having an interest to prevent an act being done has full notice of its having been done, and acquiesces in it, so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it, and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity, he has no more right to challenge the act to their prejudice than he would have had if it had been done by his previous license." These words were used with reference mainly to acts indicating only subsequent consent to an appointment which had been made, and which might have been objected to when originally made; but they apply [312] a fortiori in a case like the present, where the person estopped was a party to the transaction itself, which he, or others taking title from him, seek to challenge after a considerable interval of time.

There is no ground for the suggestion that the person making the representation which induces another to act must be influenced by a fraudulent intention, to be found either in the case just referred to, or in the leading authorities of Pickard v. Sears (2) Freeman v. Cooke (3) and Cornish v. Abington (4). In the more recent case of Carr v. London and North-Western Railway Company (1875) (5) in the Appellate Court of the Common Pleas, the Master of the Rolls (Lord Esher) pointed out that no doubt in certain cases where estoppel is successfully pleaded against a party seeking to act at variance with his previous conduct or declarations on the faith of which another has acted, the original statement may have been made fraudulently, but, as his Lordship explained, a fraudulent intention is by no means necessary to create an estoppel, and accordingly he mentions other cases or classes of cases in which the determining element is not the motive with which the representation has been made, nor the states of knowledge of the party making it, but the effect of the representation as having caused another to act on the faith of it. This case was approved of in the much later case of Seton Laing & Co. v. Lafone (1887) (6) by a unanimous judgment of Lord Esher and Lord Justices Fry and Lopes. In that case Lord Esher said: "An estoppel does not in itself give a cause of action; it prevents a person from denying a certain state of facts. One ground of estoppel is where a man makes a fraudulent misrepresentation and another man acts upon it to his detriment. Another may be where a man makes a false statement negligently, though without fraud, and another person acts upon it. And there may be circumstances under which, where a misrepresentation is made with fraud and without negligence, there may be an estoppel." To this statement, it appears to their Lordships, it may be added that there may be statements made and which have induced another party to do that [313] from which otherwise he would have abstained, which cannot properly be characterized as "misrepresentations," as, for example, what occurred in the present case, in which the inference to be drawn from the conduct of Ahmed was either that the hiba in favour of Arju Bibi was valid in itself, or at all events that he, as the party having an interest to challenge it, had elected to consent to its being treated as valid.

Reference has already been made to certain Indian cases which were cited and founded on in the course of the argument. These were the cases of Ganga Sahai v. Hira Singh (1880) (1) in the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, and Vishnu v. Krishnan (1883) (2) in the High Court at Madras. In the former of these cases it was laid down by a majority of the Judges that if the element of fraud be wanting there is no estoppel. It was expressly said: "There must be deception, and change of conduct in consequence." The latter case was one in which an adoption having taken place, the alleged adopted son claimed to set aside a deed of gift of certain property by his adoptive father, granted by him late in life in favour of a stranger. The deed was liable to be set aside as ultra vires if the adoption was valid; but it was maintained separately that in any view the defendant was estopped from maintaining the invalidity of the adoption by a series of acts on the part of the adopting father, which had induced the belief on the part of the plaintiff that the adoption was valid, and in consequence of which the adopted son had abstained from claiming a share in the inheritance of his natural family. In the end the adoption, which was that of a sister's son, was held, after a proof of the customary law of Malabar, to have been valid, but before allowing the proof the Court decided that the case of estoppel failed.

It would be most difficult to reconcile this decision with that of the case of Luchmun Chunder Geer Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh (3) already referred to, and the views of this Committee as there expressed; and their Lordships would also have great difficulty in holding, as the High Court did, that a series of acts by which an adoption is professedly made and subsequently recognised, [314] constitute a representation in law only and not of fact. But apart from this, the Court seems to have taken the view that in order to create estoppel, the representations founded on must have been made with an intention to deceive; and an opinion was indicated that the law of estoppel under the Indian Evidence Act in some respects differed from the law of England. It was there said (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 8): "The term 'intentionally' was, no doubt, adopted advisedly. By the substitution of it for the term 'wilfully' in the rule stated in Pickard v. Sears (4) and explained in Freeman v. Oooke (5) and Cornish v. Abington (6) it was possibly the design to exclude cases from the rule in India to which it might be applied under the terms in which it has been stated by the English Courts." Their Lordships are unable to agree in this view. On the contrary, as the rule had been modified in England by there substituting the word "intentionally" in the rule established for the word "wilfully" which had been previously used, it seems to their Lordships that the term "intentionally" was used in the Evidence Act (1872) for the purpose of declaring the law in India to be precisely that of the law of England. Baron Parke, in the case Freeman v. Cooke (1) in effect stated that the term "wilfully" used in the previous case of Pickard was really equivalent to "intentionally," in these words: By the term "wilfully" . . . "we must understand, if not that the party represents that to be true that he knows to be untrue, at least that he means his representation to be acted upon, and that it is acted upon accordingly; and if, whatever a man's real intention may be, he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take the representation to be true, and believe that it was meant that he should act upon it, and did act upon it as true, the party making the representation would be equally precluded from contesting its truth." A person who, by his declaration, act, or omission, had caused another to believe a thing to be true and to act upon that belief, must be held to have done so "intentionally" within the meaning of the statute if a reasonable man would take the representation to be true, and believe it was meant that he [315] should act upon it. And to this view effect was given in the case of Cornish v. Abington and the later cases.

It is unnecessary to quote the passages (pp. 8 and 9 of the report) in the case of Vishnu v. Krishnan, indicating that in the opinion of the High Court, it was necessary to prove an intention to deceive in order to make a case of estoppel. Their Lordships have already said enough to make it clear that they differ from the views to that effect expressed in that case, and in the case of Ganga Sahai v. Hira Singh.

As already stated, the plaintiff further maintained that the appellants could not avail themselves of the plea of estoppel against him because before their predecessors made the purchase under the mortgage sale they were aware that it had been held by the High Court in another suit that the hiba which was the foundation of the title under which they purchased was invalid; but as already explained, their Lordships have no difficulty in repelling this contention. It may be true, and in any case it may be assumed to be true, that the appellants' predecessors in title knew of the decision referred to. But it is equally true that whatever might have been held as to the invalidity of the hiba in a proceeding at the instance of Pak-jan, Ahmed, or any one claiming in his right, was precluded by Ahmed's acts and representations from maintaining the invalidity of the hiba, or the mortgage granted by his mother so far as regards his share of the property. In any question which Ahmed or his representatives, Kalimuddin had obtained a valid mortgage, and as he had himself a valid title so he could give a good title to a purchaser under a mortgage sale, whatever might be the state of knowledge of the person purchasing. Their Lordships therefore are clearly of opinion that the appellants are not precluded from maintaining, as they do successfully, that the plea of estoppel is good against Ahmed, and consequently good against the plaintiff, in so far as regards the share of the property which Ahmed might have claimed as succession.

On the whole case their Lordships, on the grounds thus fully stated, will humbly advise Her Majesty to discharge the decrees of all the Courts below, and make a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rahimunnissa's share only, and that he get possession of that share by distinct partition, with costs in proportion in all Courts. [316] The plaintiff, however,

THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GOPAL SINGH AND OTHERS.*

[24th August, 1892.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 45—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 176 —Omission to give information to Police of offence.

Where one of several persons bound to give information to the police under s. 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code gave such information as to the commission of a murder, in consequence of which a police officer arrived in the village shortly after the occurrence, held, that the fact that other persons who might possibly also be bound to give that information had omitted to do so was no ground for their prosecution and conviction of an offence under s. 176 of the Penal Code.

In the matter of the petition of Shasi Bhusan Chuckrabutty (1) relied on.

[F., Ratanlal's Unrep. Crl. Cases 778 (779) ; R., Ratanlal's Unrep. Crl. Cases 674 ; D., Ratanlal's Unrep. Crl. Cases 784 (785).]

THIS was a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Saran, under the provisions of s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the facts of which were stated in his letter of reference as follows :

"Shortly before dawn on the 8th March last, one Rocha Kuer was murdered in the village of Sarai Bukhsh by her nephew Rit Lal Thakur. Sheo chaukidar of Raipur (a village adjacent to Sharai Bukhsh), in whose jurisdiction the murder was committed, gave information of the murder at the nearest police station Gurkha, at 8 o'clock on the morning of the 8th [317] March, and the head-constable proceeded to the spot at once, arriving about 9. A. M. The Sub-Inspector of police followed him and reached the spot at 7 P. M. on the same date. On the next day, while the Sub-Inspector was investigating the case, Narayan Dut Lal, putwari of some of the proprietors of Sarai Bukhsh, who lived at Sripal Basant, four miles distant from the scene of the murder, appeared before him and submitted a written report of the murder on his employers' behalf. The Sub-Inspector of Police subsequently submitted a report to the District Magistrate, giving the names of 16 persons who he considered were under a legal obligation to give information of the murder, and the Magistrate thereupon ordered those persons to be prosecuted for an offence under s. 176, Penal Code. Of these two are village chaukidars, three are zurpeshgidars, occupiers of the village, eight are proprietors, and three are members of the village panchayet constituted under Bengal Act VI of 1870. On the 12th May 1893, six of these persons were acquitted and ten were convicted and sentenced, seven of them (zurpeshqidars and proprietors) to pay a fine of Rs. 20 each, and the three members of the panchayet to pay a fine of Rs. 10 each, or in default all to undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment."

* Criminal Reference No. 218 of 1892, made by H. W. Gordon, Esq. Sessions Judge of Saran, dated the 30th July, 1892, against the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate of Chapra, dated the 12th May 1892.

(1) 4 C. 628.

Of the persons convicted, four proprietors and two zurpeshqidars, Achyat Singh and Gopal Singh, petitioned the Sessions Judge for revision, and he, being of opinion that the order of the Magistrate was illegal, referred the matter to the High Court with the recommendation that the convictions should be set aside on the following grounds:—

"I consider that the order is wrong in law, and also that under the circumstances of the case it is an improper order.

"The four proprietors, Ram Dat Singh, Sant Bux Singh, Chakraban Singh, and Surja Pershad Singh, live at Sripal Basant, which is four miles from Sarai Buksh, the scene of the murder. There is no evidence on the side of the Crown that these persons were aware on the 8th March that a murder had been committed in Sarai Buksh on that date, and I do not think it can be conclusively presumed that they had obtained information merely because they were present in the village of Basant on the day of the murder, a village too four miles distant. I think it lay on the Crown to show that they had obtained this information, otherwise it cannot be held that they were under a legal obligation to report the murder as required by s. 45, Criminal Procedure Code. Besides, on the side of these four petitioners there is the evidence of two witnesses, Narayan Dat Lal and Ram Khelavee Rai (which the Deputy Magistrate does not say he disbelieves), which proves that they did not obtain information of the murder until the next day, viz., the 9th March, and that Narayan Dat then went to the spot and reported the matter to the Sub-Inspector on their behalf. In these circumstances [318] I think these four accused sufficiently discharged the obligation imposed upon them by s. 45, Criminal Procedure Code, and should therefore on this ground alone have been acquitted. As regards the zurpeshqidars Gopal Singh and Achyat Singh, the case is different. They reside in Sarai Buksh, a short distance from the spot where the murder was committed. The evidence shows that Achyat was in his threshing floor at the time; there is no evidence on the record that Gopal Singh was in the village at all on that particular day, and I think it was for the Crown to prove this, and not for him to prove an alibi. Admitting, however, that he was there and as well as Achyat was aware of the murder, can it be safely said that both he and Achyat intentionally omitted to give information to the police. Presuming they knew of the murder shortly after it was committed, it is only fair to presume that they also knew that the village chaukidars had gone to inform the police, and they must have known this positively when the head-constable arrived in the village at 9 A. M. If this be so, then they may well have thought that it was not necessary for them to give the police information they were already in possession of. Moreover, I would invite the attention of the Honourable Court to the judgment of AINSLIE and BROUGHTON, JJ., in the case of Sashi Bhusan Chuckerbutty (1).

That judgment was given with reference to the provisions of s. 90, Act X of 1872, but the principle laid down is equally applicable to s. 45 of the present Code. The learned Judges held that "when information is conveyed to the nearest Magistrate or police officer by one of the parties bound to give such information, it is not reasonable that every other person who may possibly be bound to give information, should be prosecuted for not having done so." The present case is in many respects similar to the one reported, and therefore, I think, the prosecution was unreasonable and improper, and that the High Court can set aside that proceeding on this ground."

[319] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Hill.

THOMPSON v. THE CALCUTTA TRAMWAY COMPANY, LIMITED.*

[26th January, 1893.]

Practice—Suit in forma pauperis—Continuation in forma pauperis of suit instituted in ordinary form—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 401—415.

A Court has power under Chapter XXVI of the Code of Civil Procedure to allow a suit instituted in the ordinary form to be continued in forma pauperis.

THIS suit was instituted by the plaintiff in the ordinary form to recover damages from the defendant Company. Some time after its institution and before it came to a hearing the plaintiff applied on petition to the Court for liberty to proceed with the suit in forma pauperis. In his petition he stated that he had up to the date of his application paid his attorney the costs incurred by him out of pocket for court-fees and stamps, but that he had not been able to pay any of his attorney's own costs, and had managed with difficulty to get his attorney to carry on the proceedings as far as they had gone, but he stated that he was unable to do so any longer, and did not desire to encroach further on his attorney's good nature, and that he was not possessed of any means whatever, except certain articles specified in the schedule, and valued at Rs. 233-6, which were under pledge to his creditors for the sum of Rs. 500; that he was unable to carry on the suit in the ordinary way, and accordingly prayed that the court-fees might be remitted, and he be at liberty to proceed in forma pauperis. Upon the presentation of this petition a notice was issued to the defendant Company and to the Government Solicitor, fixing this day for investigation the allegations contained in the petition.

The petitioner appeared in person.

The defendant Company was not represented.

* Original Suit No. 517 of 1892.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. A. Phillips) on behalf of the Crown opposed the application.

[320] The Standing Counsel.—The Code of Civil Procedure only contains provision for liberty being given to a plaintiff to institute a suit in forma pauperis, and does not contain any provision empowering a Court to allow a plaintiff who has once instituted his suit in the ordinary way to continue it in forma pauperis. Section 401 provides for a suit being brought by a pauper. Sections 403 to 408 deal with matters connected with the application for leave to sue as a pauper prior to the hearing of such application on notice to the defendant and the Government, and s. 409 deals with the hearing. Then comes s. 410, which provides that the application, if granted, shall be numbered and registered and deemed the plaint in the suit. These sections, therefore, contain no provisions to empower a Court to allow a suit once instituted to be carried on in forma pauperis, and the remaining sections in the chapter do not affect the question. If this application be treated as one under s. 410, it must be treated as the plaint, if granted, but the plaint in this case is already on the file, and the present application discloses no cause of action, as it in no way refers to the subject-matter of the suit. There have been cases where I am informed orders similar to the one now asked for have been made, but I am not aware of the present objection having been taken, and I contend, as a matter of principle, that the Court is not authorized by the Court to grant this application, and that it therefore has no power to make the order asked for. [Hill, J.—I am referred to the case of Revji Patil v. Shakharam (1), which followed a decision of this Court in Nirmul Ohandra Mookerjee v. Doyal Nath Bhattacharjee (2), and in which it was held that it was competent for the Court to make the order now asked for.] This Court will not, I submit, follow the Bombay Court if that Court be wrong. In the Calcutta case Pontifex, J., gives no reason for his decision, and if your Lordship is satisfied that the language of the Code is clear on the point, you are not bound to follow that decision. In Doorga Churn Doss v. Nittokally Dossee (3), Wilson, J., gave leave to a defendant to defend in forma pauperis, although no provision is made in the Code to that effect. I submit, however, that the [321] granting of an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis is not a matter in the discretion of the Court, as the Court is bound to grant it under certain circumstances, and that the power conferred on the Court by Chap. XXVI should not be extended. Moreover, the powers conferred on the Court by that Chapter are limited throughout by express words which show that the only kind of application contemplated by the Legislature is an application to institute a suit, and I submit that this Court has no power to entertain or grant any other application, or one like the present.

The petitioner was not heard.

The judgment of the Court was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

HILL, J.—This application for leave to continue the suit in forma pauperis is opposed by the Standing Counsel on behalf of Government on the ground that the Code gives no power to allow an application for a suit not instituted in forma pauperis to be so continued. But I think I ought to follow the decision in the case of Nirmul Chandra Mookerjee v. Doyal Nath Bhattacharjee (1), where Pontifex, J., in a similar case held that the power, which is undoubtedly in the Court of allowing a suit to be instituted in forma pauperis, includes power to allow a suit not so instituted to be continued in that form. That case has been followed by the Bombay Court in Revji Patil v. Sakharam (2), and in another case, Doorga Churn Doss v. Nittokally Dossee (3), Wilson, J., in relation to an application made by a defendant to be allowed to defend in forma pauperis, after taking time to consider granted the application, having previously expressed the opinion that though there is no provision in the Code, the defendant on showing his poverty might be allowed to defend the suit as a pauper. These are the only reported cases bearing on this question, but I understand that this application is in conformity with what has been understood to be the practice of the Court, and on the whole, I think, it ought to be granted. I therefore make the order asked for.

MAKSUD ALI (Plaintiff) v. NARGIS DYE (Defendant).

Relinquishment of or omission to sue portion of claim — Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 43—Cause of action.

In 1889 the plaintiff sued the defendant for possession of a piece of land which the defendant had included in her homestead by building walls. In that suit the plaintiff alleged that on that land there were two palm-trees which belonged to him, and that the defendant had wrongfully prevented the pasis from going to those trees to tap them, but he asked in his plaint in that suit for no relief in respect of the trees, only stating that he would bring a separate suit for them. The Munsif dismissed that suit on the ground that the land was within the defendant's tenure, and his decision was affirmed on appeal. In a suit brought in 1890 against the same defendant for declaration of title to and possession of the two palm-trees, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from disturbing his possession of them: Held that the claim arose out of the same cause of action as that in the former suit, and that the suit was therefore barred by s. 49 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[Diss., 30 A. 225 = 5 A.L.J. 192 = A.W.N. (1908), 96; R, 34 C. 223 = 5 C.L.J. 192.]

THIS was a suit brought in 1890 for declaration of title to and possession of two palm-trees, on the allegation that the defendant had wrongfully included them within her compound by building walls, and that the pasis always used to go over the land on which the trees stood, for the purpose of tapping them, but the defendant now prevented them from doing so. The plaintiff estimated the damages at Rs. 100.

The plaintiff in 1889 had brought a suit against the same defendant for recovery of possession of the land on which the trees stood, and had stated in the plaint that he would bring a separate suit for the trees of which he was dispossessed. That suit was dismissed by the Munsif, who held that the land in dispute was within the defendant's tenure. The Munsif's decision in that case was affirmed on appeal.

[323] The main defence in the present suit was that the suit was barred by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Munsif found that the plaintiff's dispossession of the two palm-trees had occurred at the time when he instituted his suit in 1889 for the recovery of the land on which the trees stood, and that he should therefore have included his claim for the trees in his claim for the land sued for. He accordingly dismissed the suit as barred by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge affirmed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Umakalli Mookerjee, for the appellant.

Mr. R. E. Twidale and Mr. M. L. Sandal, for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiff is proprietor of mouzah Dariapur in the district of Patna; the defendant is his tenant. In 1889 plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant, the effect of which upon the relief claimed in the present suit is the subject-matter of this appeal. In that suit the plaintiff alleged that in his property there was a long existing lane, which he described, and which he said existed for the use of the public, the pasis, and others, and that in that lane there were four palm-trees which were in his possession. He alleged that the defendant had no right to the land forming this lane; that she had wrongfully included it in her homestead; and that she had no right to the four palm-trees, of which he had all along enjoyed sole or exclusive use and possession. He said the defendant had enclosed the lane by two walls, one to the east with a door in it, and one to the west, and thereby enclosed within her compound two of the juice-producing palm-trees, and thereby caused great inconvenience to the public, the pasis, and others in their coming and going. He said that the defendant's tenant had wrongfully prevented the pasis from going to the palm-trees to tap them; and that for this he would bring a separate suit. The prayer was first for a declaration that the plaintiff was sole proprietor of the land in dispute, and also of the defendant's homestead, and that the defendant had no right to raise the wall and fix [324] the door which had entirely stopped the passage of the pasis and the public. Secondly, for a mandatory injunction for the removal of the walls, and for an award of restoration of possession of the land to the plaintiff.

The Munsif dismissed the suit as to the plaintiff's alleged right to the land in dispute, holding that the land was within the defendant's tenure; and that she had a right, therefore, to build the walls in question. He had not decided whether or not the trees were included in the defendant's tenure, holding that upon that question he was not asked to adjudicate. This decision was affirmed in appeal.

In the present suit the plaintiff again denies the defendant's rights to build the walls. He states that in the previous suit the defendant claimed the trees as belonging to her; that she does not allow the pasis to approach the trees, and asserts that they belong to her, and he brings this suit, laying it at Rs. 100, being the value of the two palm trees at Rs. 50 each.

He asks, first, for a declaration that the palm-trees belong to him; second for possession of them; and third, for an injunction restraining the defendant from disturbing his possession of them.

Both the Courts below have held that the suit is barred by s. 43 of Civil Procedure Code.

We took time to consider whether such a construction could properly be given to the plaintiff's claim in this suit, as to render it possible to hold that it arose out of a cause of action other than that on which the former suit was brought.

We think it must be held that plaintiff's present claim arose, and now arises, out of the same cause of action as that in the former suit. He claims the right in the trees and, by implication at least, a right-of-way to them for the pasis to enable them to draw the juice. We think that his cause of action in respect of this arose out of the matters, the subject of the former suit. As a matter of fact the defendant did then claim the trees, both expressly and also by the building of the wall so as to bar the access to them at her pleasure; the plaintiff applied for that reason to have the right to the trees determined in that suit but this was refused, as he had not asked for relief in respect to them in the suit. It is plain that the matter was then in controversy [325] between the parties, and that the controversy had arisen because the defendant's then assertion of right involved an interference with that which the plaintiff now claims.

In other words, part of the cause of action which he then had was the interference by the defendant both with the plaintiff's possession of the trees and with the access to them.

He did not then include this claim in his suit; he did not obtain the leave of the Court to omit it: and he is therefore barred by s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

RIPOO MURDAN SINGH AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. RAM REKHA LAL AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [26th July, 1892.]

Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), s. 10—Act XI of 1859, ss. 5, 6, 7, 17—Sale, Notification of—Attachment under Certificate Procedure.

Where a notice under s. 10 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 was served, and a certificate issued by the Collector for default of payment of road cess of a revenue-paying estate, and, the Government revenue being in arrears, no notification under s. 5 of Act X of 1859 was issued, and the estate was subsequently sold for arrears of Government revenue, held, that the sale was valid, and ss. 5 and 17 of Act XI of 1859 did not apply, the certificate issued by the Collector being not an attachment as contemplated by s. 5.

Ram Narain Koer v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1) referred to.

THIS suit was brought to set aside a sale of mauza Deokund, held for arrears of Government revenue, at which the mauza was purchased by the defendant No. 1.

^{*} Appeal from Original Decree No. 35 of 1891 against the decree of Moulvi Syed Fakhruddin Hossain, Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated the 22nd of September 1890.

The plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 2 to 14 were the joint owners of mauza Deokund, in respect of a portion of which a notice under s. 10 of the Bengal Act VII of 1880 was served, [326] and a certificate issued by the Collector for arrears of road cess for the month of March 1887. The Government revenue for the instalment of September 1887 being in arrears, the mauza was sold by auction on the 8th January 1888.

The plaintiffs contended that the sale was held in an irregular manner, that notifications under ss. 6 and 7 of Act XI of 1859, were not properly made, and that the mauza sold being at the time of the sale under attachment for arrears of road cess, and such an attachment being in the nature of an attachment of a Civil Court, a notification under s. 5 of Act XI of 1859 was necessary. They also contended that the sale could not be held, having regard to the provisions of s. 17 of Act XI of 1859.

The defendant No. 2 contended that no notifications under Act XI of 1859 were necessary, that the property was not exempt under s. 17 of Act XI of 1859, and that the sale was good in law.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, and on the fourth issue, viz., whether any certificate under Bengal Act VII of 1880 was served on any share of mauza Deokund, and if so, whether it had the effect of an attachment by a "judicial authority" within the meaning of cl. 3 of s. 5 of Act XI of 1859, observed as follows:—

"There is another objection of the plaintiffs that, owing to the arrears of road cess, a portion of the village was attached by the order of the Collector under s. 10 of Act VII of 1880, and a certificate with a notice was issued, and this attachment was made by judicial authority, so the sale of the property in suit was illegal and against the provisions of ss. 5 and 17 of Act XI of 1859. I see there is no evidence at all on the record to show that for the demand of road cess any portion of the village was attached by order of the Collector, neither notice nor certificate of such attachment have been tendered on behalf of the plaintiffs, nor has it been proved even by oral evidence that a share or portion of the mauza was really attached as alleged by the plaintiffs. Supposing there be any attachment under s. 10 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, then the question is whether such an attachment by order of the Collector was by a judicial authority, or was it an executive proceeding. Mr. Grimley's notes show that the certificate and notice under s. 10 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 are not judicial but executive—vide Ram Narain Koer v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1). Under this view of the case I think that the issue of a [327] certificate against the proprietor of an estate cannot exempt the estate from sale, and I decide this issue against the plaintiffs."

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Mohabir Sahai, for the appellants.

Baboo Durga Mohan Das and Moulvi Mahomed Yusuff, for the respondents.

The arguments appear sufficiently in the judgment of the High Court (PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ.), which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

We think the appeal must be dismissed. The only questions raised before us were those arising with respect to the fourth issue. Now, no notification such as is required under s. 5, Act XI of 1859, was issued in this case—at least we understand that that is the allegation upon which the appeal is brought. No notification under that section having been made, the appellant contends that the sale was bad. We agree with the lower Court in thinking that that contention cannot prevail. It is argued that inasmuch as before the date of the sale, a notice under s. 10, Bengal Act VII of 1880, had been served, and a certificate issued by the Collector in pursuance of that section, that amounted to an attachment such as is contemplated by the third heading at the close of s. 5, Act XI of 1859. The ground on which that is contended is that it is enacted by s. 10, Bengal Act VII of 1880, that the service of such notice and certificate shall have the same effect, or, to use the words of the section, "shall bind all immovable property of such judgment-debtor situate within the jurisdiction of such Collector in the same manner and with like effect as if such immovable property had been attached under the provisions of s. 274 of the Code of Civil Procedure." On the face of the words of the section, it is not an attachment, but it has the effect of an attachment, although an attachment had taken place for certain purposes. It has been held with regard to that section in Ram Narain Koer v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1), that a proceeding under s. 10, Bengal Act VII of 1880, is not a judicial attachment, but the 7th heading at the end of s. 7 requires as an element of the description of the property which is intended to be sold without a notification that it should have [328] in the words of the section "under the provisions of any law for the time being in force been taken under the charge of or managed by the Court of Wards or the Revenue authorities." This is not the case here, nor is it contended that the property was managed by the Collector or the Court of Wards. Therefore, s. 5 does not apply. Then, it is contended that under s. 17 the property was exempt from sale completely for the same reason or for a similar reason, that the proceedings under s. 10, Bengal Act VII of 1880, caused the estate to be held under attachment by the Revenue authorities. Now the case of Ram Narain Koer v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1) negatives that view. The Court say :—"It is very clear," speaking of this section, "that what that section points to is not an attachment in the sense in which the term is used in the Code of Civil Procedure, but an attachment as such is provided for in the Criminal Procedure Code—such an attachment as takes the property out of the possession of the ordinary owner, and places it in the possession of the Collector," and such, we think, for instance, as a proceeding under s. 99 of the Road Cess Act, under which the property is taken out of the possession of the owner so far as the perception of rents and profits is concerned, and placed in the hands of the Collector. Neither of these sections applying, the objections to the validity of the sale must fail, and the appeal must be dismissed.

In the case of a Mitakshara family consisting of a father and minor sons, where the father hypothecates ancestral property, there being no [329] proved necessity, but on the other hand no proof of immoral or illegal purpose, and no proof that the lender made any enquiry as to the purpose, the debt itself is an antecedent debt within the rulings of the Privy Council, and the mortgagee is entitled in a suit against father and sons to a decree directing the debt to be raised out of the whole ancestral estate inclusive of the mortgaged property.

Debts incurred in transactions the character of which is no more than imprudent or unconscientiously imprudent or unreasonable, are debts to which a pious duty attaches under the Mitakshara law.

rate and compound interest) with interest thereon and costs, and that the mortgaged properties should be held liable for the same.

[330] At the first trial the plaintiff obtained a decree upon the admissions of Gobind Pershad, who alone appeared. Krishna Nanda Ram then applied for a re-hearing, and a decree was passed in his presence in June 1887. The sons of Gobind Pershad and Sukh Lal then applied for re-hearing, on the ground that they were not properly represented at the trial, and on appeal the High Court remanded the case, with directions that it should be heard de novo in their presence.

Upon the new trial the contest was between the plaintiff and Dwarka Nath, Kedar Nath and Ram Likhani; Kedar Nath, who was still a minor, being represented by his elder brother Dwarka Nath. These defendants denied the acts of Gobind Pershad and Sukh Lal, and the execution of the bonds by them, and alleged that the bonds (if executed by all) were executed for immoral and illegal purposes and not for family necessities, and that Gobind Pershad and Sukh Lal were addicted to vicious habits, and had spent the money in idle and speculative litigation.

Issues were fixed (1) as to whether the bonds were duly executed and founded on consideration; (2) whether the debt was contracted for immoral or illegal purposes, or for legal necessity, and whether it was binding on the defendants; (3) whether the plaintiff was entitled to compound interest, and for what periods was the plaintiff entitled to interest at an enhanced rate.

The Subordinate Judge found the first issue in the plaintiff's favour, and upon the second observed as follows:—

There was a great deal of contention raised on this issue, and in fact the defendants rested their plea solely on the determination of this issue.

The plaintiff, however, contended that, under a series of rulings, beginning with the Privy Council decision reported in 22 Weekly Reporter, p. 56—Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (1)—the defendant was bound to prove that the debts were immoral or illegal, and, unless they proved those facts, the plaintiff was at once entitled to a decree.

"The plaintiff also relied on the Full Bench decision in Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2), and also on Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (3) as well as certain other rulings. All these rulings established the proposition as laid down expressly in Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (3) (p. 793 of the report), namely, that, where joint ancestral property has passed [331] out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted.

"But the case before us is different from the above cases; here the joint property has not been sold as yet; a bona fide purchaser has not been sued, and the property sought to be followed still forms an integral portion of the joint family estate. The plaintiff in this case is the creditor where as the plaintiffs in those cases were the sons of the debtors, seeking to set aside the alienation made by their fathers on account of some antecedent debts, and I think the ruling in Jamna v. Nain Sukh (4), cited at the hearing by defendant's vakil, applies to this case?"

and proceeded to hold that the plaintiff was bound to prove primarily that the debts were contracted by Gobind Pershad and Sukh Lal for repayment of an antecedent debt or for a legal necessity affecting the whole family, and that it would then be for the sons of Gobind Pershad and Sukh Lal to meet that case.

The Court held that the plaintiff had only succeeded in proving that a sum of Rs. 8,500 was appropriated to the repayment of a debt antecedent to the mortgages, and that the remaining amount covered by the bonds had been spent in litigation to establish the adoption of Budri Narain.

Upon this point the Court observed:—

"In paragraph 11 of their written statement the defendants before us say that Gobind Pershad and Sukh Lal entered upon a ruinous adoption case. Gobind Pershad caused a suit to be filed on behalf of Budri Narain, one of his minor sons, on the ground that this Budri Narain had been adopted by a wealthy relation of his, and if the adoption was upheld, the daughter of that relative would inherit no property of her father.

"The plaint and the judgment in that adoption case were filed and received in this case to show the date and the extent of that litigation. The suit was valued at 12 lacs of rupees, and was filed in August 1881. Before that there was a certificate case before the District Judge, and numbers of cases under the Land Registration Act. The adoption case is still pending in the High Court, having been already before the Privy Council.

"Leaving aside the grossly exaggerated amount of the expenditure in that litigation, as given at random by defendants, we may conclude at once, [332] upon the extent, duration, and magnitude of the entire litigation, that Gobind Pershad spent much more than the total amount covered by both the bonds, excluding, of course, the Rs. 8,500 we have referred to above.

"Now, did this litigation benefit the defendants before us? Suppose the adoption be upheld, the only person to be benefited will be Budri Narain, and why should the defendant suffer with a view to secure a large property for only one of the members of their family. I need hardly notice that Budri Narain would hold the property at stake in the aforesaid litigation as a scion of a family; and the defendants would not be benefited in the least by a successful termination of the said litigation.

"The plaintiff's vakil referred to the Mitakshara, and attempted to prove that the Mitakshara nowhere considered money spent on fruitless litigation as an extravagant or needless expenditure; but the kind of litigation with which we are now familiar was unknown in the days when the Mitakshara was compiled; and we have to interpret and apply the law according to the times and circumstances of the present age, and the money which was spent in the manner aforesaid by Gobind Pershad and Sukh Lal would therefore come under the denomination of idle gifts, referred to in para. XLVII, page 106, Mitakshara, by Macnaghten (1870).

"In the Full Bench case of Luchmun Dass v. Girdhur Chowdhry (1) and (sic) referred to above, one of the questions submitted to the Full Bench was, 'would it make any difference if the money were borrowed partly to pay an antecedent debt of the father and partly for some other unexplained purpose (p. 857 of the report)' and the answer was. 'In the view which we take of the case, the whole of the money borrowed would be an antecedent debt.'

" But in the case before us, it is shown that, besides the Rs. 8,500, the whole of the money was spent in litigation; the bonds were executed in 1881 and 1882, the litigation began with the certificate and dakhil-kharij cases long before 1881, and is still pending. In these circumstances, the present defendants ought not to be called upon to pay more than Rs. 8,500 of the debt."

The Court therefore held that, under the circumstances, the defendants were only liable for the above sum of Rs. 8,500. The Court further held that as to this sum the defence of immoral and illegal purposes failed, and passed a decree against the three defendants for Rs. 8,500, with interest at the rate claimed in the plaint to the date of the suit, and at 6 per cent. per annum from that date until realization, the decree to be made absolute for a sale of the mortgaged properties after six months.

[333] From this decision the plaintiff appealed, claiming to be entitled to the entire sum secured by the mortgage-bonds, and the defendants cross-appealed as to the sum of Rs. 8,500 decreed against them, and contended that in any event the Court was wrong in allowing interest at an enhanced rate and also in allowing compound interest.

Mr. Hill, Baboo Saligram Singh, and Moulvi Mahomed Isfaq, appeared for the appellant.

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe) and Baboo Kali Kishen Sen, appeared for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This suit is brought on two mortgage-bonds executed in favour of plaintiff by Gobind Pershad, defendant No. 1, and Sukh Lal, his brother, now deceased. The first dated 4th May 1881 is for Rs. 20,000, the second dated 3rd July 1882 for Rs. 5,000.

The mortgagors were members of a joint family, governed by the Mitakshara law, and by the mortgage-bonds in suit the joint family property was mortgaged for the amount of the sums borrowed. Default having been made in payment of principal and interest, this suit was brought.

Before the institution of this suit Sukh Lal died.

The suit, as now framed, is brought against Gobind Pershad and his sons Dwarka Nath and Kedar Nath, against Ram Lakhan, son of Sukh Lal, and against Krishna Nanda Ram and Tilakdhari Singh. Budri Narain, a third son of Gobind Pershad, was originally made a defendant, but was struck out, on the allegation that he was adopted into another family. The two last defendants are a mortgagee and a lessee of some of the mortgaged properties, puiene to the plaintiff's mortgage. They do not appear on the appeal.

It is not necessary to detail the history of the successive hearings of the suit. It is set out in the judgment of the lower Court. At the first hearing Gobind Pershad alone appeared, admitted the mortgages, and a decree was made against the defendants in 1885. Afterwards the defendants 2, 3, and 4 applied for, and were allowed by an order of this Court, a trial de novo: [334] and it is from the judgment and decree of the lower Court, at the trial so held, that the present appeal is brought.

At the time of the mortgages the defendants 2, 3, and 4 were minors. The defendants 2 and 3, who are joined in their written statement by defendant No. 4, denied the execution of the bonds in suit, set up that, if so, the debts were incurred for illegal and immoral purposes, and not for any necessities of the family, and further alleged that the monies were raised for, and spent in, idle and speculative litigation. They denied the right of the mortgagors to mortgage the family property for the purposes for which the money was raised.

The Subordinate Judge found—that the bonds were duly executed and “founded on consideration,” and that the defence of immoral or illegal purposes was not established. The first defence set up therefore wholly failed. It is upon the finding of the Subordinate Judge, with regard to the consideration which he finds was given for the mortgages, and the conclusion of law at which he arrives upon that finding, that the questions upon which this appeal depends, come before us.

It is certain that this family was a wealthy one: and it may be taken as clear that, over and above all ordinary requirements for suitable maintenance and expenses fit for their station, they had a surplus income of some thousands of rupees a year. It is difficult, and not necessary, to arrive at an exact amount, but it is clear that they were a prosperous family. Unfortunately, Gobind and Sukh Lal embarked in a litigation for the purpose of establishing the adoption by, or to, Radha Kishen, Gobind Pershad's step-brother, of Gobind's son beforementioned, Budri Narain; and there can be no doubt that they spent very large sums in litigation about this alleged adoption, which was disputed both in and after August 1881, when a suit was filed to establish the validity of it, and in a multitude of proceedings before that date, connected with this controversy. There is little in the evidence that can be relied on as to the expenses incurred before the institution of the suit in August 1881, or how they were defrayed. Jugdip Sahai's evidence, which appears to us to be given fairly enough, seems to render it probable that, at the time of the mortgage, three months before the adoption suit was instituted, expenses of so large an [335] amount had been incurred, that the money raised at that time may have been wanted for debts then due. But there is nothing proved in the evidence to show that money raised in May 1881 on the mortgage was raised to pay debts then due: still less that it was applied to pay such debts, except as to the sum of Rs. 8,500, which was at the date of the mortgage due to the Bank of Bengal at Bankipore, and which, there can be no reasonable doubt, was paid out of the mortgage money, as the Subordinate Judge finds. It was, as appears from the evidence of Umbica Charan Ghose, paid on May 5th, 1881, in discharge of the liability of Gobind and Sukh Lal remaining to the Bank on that day.

The Subordinate Judge finds that Rs. 8,500 of the mortgage money was borrowed and applied to pay off this debt, and we agree with him. He finds that there is no proof that any other debt, prior to the mortgage of May 1881, is shown to have been paid off out of the money borrowed, or any legal necessity or charge on the family defrayed out of it. We agree with him. He finds, or infers, that the residue of the money borrowed, was borrowed to defray the expenses of the coming litigation as to the adoption. It is a reasonable inference; we should hesitate before saying that he was not justified in drawing it; but we think the question immaterial in this case.

Upon the case as it stands, apart from this last finding, to which we must refer later on, it appears: First, that, so far as the sum of Rs. 8,500 is concerned, the mortgage of May 1881 was made to raise money to discharge a debt of Gobind and Sukh Lal existing at the date of the mortgage:

Second, that, as to the residue of the money borrowed on that mortgage, it constituted a personal debt, due by Gobind and Sukh Lal, jointly and severally, in virtue of the loan then raised by them: Third, that the money raised under the bond of the 5th July 1882 was a personal debt of Gobind and Sukh Lal, as to the Rs. 3,755 in cash then received by them, —the residue being the amount of interest then due on the earlier bond.

The Subordinate Judge held that, on the facts found by him, the shares in the family property of defendants 2, 3, and 4 were bound to the extent of the Rs. 8,500, found to have been an existing debt at the time of the mortgage of May 1881 and discharged [336] out of the mortgage monies; that as to the residue of the monies raised on that mortgage those shares were not liable; that as to the mortgage of July 1882 they were not liable at all, not for the Rs. 3,755 received in cash, as this was not raised to pay a then existing debt; nor for the residue, as this was for interest due on the earlier mortgage, and a liability to pay interest on the part of that mortgage for which the shares were liable could be sufficiently discharged by giving a decree against them for that sum—Rs. 8,500, with interest on it so far as due under the terms of original mortgage. He dismissed the suit as to the residue of the claim as against defendants 2, 3 and 4.

Both parties appeal: the plaintiff against the dismissal of his suit against defendants 2, 3, and 4, as to the residue of plaintiff's claim other than the Rs. 8,500, with interest, and those defendants by cross objection as to the Rs. 8,500, on the ground that the debts paid out of that sum were not such as their shares could be liable for; and as to the interest on the ground that the rate allowed is excessive.

Upon the question whether the shares in the ancestral property of defendants 2, 3, and 4 were liable, as being the shares of sons liable under the pious duty now enforced by law, a full argument was addressed to us, in part, upon the numerous cases decided in, and since, 1874, beginning with Girdharee Lall's case (1), and also upon the texts of the Mitakshara bearing on this question. So far as the decisions of the Privy Council and of this Court interpret and lay down the law under the Mitakshara, as applicable in the present case, we are of course bound to follow those decisions, without attempting any interpretation of our own. We think the main questions which have been raised before us are settled by authority which we are bound to follow.

But it will be convenient first to refer to the cross-objection of the defendants, as to the nature of the debt existing at the date of the mortgage for which their shares have been held liable. We intimated at the hearing that we did not see how the objection could be sustained. It is that the debt contracted for the highly needless and imprudent purpose of establishing Budri Narain's adoption was not one to which the pious duty could attach, under [337] the Mitakshara. This argument, if it were to prevail, would bring under the exceptions in the Mitakshara money spent on useless and grossly imprudent objects, and would thus, no doubt, open a way of mitigating the effect of a course of decision, destructive to a great extent to the Mitakshara system; but that is a construction which we cannot adopt here. The exception has too long been limited to illegal and immoral purposes to justify us in introducing an extension of it, which would include transactions, the character of which was no more than "imprudent," or "unconscientiously imprudent," or "unreasonable."

If it could be done in any case, it perhaps ought to be done in the present, in which a prosperous family has been ruined by litigation, in which the defendants 2, 3, and 4, members of it, had no possible interest. But we could not, in the absence of any authority, adopt such an interpretation of texts so long dealt with by the Courts. In this respect, as in the other parts of the case, the questions are, as we think, completely concluded by authority which we must follow.

To return to the main questions. In this case the mortgage-creditor sues—first, a mortgagor and his sons, and, second, the son of a deceased mortgagor; and seeks his remedy against the ancestral property of all members of a joint family. It is certain that he is entitled to a decree against the mortgagor in respect of his own share. It is also clear that the mortgage, so far as it was contracted to pay a debt not illegal or immoral, existing when the mortgage-debt was contracted, is good against the shares of the sons of each mortgagor. No authority need be cited for this. It is also now established that a decree for the personal debt of the father, not illegal or immoral, may be enforced by sale in execution in his lifetime of the entire joint family estate—Meenakshi Naidu v. Immudi Kanaka Ramaya Kounden (1). This is one of the advances lately made on the older law, which made the son's shares liable in respect of the pious duty to pay the father's debts, after his natural or civil death.

It is clear, therefore, that in the present case the plaintiff, after satisfying his mortgage-decree against the father of defendants 2 [338] and 3, could, although the father is still living, execute the remainder of the decree against their shares, on the footing of its being a decree for their father's personal debt. As to the fourth defendant, the son of Sukh Lal deceased, the share of the estate in his hands is liable "for all debts of his father, which, though neither necessary nor beneficial to him, were free from any taint of immorality" [Mayne § 284 and cases cited (2).] His share is in his hands liable in respect of his father's personal debts.

The question is therefore narrowed to this, whether in a suit upon a mortgage by the father brought against the father and the sons, in which the sons, being parties, have the opportunity of at once raising the defence that the debts were illegal or immoral, the plaintiff may have, besides a decree on the mortgage so far as it is binding, such a decree against the family property, as will give him the same remedy in respect of the personal debt of the father as he could have against it in execution of a decree against the father alone?

Mr. Mayne, in § 283, p. 309, of the 4th edition (3), says:—"But I imagine that no suit could be brought directly against sons, based solely on their liability to pay the debt of their father, until he was either actually or civilly dead, so that the estate had legally vested in the sons."

Recent decisions in this Court are not quite in accordance with this opinion.

In Gunga Prosad v. Ajudhia Pershad Singh (4) it was decided by Mitter and Maclean, JJ., that in a suit upon a mortgage by the father, brought against the father and the sons, the plaintiff could have a decree for the sale of the mortgaged premises or any other joint ancestral property belonging to the defendants. This was decided on the authority of the Full Bench case of Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (1).

[339] It is argued before us, and seems to be the opinion of the Allahabad Court, that that decision is not clearly warranted by the case of Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (1).

We must be wholly governed by the Full Bench decision, if it decides the question before us, and we think the case of Gunga Prosad v. Ajudhia Pershad Singh (2) did follow it.

In the Full Bench case the first question propounded by the referring Bench is as follows:—

"In the case of a Mitakshara family, consisting of a father and one minor son, where the father (being the manager) raises money by hypothecating certain ancestral family property by bonds, and it is not proved, on the one hand, that there was any legal necessity for his raising the money, nor, on the other, that the money was raised or expended for immoral or illegal purposes, or that the lender made any enquiry as to the purpose for which it was required, can the lender (the mortgagee) enforce by suit against the father and the son the payment of his money by sale of the property during the father's lifetime?" The question therefore relates to:—First, the case of a Mitakshara family, consisting of a father and minor son, as here:—Second, the father hypothecating ancestral property, there being no proved necessity, but no proof, on the other hand, of immoral or illegal purposes; that is the case here:—Third, there being no proof that the lender made any enquiry as to the purpose; that is the case here.

And the question is whether, under those circumstances, the lender (the mortgagee) could enforce by suit against father and son the payment of the money by sale of the property during the father's lifetime?

The answer was:—"The mortgage itself upon which the money was raised could not be enforced, but the debt so contracted by the father, being itself an antecedent debt within the rulings of the Privy Council, and the son being a party to the suit, the mortgagee, notwithstanding the form of the proceedings, would be entitled to a decree, directing the debt to be raised out of the whole ancestral estate, inclusive of the mortgaged property."

[340] The fifth question and the answer to it were as follows:—

Question.—"Would it make any difference if the money were borrowed partly to pay an antecedent debt of the father, and partly for some other unexplained purpose?"

Answer.—"In the view which we take of the case, the whole of the money borrowed would be an antecedent debt."

The effect of the answer to the first of these questions was much discussed before us, and for the respondents it was contended that the words, "being itself an antecedent debt within the rulings of the Privy Council" must mean "if it be an antecedent," and not "inasmuch as it is an antecedent debt," as contended by the appellant's pleaders.

The effect of this first answer of the Full Bench has been referred to in four decided cases—one decided in Allahabad, one in Bombay, and two in this Court. The decisions in the last two cases were delivered by Judges who had themselves been members of the Full Bench.

(1) 5 C. 855.

(2) 8 C. 131.

In Jamna v. Nain Sukh (1) Edge, C.J., at p. 495 of the report said :—

"Then I come to the case of Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2). That is a most important case. It was on the authority of that case that the eminent Judge, Mr. Justice Mitter, decided as he did in the case of Gunga Prosad v. Ajudhia Pershad Singh (3). Now as to the case of Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2), it is difficult to ascertain what the facts were, or what was the precise form of litigation. This alone is certain, that there were certain questions, which appear at p. 857 of the report, which were referred to a Full Bench. The answers to these questions are found at p. 863, and, taking the first question and answer as an example, and as those relied upon by Pandit Ajudhia Nath here, it is to be observed that the Judges, in giving their answer, have assumed a most important fact, which is not suggested in the question. The same observation applies to others of the questions. They have assumed that the debt contracted by the father was an antecedent debt within the rulings of the Privy Council. [341] It is unfortunate that the full facts of that case do not appear in the report. Now with regard to the case of Gunga Prosad v. Ajudhia Pershad Singh (3) the judgment of Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Maclean is based upon the Full Bench decision in Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2) above referred to. That fact, to my mind, naturally lessens the authority of that case, so far as it may apply to a case like the present."

The learned Chief Justice considers that the words under discussion do not pronounce a judgment upon the question, whether or not a debt contracted under the circumstances set out in the question is an antecedent debt, and decide that it is such a debt; but that it is assumed, in the answer, that, as a matter of fact, the debt in question was such a debt and his view, as we understand it, appears to be that the answer is given upon that assumption of fact.

This is the decision on which the Subordinate Judge has relied in deciding the suit. He has not referred to Chintamanrav Mehendale v. Kashinath (4), in which Chief Justice Sargent points out that Bheknarain Singh v. Januk Singh (5), on which the learned Chief Justice Edge relied much in the Allahabad case, had been overruled in the Privy Council.

In Chintamanrav Mehendale v. Kashinath (4), the case just mentioned, Sargent, C.J., refers to the answer of the Full Bench, and to the question referred which it answers, in the following terms. "In Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2) the effects of the decisions in Kantoo Lall's case (6) and Suraj Bunsu Koer v. Sheo Proshad (7) were considered by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, and the Court held that the loan for which the bond was passed by the father, as stated by the reference, was an antecedent debt, within the contemplation of the propositions set out in Suraj Bunsu's case, and that (as shown by the first question referred), although 'on the one hand it was not proved that there was any necessity for raising the money, nor on the other hand that the money was raised or expended for immoral or illegal [342] purposes,' the mortgagee was at any rate entitled to a decree, directing the debt to be raised out of the whole ancestral property, including the mortgaged property. This ruling was followed by Mitter and Maclean, JJ., in Gunga Prosad v. Ajudhia Pershad Singh (1)." Chief Justice Sargent, therefore, treats the answer of the Full Bench as deciding that the debt, as described in the first question referred, was an antecedent debt, within the contemplation of the propositions set out in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Proshad (2), and that therefore the mortgagee was at any rate entitled to a decree, directing the debt to be raised out of the whole ancestral property.

We have looked at the records of the cases out of which the reference to the Full Bench arose, and it may be useful to state how they were decided, after the decision of the Full Bench.

It is to be observed that the cases in which the questions referred to the Full Bench arose, were all regular appeals, and as, under the rules of this Court, in references in the case of regular appeals the record of the case is not (as it is in references respecting second appeals) before the Court for the decision of the case itself, the answer of the Full Bench must be taken as made upon the questions referred, and not upon any supposed judgment upon the facts of each case. The actual decisions in the four cases to which we have referred, are therefore used by us upon the question raised in Jamna v. Nain Sukh (3) as to the scope of the Full Bench decision.

We now proceed to refer to those cases in detail.

The first of these cases was Regular Appeal 228 of 1878. In this case plaintiff sued on two bonds, one for Rs. 5,000, the other for Rs. 975, executed by Sridhur Chowdhry, defendant's father, in the defendant's lifetime, by which the ancestral property of the joint Mitakshara family was mortgaged. The father was dead when the suit was instituted, and the whole property was in the possession of defendant, his heir, a minor. The amount claimed, which included interest, was Rs. 9,251-11-3. The lower Court held that it was not proved that Sridhur Chowdhry borrowed [343] the money for a necessity valid under the Shastras, and for which he was competent to mortgage the whole family property, and dismissed the suit as against the son's share of the property, giving a decree against the father's share only. There was some evidence that part of the mortgage-debt was incurred to pay off personal debts of Sridhur previously existing; but there was no finding whether this was so or not, either by the original Court or by this Court. This Court on the 8th July 1880 held that, as it had neither been alleged nor proved that the debts of Sridhur were contracted for illegal and immoral purposes, the plaintiff (according to the judgment of the Full Bench) was entitled to enforce the payment of the sum decreed, not against the mortgaged property by reason of the mortgage, but by the sale of the whole or such portion of the family property in the hands of the defendants as might be sufficient to satisfy the debt.

In 279 of 1878 the suit was brought against father and son on three bonds executed by the father, mortgaging the joint family property. The father let judgment go by default. The son, a minor, defended the suit, on the ground that his father had no power to charge the joint family properties with the debt. The lower Court held that legal necessity was not proved, and dismissed the suit as against the son's share, on the authority of Bheknarain Singh v. Januk Singh (4), giving plaintiff a decree against the father's share only. There was evidence that there were, at the time the mortgage debts were contracted, debts due by the father under decrees. There was no proof that these debts were for family purposes, and no proof that the loans were applied in satisfaction of the decrees. There was no finding as to whether or not the mortgage loans, or any part of them, were contracted to pay debts of the father incurred previous to the mortgages. The High Court on the 8th July 1880 said:—"Plaintiff is entitled not only to the decree which he has obtained, but to this further relief, viz., that if the sale of the share and interest of Mohan Chowdhry (the father) should not be sufficient to satisfy the debt, interest, and costs, the minor's share and interest in the ancestral property must also be sold, so far as may be necessary to satisfy the amount due."

[344] No 239 of 1878 was a suit brought by the sons and wives of Modit Narain Singh and Mode Narain Singh, defendants 1 and 2, and the widow of Babu Odit Narain Singh, to recover possession of a joint Hindu family property, on the ground that the defendant Kishen Dass Purohit, in execution of a decree against the defendants 1 and 2, having purchased it, took possession of it, although he was not entitled to the property under the purchase. The plaintiff's case was that Mode Narain and Modit Narain borrowed from the principal defendant Rs. 4,000 on the mortgage of the property in suit, and they alleged that the mortgage was not binding on them, as the loan was not taken for the necessary purposes of the family. The first Court gave the plaintiffs a decree, holding that the defendant No. 3 as purchaser had only acquired at the auction sale the share and interest of Mode and Modit, defendants 1 and 2. This Court on appeal, finding that the bond recited that Rs. 2,435 out of Rs. 4,000, the amount of the mortgage bond, was an antecedent debt, remanded the case to the lower Court for a finding whether in fact this was so, and on this issue the lower Court found that the Rs. 2,435 were advanced to satisfy an antecedent debt, the balance, Rs. 1,565 being taken in cash by the mortgagors. Upon this finding after remand this Court on the 23rd May 1882 held that "the mortgage was binding only to the extent of Rs. 2,435, and the balance of Rs. 1,565, was a personal debt of Mode Narain and Modit Narain." Therefore, the decree which was passed on the mortgage bond of the 12th August 1871 was a decree upon a transaction which was partly binding upon the plaintiffs and partly not. The plaintiffs were no parties to the suit in which that decree was obtained. Under these circumstances, it was said, "we think that it would be in accordance with justice to allow the plaintiffs to redeem that part of the mortgage which is not found to be binding upon them, that is to say, to recover the property upon paying to the defendant appellant that portion of the loan secured by the bond of the 12th of August 1871, which is now found to have been a valid charge upon the whole joint family property. To that extent therefore the decree of the lower Court will be varied."

In 288 of 1878 the plaintiffs were the same, and the property in dispute was the same. In 1868 Mode Narain and Modit [345] Narain executed a zuripeshgi of the property in favour of Akbar Hossein and Amir Hossein, receiving a loan of Rs. 10,000 from the lessees, who immediately afterwards gave them, their lessors, a sub-lease at a rent of Rs. 889, which rent, as this Court observed, represented the interest on the loan of Rs. 10,000 at a rate of little less than 9 per cent. Mode and Modit made default in payment of the reserved rent due from them, and Akbar Hossein and Syudunnissa, Amir's widow, obtained a decree against them for the amount due. In execution of that decree the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtors in the property in dispute were sold and purchased by the decree-holder, who took possession of the whole property. A suit was then brought to recover possession of it, on the allegation that, being joint property held under the Mitakshara law, the sale of the properties was null and void as against the plaintiffs. The lower Court gave the plaintiffs a decree in respect of their shares, and the defendants appealed. The case was remanded to the lower Court by an order similar to that made in 289. The lower Court found that, of the Rs. 10,000 advanced, Rs. 7,677-15 represented antecedent debts, and the balance Rs. 2,322-1 was received in cash. Upon this finding this Court on the 23rd May 1882 held that the zuripeshgi lease was binding upon the plaintiffs only to the extent of the antecedent debts, Rs. 7,677-15, which was held to be a valid charge upon the joint family property, and the decree of the lower Court was varied accordingly.

In the first two cases, therefore, without a finding upon the question whether the mortgage loan was for a debt antecedent to the mortgage, the Court held in a suit by a creditor, the son being a party, that the creditor was entitled, in respect of the debt of the father, to have his remedy against the estate after the father's share had been exhausted in payment of the mortgage-debt, the mortgage security for which was good as against his share only.

In the other two cases, the remedy having been sought on the mortgage security alone, and the sale having been only had to enforce the rights under it, the Court held that the sale under the mortgage was good only so far as the mortgage itself was good against the son's interests, that is, to the extent of debts existing as the time of the mortgage.

[346] In the case of Laljee Sahoy v. Fakeer Chand (1), Pontifex, J., one of the Judges who sat in the Full Bench, said, soon after that decision:—"It would seem, in consequence of the rulings of the Privy Council, we are bound to hold that the payment, even in the father's lifetime, of an antecedent debt due by him, is a pious duty on the part of the son; and its discharge is, therefore, such a necessary purpose, as to give validity to a sale or mortgage by the father as against his minor sons (but not against his adult sons), whether such antecedent debt does or does not come within the words:—'If a calamity affecting the whole family requires it, or the support of the family renders it necessary, or indispensable duties, such as the obsequies of a father or the like, make it unavoidable'; always provided that the antecedent debt is not incurred for immoral purposes. It was, however, the opinion of the Full Bench, that, the antecedent debt spoken of by the Privy Council means debt antecedent to the transaction, viz., the sale or mortgage purporting to deal with the property. But if the property is dealt with by a decree in a suit upon a mortgage by the father alone, to which the father and the sons are parties, it follows from the Privy Council decisions that, as against the sons, even though they may have been adult when the debt (assuming it was not for immoral purposes) was incurred, and notwithstanding verse 29, chap. 1, s. i, and verse 10, chap. I, s. vi, of the Mitakshara, the property would be bound not indeed by virtue of the mortgage, but by virtue of the father's debt antecedent to the suit being enforceable against the joint ancestral estate, and therefore against the mortgaged property as part of it. Strictly speaking perhaps, the suit should be in the form of a suit upon the mortgage as against the father, and upon the debt as an antecedent debt as against the interests of the sons in the joint ancestral estate. But this would be merely matter of form, and the neglect to frame the suit accurately would, probably, not prevent the Court making a decree which would give the sons an opportunity of redemption. The result would perhaps seem to be that "antecedent debt" in the meaning of the Full Bench, means with regard to a mortgage, "debt antecedent to the transaction," and, in the case of a proceeding by [347] suit, "debt antecedent to the institution of the suit" (if, indeed, having regard to the statement in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modun Mohun (1), at p. 17 of the report, it be now necessary to have recourse to the canon in, Suraj Bunsu's case), and this would seem to be the necessary result of the language of the first answer of the Full Bench (2) at p. 863 of the report. It is said that "the mortgage itself could not be enforced," and this could only be because the debt was not antecedent to that transaction. If it had been, the mortgage would certainly have been binding on the whole family property. The answer then goes on to say that "the debt being itself an antecedent debt, the mortgagee would be entitled, etc." That, as we understand, must refer to the institution of the suit, the only other material event under consideration to which the debt was antecedent.

The case of Gunga Prosad v. Ajudhia Pershad Singh (3) proceeds, we think, upon this view of the Full Bench decision; and indeed the decision in this case was precisely anticipated in the passage from the judgment of Pontifex, J., to which we have referred. Gunga Prosad v. Ajudhia Pershad Singh was a suit brought by a mortgagee against the mortgagor and his four sons amongst others: and the proposition material to our purpose is that stated at page 136:—"Assuming that the property in dispute is ancestral, and the mortgage executed by the father is not valid against the sons, the plaintiff is still entitled to recover the debt by the sale of the ancestral joint property of the father and the sons, because, supposing that the debt was contracted for the personal purposes of the father, still the ancestral property in the hands of the sons is liable for the debt, it being not proved to have been contracted for immoral purposes—Luchman Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2)." The order pronounced by the Court is at p. 137 of the report:—"We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Court, and direct that the plaintiff shall recover the amount claimed, with interest upon the principal at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date of the suit to this date, and with further interest at the same rate upon the aggregate sum [348] adjudged in favour of the plaintiff from this date to the date of payment by the sale of the mortgaged premises or any other joint ancestral property belonging to the defendant. The defendants, other than Sheodyal Singh, shall not be personally liable. The plaintiff is entitled to recover costs incurred in both Courts from the defendants."

Upon the whole, we think we are bound to follow that case, to hold that a decree similar to the one made in it, must be made in the present appeal and to decree the plaintiff's appeal. As to the defendant No. 4, the son of Sukh Lal, deceased, it appears to us that the case of Gunga Prosad v. Ajudhia Pershad Singh is also an authority for passing a decree in this suit, against his shares, for in that case (as well as in the two cases Nos. 228 and 279 before referred to), in a suit on a mortgage which was held not to lie in respect of the hypothecation of the property mortgaged, a decree was made in respect of the personal debt of the father against the shares of the sons in the joint family property.

As to the rate of interest on the mortgage debt, we think the increased rate of interest does come under the provisions of s. 74 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as the enhanced rate of interest is made to run in case of default from the date of the mortgage. See the Full Bench case of Kalachand Kyal v. Ship Chunder Roy (1), decided on the 23rd March 1892. Holding this to be so, and having regard to the provision for compound interest, we think, following Dip Narain Rai v. Dipan Rai (2), that both should not be allowed, but only the lower rate of 1 per cent. per mensem with compound interest, or Re. 1-8 per mensem without compound interest whichever is most favourable to the debtor.

We allow the appeal, and dismiss the cross-objection, except as regards the rate of interest, which objection we allow. This order carries costs in favour of appellant.

There will be a decree against the mortgaged properties for the amount of the mortgage debt, Rs. 8,500, with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem with compound interest from date of mortgage down to suit; a decree against the defendants for the residue of the debt at 1 per cent per mensem with compound interest from [349] dates of mortgages respectively, leviable against all the family property in their hands, down to suit. In computing the sum due, the payments given credit for in the plaint to be taken into account.

Interest on each amount to run at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from date of suit. Costs of suit to be added to the amount of the Rs. 8,500—mortgage-debt.

In this case the petitioner was said to have given false evidence in a certain case before the Deputy Magistrate of Beguserai. The Deputy Magistrate ordered the prosecution of the petitioner under s. 193 of the Penal Code without making any preliminary inquiry or calling upon him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under that section.

[350] The order of the Deputy Magistrate was as follows:—

"Where as in this Court during the trial of the case Lalit Goala v. Sipahi Sing and others, on the 16th May last, Chaudhari Izharul Huq of Lachminia, Beguserai, district Monghyr, on solemn affirmation made the following statements:—

"I have not assisted in any of the three cases mentioned; i. e., this, a fuel case, and the Muchallka petition, I hereby sanction the prosecution of the said Izharul Huq under s. 193, Penal Code, before the nearest first-class Magistrate to wit, the magistrate of Monghyr."

Against that order the petitioner moved the Sessions Judge of Bhagalpur, who, being of opinion that there were grounds for thinking that the statements made by the petitioner were false, on the authority of the case of In the matter of Mutty Lall Ghose (1), upheld the order of the Deputy Magistrate.

The petitioner, being dissatisfied with the order of the Sessions Judge, obtained a rule from the High Court, which now came on for hearing.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ.) was delivered by PIGOT, J.—This case arises either under s. 195 or under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If under s. 195, and for myself I do not think it possible that a general sanction issued forth of his own motion by the Magistrate irrespective of any application for sanction to prosecute can be contemplated by that section, then we think it is a case in which sanction ought not to have been granted. If it is a case under s. 476, it is laid down by a decision, In the matter of the petition of Khepu Nath Sikdar v. Grish Chunder Mukherji (2), differing apparently from the case of Queen-Empress v. Rachappa (3), that this Court has jurisdiction to interpose in the case of an order made by a Court under that section. If the Court has jurisdiction to interpose, and we are here dealing with a rule which has been granted in this Court, then it appears to us that the Court must have the power to determine whether the discretion given by that section has or has not been [351] properly exercised. The discretion is given by the words "such Court after making any preliminary inquiry is that may be necessary, may send the case for inquiry or trial." It is therefore for the Court acting in the matter in the exercise of its discretion to determine whether or not to make such preliminary inquiry. There may be cases in which at any rate it is plain that such an inquiry ought to precede the proceedings contemplated by the section. We think this is one of them on the face of it. Upon the order of the Deputy Magistrate, which has been read and commented upon before us, the case is surrounded with difficulties. We do not think that the order was rightly made as having been made upon the impression produced by such evidence as was in this case heard by the Deputy Magistrate. We think that in the circumstances of this case he ought to have made an inquiry before exercising his powers under s. 476, and as he has not done so, we must set aside his order and make the rule absolute.

As I have stated, with reference to what I have said upon s. 195, I simply expressed my own individual opinion. Mr. Justice Rampini is of opinion that a general sanction may be given under s. 195; but our judgment that if the sanction issued under s. 476, it must be revoked, and if under s. 195, it must be set aside, is common to us both.

[352] THIS was a reference by the Sessions Judge of Hoogly under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The accused was summoned before the Deputy Magistrate of Serampore by one Kali Dasi, who claimed maintenance from him under the provisions of s. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for his illegitimate child. The accused pleaded that he was not the father of the child and therefore not liable. The Magistrate purporting to proceed by way of summary trial, and without recording any evidence, passed an order under the section directing the accused to pay a monthly allowance of Re. 1-8 for the support of the child. It appeared in the record of the case kept by the Magistrate under s. 263 that the complainant herself and some witnesses called by her were examined, and also that a witness had been examined for the defence, but their evidence was not recorded. The order of the Magistrate was recorded in the following terms.

"From the evidence of the woman herself and of her witnesses, and of a witness for the defence, there can be no doubt that Durga Charan Naik is the father of the child in the woman's arms. I allow the woman Re. 1-8 a month from the date of this order."

On the matter being represented to the Sessions Judge, he referred the case with the following remarks:—

"Inquiries under Chap. XXXVI of the Code are not enumerated in s. 260 as among cases which may be tried summarily, while the last clause of s. 488 distinctly requires a record of evidence as in summons cases, that is, in accordance with the provisions of s. 355. There being

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and GHOSE, JJ.) was as follows:—

Proceedings under Chap. XXXVI of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be conducted as in a summary trial under Chap. XXII. The evidence should be recorded as provided by s. 255. It is therefore impossible to form any opinion on the proceedings of the Magistrate or the correctness of his order. We observe that the Magistrate in the explanation called for by the [353] Sessions Judge states that "in these simple and very common cases I do not record much of the evidence." In this case he has recorded none at all. Consequently a Court of revision is unable to satisfy itself that the order is a proper order. The case must therefore be properly tried.

ROHIMUDDI AND ANOTHER (Petitioners) v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS,

[1st December, 1892.]

Judgment—Form and contents of judgment—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 367, 537.

A Sessions Judge in disposing of a Criminal Appeal recorded the following judgment:—

"The appellants have been convicted of breaking into Hari's house at night, dragged Hari's wife to the fields and dishonoured her, though they did not have intercourse with her. I have read through the evidence and heard the appellant's pleader, and I think that the Deputy Magistrate was quite right to believe the evidence. The sentence of one year's imprisonment and Rs. 50 is not heavy. I dismiss the appeal."

It was contended that this was not a judgment within the terms of s. 367 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Held that having regard to the provisions of s. 537, it does not follow that because the form of a judgment does not exactly comply with all the requirements of s. 367, it is not a valid judgment, and that as this judgment showed that the Sessions Judge had appreciated the point that the prosecution had to establish viz., the credibility of the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution, and had expressed his opinion on that point, there being nothing to show that any other point was raised before him, it was not a case in which the High Court should exercise its revisional powers.

[354] The petitioners in this case were tried before the Deputy Magistrate of Rungpur and convicted of offences under ss. 457 and 354 of the Penal Code and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 each.

The facts of the case the appear fully from the judgment of the Deputy Magistrate, the material portion of which was as follows:—

"Accused went with others into the house of the complainant, broke open the door, entered it and dragged her out to some distance, where she was thrown down. Accused No. 1 sat on her chest, squeezed her breasts, and attempted to commit rape on her, while defendant No. 2 and another (not named) held her hands for the purpose of helping defendant No. 1 in committing the rape. To trace out the cause of this occurrence it is necessary to give a short history. Some time ago Changa brought a case under s. 494, Penal Code, against two tenants of Kina Singh, a powerful zemindar of this district. Kina Singh, it was alleged helped the accused and made every effort to frighten away the witnesses for the prosecution. He requested Mahtab and Khetab Khan, two brothers, who have local influence, to prevail upon the witness Hari not to appear and give evidence in that case. Hari did not appear till he was arrested on a warrant issued from this Court. It is in evidence that Mahtab frightened Hari not to give true evidence. Hari refused to hear him; he was threatened with dishonour to his family, but Hari came to Court and gave his evidence on the 13th instant. According to Hari he left home on the 12th for the purpose of coming to Rungpur, and it is strange that that very night this happened. During the absence of Hari, his young wife was dragged out and dishonoured by the servants of Mahtab Khan, two of whom are the present accused. The case for the prosecution has been fully proved. The complainant is a young fair girl of 14, her manner of giving evidence and her demeanour showed that she was telling us an account of the matter as it had actually happened, and not out of pure imagination. Her mother Rati Mai also does not show any signs of having been telling a tutored story.

"The witnesses, Gura and Jan Mahmed, who saved the girl from being actually raped, are neighbours of the place where the girl was dragged, and I see no reason to distrust them.

"Witness Khetab Khan not only deposes against his brother Mahtab Khan, but has frankly admitted that he has been helping the prosecution with money. There is one thing in his evidence which I must notice. He says, when Hari refused to hear Mahtab Khan, he told him:—'You can go to Gadu Babu's land or go over to my brother, and Hari has accordingly sold his jot to him.' This Hari also admits. I have myself tested the truth of this fact. It is true that Hari presented a deed of sale on 13th instant [355] (the day he gave evidence in Changa's case) which he executed. Hari's evidence does not go against the accused, but goes to suggest the motive which actuated the accused in committing this offence. It is true, as Hari says, that he did not appear on summons, and that he was arrested by a warrant in Changa's case. The counsel for the defence contended that there are several houses nearer the spot where the girl Aziram was thrown down, but none of the owners of those houses came. That might be explained in a variety of ways. The occurrence being at dead hour of the night, they might not have heard any noise, or they might not have been at home. Mere absence of these men does not show that the case is false.

"Now it is necessary to see what evidence there is of house-breaking. Asiram and her mother distinctly prove that the present accused entered the house and brought out Asiram. This evidence cannot be disbelieved, and there was no other means for the prosecution to prove it. As I have already said these witnesses are wholly reliable, and I do rely on them, but except Asiram's evidence, there is no evidence to prove the attempt at rape. I have accordingly charged the accused with an offence under s. 354, coupled with s. 457, Penal Code.

"Next comes the question of punishment. Accused are servants of a local zemindar, and, it is asserted, committed the offence at his instigation. No amount of fine would, therefore, be any punishment. This I say because a suggestion was thrown out by the defence that a sentence of fine would be sufficient. Apart from this consideration, I can by no means say that the offence is anything but serious. Taking advantage of the absence of her husband from home, accused dishonoured her and her family, put them into all sorts of indignities, and went so far as to take away the ijjut of a poor innocent young girl. The offence has taken a more aggravated form, because the accused did it not for being subjected to any casual passion, but being excited by their master. I find, therefore, no extenuating circumstance in their favour. The Court finds the accused guilty under ss. 457-354, Penal Code, and sentences each of them to one year's rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 50; on default rigorous imprisonment for three months. Out of the fine Rs. 25 to be given to complainant as compensation."

Against this conviction and sentence the accused appealed to the Sessions Judge, who delivered the following judgment:—

"The appellants have been convicted of breaking into Hari's house at night, dragged Hari's wife to the fields and dishonoured her, though they did not have intercourse with her.

I have read through the evidence and heard the appellant's pleader, and I think that the Deputy Magistrate was quite right to believe the evidence.

The sentence of one year's imprisonment and Rs. 50 is not heavy.

I dismiss the appeal."

[356] Against that decision an application was then made to the High Court under its revisional powers, and a rule was issued which now came on for argument.

Mr. A. P. Gasper and Baboo Atulya Charan Bose, for the petitioners.

No one appeared for the opposite party.

The only ground upon which it was contended that the conviction and sentence should be set aside was that the judgment of the Sessions Judge was not a judgment in accordance with law, not being in conformity with the provisions of s. 367 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and Mr. Gasper contended on the authority of the cases of Kamruddin Dai v. Sonatun Mandal(1) and In the matter of the petition of Ram Das Maghi(2), that he was entitled to have the conviction and sentence set aside and the case remanded to the Sessions Judge for a rehearing of the appeal.

JUDGMENT.

In this case we have been required on revision to consider whether the judgment of the Sessions Judge of Rungpur on appeal is a judgment within the terms of s. 367 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, or whether it is not so defective in substance as to demand a retrial of that appeal. The judgment runs as follows :—(Their Lordships here read the judgment and continued).

We have been referred by the learned counsel who appears for the petitioners to the judgments of two Division Benches of this Court in Kamruddin Dai v. Sonatun Mandal (1) and In the matter of the petition of Ram Das Maghi (2), which followed the first-mentioned decision.

The reports of those two cases, which set out the judgments delivered, do not give in what respects the learned Judges held that the judgments of the Criminal Appellate Courts then before them were not judgments within the terms of s. 367. We observe, however, that in neither of those cases did the Courts of appeal in their final orders purporting to be their judgments [357] state any of the points for determination, or expressly find on the evidence that the appellants had committed the particular offence, or the several acts which might constitute that offence, for which they were sentenced. We take it, therefore, that the ground upon which the judgments in the cases cited to us really proceeded was the omission of such a finding. We are not inclined, in the absence of any authority, to hold that merely because the form of a judgment does not exactly comply with all the requirements of s. 367, it is not a valid judgment. It seems to us that this is the object of the Legislature as expressed in s. 537, in which it is provided that "no sentence or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered on appeal or revision on account of any error, omission or irregularity in the judgment * * * * during trial, unless such error, omission, or irregularity has occasioned a failure of justice." The omission must be substantial. We would refer to the judgment of White, J., in Protab Chunder Mukerjee v. Empress (3), and also to the cases of Kheraj Mullah v. Janab Mullah (4), and In the matter of the petition of Goomance (5), also to In re Shivappa v. Shidlingappa (6), in which the functions of a Court of Criminal Appeal are described. The judgment of the appellate Court shows that the Sessions Judge appreciated the points which the prosecution had to establish, and that he had clearly in view the point for determination, viz., the credibility of the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution, and he expressed his opinion on that point. That evidence as set out in the judgment of the Magistrate established the particular offence of which the appellants had been convicted. It is not contended, nor does it otherwise appear that any other point was raised at the hearing of the appeal or submitted to him for determination. Under such circumstances we think there is no sufficient reason for us to interfere as a Court of revision.

The rule is accordingly discharged.

[358] CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

*Before Mr. Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Rampini.THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KRISHNA GOBINDA DAS AND OTHERS.
[25th August, 1892.]Refusal to sign a receipt for summons - Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1892), ss. 69, 71 - Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 154 - Penal Code (Act XIV of 1860), ss. 173, 180.

A mere refusal to sign a receipt for a summons is not an offence under s. 173 or s. 180 of the Penal Code.

THIS was a reference from the Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, the facts of which were as follows:—

At the instance of one Chandra Kanta Chakrabatti, a summons was issued to Krishna Gobinda Das, calling upon him to show cause why he should not be required to furnish security for keeping the peace. The summons was made over for service to a constable. That officer reported that he delivered a duplicate of the summons to Krishna Gobinda Das, who refused to sign a receipt therefor on the back of the other duplicate. On this report the Magistrate of the district, Mr. Phillips, directed the prosecution of Krishna Gobinda Das under s. 180, Penal Code. Subsequently, however, the Magistrate directed that the prosecution should be under s. 173 of the Penal Code, read with s. 69 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Deputy Magistrate of Netrokona, who tried the case, finding that the accused, who had received a copy of the summons, had refused to sign a receipt for the same, and being of opinion that ss. 173 and 180, Penal Code, were applicable to the case, on the 16th May 1892 convicted the accused under those sections, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 25, and in default to suffer two weeks' simple imprisonment.

On the case being taken before the Sessions Judge, he referred the matter to the High Court under the provisions of s. 438 [359] of the Criminal Procedure Code, being of opinion that the order of the 16th May was illegal. The Sessions Judge in referring the case pointed out that under the old law as contained in s. 154 of Act X of 1872, which made no provision for substituted service in case of refusal to sign a receipt for a summons, it had been held in In the matter of Bhoobuneshwar Dutt (1), and Reg. v. Kalya bin Fakir (2) that the refusal to sign a receipt for a summons was not an offence under s. 173 of the Penal Code; that the present law, ss. 69 and 71 of Act X of 1882, allowed the serving officer, where there was a refusal to sign the receipt, to affix a duplicate of the summons to some conspicuous part of the residence of the person it was desired to serve; and he expressed his opinion that this additional provision in the new law made it still more clear that the refusal to sign the receipt was not intended to amount to preventing service of the summons, under s. 173 of the Penal Code. As to s. 180, he held it was clearly inapplicable, as no statement had been made by the accused. The Judge was therefore, of opinion that no offence had been committed under either of those

[360] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Rampini.

SURYA NARAIN SINGH (Plaintiff) v. JOGENDRA NARAIN ROY CHOWDHURY AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*}
[25th August, 1892.]

Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882), s. 86—Interest—Interest at rate stated in bond—Discretion of the Court—Penalty—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 209.

The terms of s. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act, exclude the discretion conferred on the Court by s. 209 of the Civil Procedure Code, in cases coming under the Transfer of Property Act.

Mangniram Marwari v. Dhowtal Roy (1) distinguished. Mangniram Marwari v. Rajpati Kceri (2) approved.

Section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act, binds the Court to give a decree at the rate of interest provided by the mortgage if it be a rate to which no valid legal objection can be taken; that interest must be so computed down to the day fixed by the Court, according to the terms of the 2nd paragraph of the section, that is, the day being one within six months from declaring in Court the amount due. The amount to be declared due is the amount due for principal and interest on the mortgage, including interest at the rate provided by the mortgage-deed up to the day so fixed; it is the same whether it be ascertained on an account being taken by the order of the Court or be ascertained by the Court itself.

Where a mortgage-deed stipulated for payment of half-yearly instalments of interest; and in case of default in such payments, provided for compound interest. Held, that such a provision was not in the nature of a penalty, and there being no question of fraud or oppression, improper dealing, exorbitant amount, dealing with an ignorant person or any such consideration, the stipulation as to interest must be enforced.

THIS suit was brought to recover the sum of Rs. 60,000 due as principal and Rs. 69,970-3 as interest on a mortgage-bond, dated the 19th Pous 1289, corresponding with the 2nd January 1883 praying for the sale of the mortgaged properties, and, in default of [361] their proving insufficient, for a personal decree against the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

The bond declared that the principal sum should fall due on the 9th Jaistha 1295, corresponding with the 21st May 1888, and contained a covenant relating to interest, and, in default, of compound interest, which ran as follows :—

"And that we shall pay off the amount of interest that may be due from the date hereof to the 8th Jaistha 1290 on the day following, that is, on the 9th Jaistha, and that we shall thereafter continue to pay interest in two instalments every year, that is, the first instalment of interest on the 9th Argrahayan, and the 2nd instalment on the 9th Jaistha, and that, for the purpose of calculation of interest, a month shall be considered equal to 30 days and a year to 360 days, and that if interest be not paid in accordance with the aforesaid covenants, then at the expiration of the date of payment the interest shall be considered as principal money, and we shall pay interest thereon at the rate aforesaid, that is, we shall pay compound interest. If interest be not paid in accordance with the covenants, then you will be at liberty to realize the amount of interest due by bringing a suit therefor in Court without waiting till the end of the period mentioned in this bond for the payment of the principal money, but you will not be bound to realize the amount by the institution of a suit, you will have the option of waiting till the period fixed for payment, and we do further promise that, even after the expiration of the period mentioned in the bond, we shall pay interest at the rate of 1 per cent. as aforesaid, and on no account shall the rate of interest be reduced by the Court."

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 admitted the bond, but contended that as the stipulation regarding the payment of compound interest was in the nature of a penalty, it should not be allowed, and that as on the day of the execution of the deed the plaintiff improperly received the sum of Rs. 1,400 from them, it should be deducted from the mortgage-debt.

The defendant No. 3 did not file any written statement, and the defendants Nos. 4 to 7, the second mortgagees, did not appear.

The Subordinate Judge found that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and the husband of the defendant No. 3 had executed the mortgage-deed under a legal necessity, and that they had, of their own accord paid Rs. 1,400 to the plaintiff. He gave a decree for the sum of Rs. 1,29,970-3, with interest on the principal sum of Rs. 60,000 at the mortgage rate of 1 per cent. per mensem during the pendency of the suit up to the date of the decree, and [362] allowed interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date of the decree until realization within six months on the aggregate sum of Rs. 1,42,223-0-9.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 filed cross objections.

Babu Taraknath Palit, for the appellant.

Dr. Rashbehari Ghose, for the respondents.

The arguments sufficiently appear from the judgment of the Court (PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ.) which was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit upon a mortgage. The appellant is the mortgagee who, in the lower Court, obtained a decree. The chief question in the appeal before us is as to the amount awarded by the decree in respect of interest on the mortgage-debt. The mortgage deed is dated the 19th Pous 1289; the amount of the mortgage loan is Rs. 60,000; the date fixed for the repayment of the mortgage money is the 9th Jaistha 1295, and the rate of interest stipulated for is 1 per cent. per mensem, with a provision for compound interest in case of default in the payment of interest, as provided by the deed.

The provision relating to the payment of the interest, or, in default, of compound interest, is as follows :—(After reading the portion of the bond set out, 20 C. p. 361, their Lordships continued):—The amount claimed by the plaintiff as due at the date of the institution of the suit for principal and interest after allowing for certain payments made, was Rs. 1,29,973-3, and for this sum the plaintiff had a decree from the lower Court. But the decree allowed to the plaintiff interest on the principal debt only at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem (the mortgage rate) during the pendency of the suit, that is, from December 11th, 1889, to April 4th, 1891, the date on which the decree was made, and allowed only the Court rate of interest, that is, 6 per cent. from the date of the decree until realization within six months from the decree upon the aggregate sum of Rs. 1,42,223-0-9 (including interest and costs) decreed.

The appellant contends that he is entitled to interest at the mortgage rate on the whole amount due on the mortgage [363] from the institution of the suit until the expiration of the period, six months, fixed for payment under the decree, and thereafter at the Court rate until payment. The respondents who have filed cross objections, contend that compound interest should not be allowed; that, though by the terms of the deed, compound interest is stipulated for, the Court will relieve against compound interest when the agreement for it is made at the time of the mortgage, although not if made by special agreement at the time when interest has become due. It is further contended that the appellant ought not to succeed, as the Court, in making the provision for interest contained in the decree, acted in the exercise of the discretion under s. 209 of the Civil Procedure Code, which it possessed under that section in suits on mortgages as well as in other suits (see the Full Bench case of Mangni-ram Marwari v. Dhowtal Roy (1), and that this Court will not interfere where the discretion vested in the original Court has been duly and judicially exercised.

For the appellants on this latter point it was contended that the suit in the Full Bench case was not brought under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act; that the present suit is governed by the provisions of that Act; and that by s. 86 of that Act the Court is bound to allow interest at the mortgage rate down to the date to be fixed by the Court under that section for the payment of the money due under the mortgage.

We shall deal with this latter contention first. We think it ought to prevail. In the Full Bench case cited the suit was brought in accordance with the old procedure, before the Transfer of Property Act was passed, and the parties were still content with the case being dealt with on that footing. But it seems to have been the opinion of the Chief Justice that, had the Transfer of Property Act applied, the rate of interest would not have been within the discretion of the Court.

We think that s. 86 binds the Court to give a decree at the rate of interest provided by the mortgage, if it be a rate to which no valid legal objection can be taken; that interest must be so computed down to the day fixed by the Court, according [364] to the terms of the 2nd paragraph of the section, that is, the day being one within six months for declaring in Court the amount due. The amount to be declared due is the amount due for principal and interest on the mortgage, including interest at the rate provided by the mortgage-deed up to the day so fixed; it is the same whether it be ascertained on an account being taken by the order of the Court, or be ascertained by the Court itself; we say this with reference to the concluding words of the first paragraph "or declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree," the amount so due is the amount which will be due "on the day next hereinafter referred to," that is, the day to be fixed within the six months, as provided in the next paragraph, and that amount may be declared at the date of the decree, if the Court does not think it necessary to order an account.

We think the terms of this section exclude the discretion conferred on the Court by s. 209, Civil Procedure Code, in cases coming under the Transfer of Property Act.

Upon the question raised by the respondent, whether compound interest should be allowed, we see no reason to entertain any doubt.

The mortgage was entered into with every circumstance of deliberation that can be required to give the provisions of the instrument their full effect, as embodying an agreement perfectly understood, and freely entered into. Such a contract as to interest as the present must, we think, be held valid where there is no question of fraud or oppression, improper dealing, exorbitant amount, dealing with an ignorant person, or the like considerations, but there is nothing of the sort in the case. Mainland v. Upjohn (1) was referred to for the respondents on this question, certain observations in the judgment were cited, in which the rules prevailing before the abolition of the usury laws were referred to. But the case itself appears to us to be an authority for the appellant, so far as it is applicable, inasmuch as it affirmed the propriety in a redemption action of the deduction of certain sums deducted by the mortgagee at the time of making the advances, they being made as part of the mortgage contract in [365] pursuance of a deliberate bargain, and without any improper pressure, and the parties being completely on equal terms.

We think this contention must fail, and that the lower Court was right in holding that compound interest ought to be allowed. As to the construction of the provisions in the mortgage-deed relating to the date from which interest shall be added to principal in case of default, that is, that compound interest shall be payable, we think that the deed provides that this provision shall take effect in default of payment of the six monthly instalments, and from the date of such default, and that this provision is not in the nature of a penalty.

We do not think that any inference can be drawn to negative the intention that compound interest shall become payable in case of default from the provision later in the deed, that payments shall in the first instance be appropriated to the payments of interest, and as to any surplus, in satisfaction of principal. That provision is no doubt properly appropriate to an instrument providing for simple interest; but we do not think any inference which could be drawn from that circumstance could be held to be capable of controlling the perfectly explicit agreement as to compound interest, contained in the earlier part of the deed.

As to the claim made by the respondents for a deduction of Rs. 1,400 with interest from the amount of the debt, this was referred to before us, but nothing was, or, indeed, could be, said to support the contention that the lower Court was wrong in its conclusion as to this matter. The agreement as to this sum was deliberately made and acted on by the respondents, and cannot, in the complete absence of anything to show pressure or unfair dealing, be now challenged by them.

We allow the appeal and modify the decree, by directing that the account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage at compound interest as therein provided, and for his costs of suit six months from the date of the decree of this Court, and that interest shall run upon the amount so found due at 6 per cent. from that date until realization.

If the parties desire to speak the minutes of the decree before it is signed, we shall hear them.

The judgment of the Court (MACPHERSON and BANERJEE JJ.), in which the facts are sufficiently stated was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiff is the mortgagee of properties mortgaged by Jugal Pershad Singh on the 23rd of January 1884 to secure a loan of Rs. 60,000, bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. The bond stipulates that the interest should be paid at the end of every period of six months; that on the expiry of every such period the unpaid interest should be added to the principal, and should carry interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem; and that interest at the same rate should be charged on the unpaid interest of the interest, and similarly added to the principal.

On the 28th of January of the same year Jugal Persad gave a ticca lease of the mortgaged properties to Janki Singh for a term of seven years at an annual rent of Rs. 25,500. Out of this sum Janki Singh was to pay the interest on the loan, amounting to Rs. 6,000 a year, according to the terms of the bond.

On the same date Janki executed an ikrarnama binding himself to the plaintiff to pay the interest and compound interest as conditioned in the bond, the terms of which were set out in the ikrarnama. This suit is brought against Mussumat Rajpati Koeri, the widow of Jugal Kishore and against Janki and his sons, to recover the principal Rs. 60,000 and interest Rs. 29,187-9-0, according to the terms of the mortgage-bond, by the sale of the mortgaged properties. The plaintiff also asked for a decree that Jugal's estate was liable for the principal, and that his estate and Janki and his sons were jointly and severally liable for the interest.

The Subordinate Judge held that the principal and interest were charged on the mortgaged properties; that Jugal's estate was liable for the principal plus interest from date of suit to date of payment which he allowed at [367] the rate of 6 per cent. per annum; and that Janki and his sons were liable for the interest, Rs. 29,187-9, plus interest from date of suit to date of payment, which he allowed at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum. He accordingly made a decree, which is very badly drawn, but which we understand to mean that, if the whole amount decreed is not paid within three months, the mortgaged properties are to be sold, and that Jugal's estate is to be liable for any portion of the principal, and Janki is to be liable for any portion of the interest which remains due after the sale of the mortgaged properties. But there is no direction as to how the balance is to be apportioned to principal and to interest.

Mussumat Rajpati Koeri and the plaintiff both appealed against this decree. For the former it is contended that the lease and ikrarnama created a new contract, which superseded the mortgage contract as to the payment of the interest, and that the effect of those instruments is to make the mortgagor simply a surety for the payment of the interest by Janki, and that the interest ceased to be a charge on the mortgaged properties. In support of this contention Dr. Rash Behari Ghose cited Oakley v. Pasheller (1) and Wilson v. Lloyd (2). If the defendant is a surety, it is said that he is discharged under the provisions of s. 139 of the Contract Act, as his remedy against the principal debtor Janki, is impaired by the laches of the plaintiff, who took no timely measures to recover the interest, and consequently the defendant's right to sue Janki for the rent, which ought to have been paid to the plaintiff, is now barred. Under any circumstances, it is said, the plaintiff must proceed in the first instance against the principal debtor, as it is only on his default that the surety is liable.

A further contention is that a mortgagor is not bound by an agreement made at the time of the mortgage to pay compound interest or to pay interest on interest at a higher rate than is payable on the principal sum; that the conditions as to interest are in the nature of a penalty; and that, even if not so viewed, the Court on principles of equity should not enforce them.

As regards the first question, the cases cited by the learned pleader are not, we think, in point, the facts being wholly different. Here the three instruments really form one transaction. The ikrarnama and lease were executed within a few days of the mortgage-deed, they were all registered on the same date, and the arrangement, whatever it amounted to, was undoubtedly effected with the knowledge and consent of all the parties. Nothing has since occurred to alter the position of any of them, and we must look to the three deeds to see what that position was: It seems to us impossible to hold that the plaintiff abandoned his lien on the mortgaged properties for the interest of the mortgage money, or that the liability of the mortgagor for the whole mortgage-debt was in any way affected. The 3rd, 4th, and 5th clauses of the ikrarnama clearly indicate the intention that [368] the liability to which he was made subject by the mortgage-deed should continue. The ikrarnama was in fact given as a collateral security; it added to, but did not derogate from, the powers which the mortgagee had under the mortgage-deed. Looking also at the nature of the transaction, it is in the highest degree improbable that the mortgagee would abandon the lien which the mortgage-deed gave him in respect of the interest, or that he would relieve the mortgagor from his liability as a principal. The circumstances which led to the lease being given are not disclosed in the evidence, but the object apparently was to secure the punctual payment of the interest, and so protect the property. The reason for the failure to pay it is a matter to be determined between Janki Singh and the heirs of Jugal Pershad. The Subordinate Judge rightly refused to enquire into this.

The contentions based on the supposition that the mortgagor was merely a surety in respect of the interest due under the mortgage-deed necessarily fail when it is found that he did not occupy that position. But we may say that there is nothing in the law which prevents a creditor from proceeding simultaneously against the principal and the surety, or which compels him to exhaust his remedy against the principal before suing the surety, and that the omission to sue the principal when the opportunity arises is not equivalent to giving him an extension of time.

As regards the interest which it was agreed to pay, it is clear that no sum was named as the amount to be paid in the event of the breach of the contract to pay, and the amount would vary according to the time for which payment was withheld. Section 74 of the Contract Act does not therefore apply to the case. Nor has any case for equitable relief been established. The parties were at arm's length, each knew perfectly well what he was doing, and the contract was deliberately made with full knowledge of what would follow, and of what it was intended should follow, if the interest was not punctually paid. It is not shown that the mortgagor was in such dire necessity that he was compelled to accept these terms, or, that any undue advantage was taken of his position. Moreover, the interest payable on the money advanced was certainly not excessive; it was probably lower than the rate usually charged, and if it had been paid, as it might and ought to have been paid, there would have been no ground for complaint.

There is no reason why the contract should not be enforced according to the intention of the parties.

Some cases have been cited to show that the Courts of Equity in England, in dealing with mortgage securities, would treat as invalid the conditions as to interest if made at the time of the original contract, on the ground that they were oppressive and tended to usury, or that they clogged the redemption. We think it unnecessary to refer to those cases [369] or to the principle on which they proceeded, as it has not been shown that that principle has been followed in any case in this country in which no special ground for relief has been established, and there is no law which makes the conditions invalid. It is questionable also whether the later decisions of the English Courts would support the contention (see Clarkson v. Henderson (1)).

The appeal of the defendant Rajpati Koeri fails therefore on all points.

In the plaintiff's appeal only one point is raised, and that is that the Court should have allowed interest at the rate stipulated in the bond from the date of suit up to the time allowed for redemption, the interest which has been allowed from the date of suit being 6 per cent. on the principal sum and 3 per cent. on the interest. The contention is we think valid, as s. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act directs that the decree shall order an account to be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage up to the day on which the mortgagor may redeem.

The provisions of ss. 86, 88 of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply to the case of Mangniram v. Dhowtal Roy (2) decided by the Full Bench of this Court.

The appellant only asks for such interest up to the date for redemption as fixed by the lower Court, viz., the 10th July 1889, and it will therefore be calculated up to that date, according to the terms of the bond.

It was argued for Janki Singh that the provisions of ss. 86, 88 of the Transfer of Property Act do not apply to him, as his liability did not arise under the mortgage-bond, and that the Court had therefore full discretion, under s. 209 of the Civil Procedure Code to fix the rate of interest from the date of the suit. But the fact that he under another instrument, made himself liable for the interest does not prevent the operation of those sections. The interest is due on the mortgage according to the terms of the deed. The mortgagor continued liable jointly with him and he (Janki) undertook to pay the interest due on the mortgage.

The plaintiff by way of cross-appeal further objects to the decree, in so far as it exempts Jugal Pershad Singh's estate from liability for the interest which may remain due after the sale of the mortgaged properties. This objection should have been taken in his appeal against the decree, but we allowed him to raise it, and for the reasons which we have already given we think Jugal Pershad's estate is clearly liable.

There will be a decree to the following effect :—

The interest on the principal sum of Rs. 60,000, and on the interest Rs. 29,187-9 (plus the additional interest) will be calculated at the rates specified in the mortgage-bond from the date of the suit up to the 10th of July 1889. There will be a decree for the entire sum viz., Rs. 60,000 [370] principal, interest as above determined, and costs, for the satisfaction of which the mortgaged properties (except lot 21) or such portion of them as it may be necessary to sell be sold. The sale proceeds will be appropriated in the first instance in satisfaction of the principal sum of Rs. 60,000 and of the costs, and the surplus (if any) in satisfaction of the interest. For any portion of the principal Rs. 60,000, which remains due after the sale of the mortgaged properties, there will be a decree against Rajpati Koeri as representative of her deceased husband Jugal Pershad Singh, to be satisfied out of any properties of the latter which have come into her possession. For any portions of the interest which may remain due after the sale of the mortgaged properties, there will be a joint decree against Rajpati Koeri, as representative of her deceased husband to be satisfied in the manner above stated, and against Janki Singh.

The plaintiff will get his costs in this Court and in the lower Court, and the appeal of the defendant Mussumat Rajpati Koeri is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) s. 248—Notice of execution—Condition precedent—Execution of decree against legal representative.

The issuing of the notice required by s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a condition precedent to the execution of a decree against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor.

[R., 11 C.L.J. 489 (496) = 14 C.W.N. 560 (566) = 5 Ind. Cas. 390.]

THE facts of this case were that Ghaneshyam Nusker, the husband of the plaintiff, held a tenure standing in the name of Muktaram Sen, and consisting of 8½ bighas of land, at a rental of Rs. 14 per annum, under defendant No. 1 (Bibi Jarao Koeri) and one Tarini Churn Bose deceased, each of whom was entitled to an eight-anna share of the rent; that although no arrears of rent of the tenure were due, defendant No. 2, in collusion with defendants Nos. 10 and 11, who were the agents of defendant No. 1, induced defendant No. 1 to bring a suit for rent against [371] Ghaneshyam; that a decree alleged by the plaintiff to be fraudulent and collusive was obtained in that rent suit on 14th Joisto 1294 (27th May 1887), about which time Ghaneshyam died; that as the heir and legal representative of Ghaneshyam, the plaintiff was in possession of the tenure up to 25th Baisakro 1295 (9th September 1888); that in execution of the decree, in which the plaintiff was not substituted as a party, about 17 bighas of land, including the land in suit, were attached and sold and purchased for Rs. 175 by defendant No. 2, on the 23rd April 1888; and that defendant No. 2 obtained khas possession on 9th September 1888.

The plaintiff, who alleged that she first became aware of the collusive suit, decree, and sale on 13th September 1888, prayed that the decree be set aside as fraudulent, or declared ineffectual as against her; that the sale be set aside as fraudulent and illegal; and that her title to the lands in suit be declared and khas possession be given to her.

Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 10 and 11 put in appearance. They contended that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, and that the suit was bad for misjoinder; and they denied collusion, and that the rent decree and the sale were fraudulent and illegal. Defendant No. 2 also contended that he was a bona fide purchaser for value.

The Munsif found that although the decree was passed against Ghaneshyam and others, and Ghaneshyam's name should have been mentioned in the petition for execution under cl. (b) s. 235 of the Civil Procedure Code, the name of his widow, the plaintiff, was introduced as a party; that no notice under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code was issued to enforce the decree against the legal representative of Ghaneshyam, nor was any application made to substitute Gunamoni in the place of Ghaneshyam, and that without such notice the decree-holder caused the tenure of Ghaneshyam to be attached and sold. He also found that defendant No. 2 was not a bona fide purchaser for value. He came to the conclusion that defendant No. 1 had obtained his decree fraudulently, and that the subsequent proceedings up to the sale were also fraudulent, irregular, and illegal, and upon the authority of Ramessuree Dassee v. Doorgadass Chatterji (1) were void.

[372] The Munsif accordingly set aside the decree and sale, and made a decree declaring the plaintiff's right to the lands in suit and to possession.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge upheld the findings of the Munsif, but differed from him in finding that defendant No. 2 was a bona fide purchaser for value. With regard to the question whether, being a bona fide purchaser, his purchase should be set aside, although the decree in execution of which the sale was held had been set aside, the Subordinate Judge referred to, the following cases:—

Jan Ali v. Jan Ali Chowdhry (2), Tuffazal Hossein Khan v. Raghunath Prasad (3), Reva Mahton v. Ram Kishen Sing (4), and Vasappa v. Dundaya (5), and after pointing out that the real distinction in these cases was one affecting the jurisdiction of the Court to order the sale, he proceeded—

"The point to be determined, therefore, is whether the Court had jurisdiction to order the sale. It has already been noticed that the notice under s. 248 was not issued, and according to the decision quoted by the Munsif, and also the case of Imanunnessa Bibi v. Liakat Husain (6), the effect of the omission is to invalidate the subsequent proceedings and to take away the power of the Court to order the sale. In this view of the case, I am bound to hold that the auction purchaser, although he had purchased bona fide, has acquired no title, and that the judgment of the Munsif is correct."

The Subordinate Judge accordingly dismissed the appeal.

Defendant No. 2 appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Boido Nath Dutt, for the appellant.

Baboo Sarada Prosunno Roy, for the respondent.

The Court (NORRIS and BEVERLEY, JJ.) delivered the following judgments:—

JUDGMENTS.

NORRIS, J.—The question which we have to decide in this case is whether the failure of the Court to issue notice to the representative of the deceased judgment-debtor is an irregularity only, or is [373] such an illegality as vitiates a sale which has taken place without such notice having been served. We have been referred by the learned pleader for the appellant to a considerable number of cases dwelling upon the distinction between an irregularity and an illegality. Indeed, I suppose I may fairly say all the cases have been brought to our notice. I confess that there appears to me to be an apparent contradiction between some of them. None of them is on all fours with this case: not one is entirely in point.

I am of opinion that the issuing of the notice required by s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a condition precedent to the execution of the decree against the representative of the deceased judgment-debtor. I agree with the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, and I think this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

BEVERLEY, J.—I concur with my learned colleague in dismissing this appeal. Having regard to the provisions of ss. 248, 249 and 250 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it seems to me clear that until notice is issued on the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, the Court has no jurisdiction to issue its warrant for the execution of the decree.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Lords Hobhouse, Macnaghten and Shand, and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

GREENDER CHUNDER GHOSE (Plaintiff) v. TROYLUCKHO
NATH GOSE AND OTHERS (Defendants).
[10th & 11th November, 1892.]

Deed, Construction of—Construction of deeds releasing future and contingent interests—Agreement excluding a possible question between the parties as to the effect of words in a will, under which they took their rights.

Three brothers, under their father's will, were entitled, each on attaining full age, to the testator's residuary estate in equal shares. When all had attained full age, two having been minors at the testator's death, they effected a separation of their interests derived from the will, and [374] executed to one another instruments of compromise and partition containing words relating to possible claims which they gave up.

One of the two younger brothers afterwards died, having taken, under the will of the other younger one, all the estate of the latter, who had died without issue before him. The eldest then attempted to raise the question whether, on the one hand, the brothers had taken under their father's will absolute interests, or on the other, interests that were divested and went over to a surviving brother in the event of death without issue. As to this the Courts below differed, but the appellate Court decided, and on this appeal the decision was affirmed, that the above instruments relinquished future demands, this claim included, relating to the brothers' estates under their father's will.^a APPEAL from a decree (18th March 1889) of the Appellate High Court reversing a decree (3rd September 1888) of the High Court in its original jurisdiction.

The plaintiff, now appellant, was the eldest son of Anundo Narain Ghose, who died in July 1850, having by his will, which was in the vernacular, and dated 23rd February 1850, left his residuary estate to his three sons on their attaining majority. This the eldest had already attained at his father's death. The two younger were of full age before 1860, and before the execution of the instruments giving rise to the principal question on which the decision of this appeal turned.

The defendants respondents, Troyluckho Nath and Omer Nath, were the sons, and the defendant respondent, Kbettermoni, was the widow, of Monender Nath, the second son of the testator, who died in 1884 ; the third son, Nogender Nath, died in 1878, having by his will bequeathed all his estate to Monender his brother, and leaving no issue.

The claim of the eldest brother, Greender Chunder, related to a clause in the will of his father Anundo Narain, which was as follows:—

"If previous to the minor sons attaining their age of discretion, or after having attained their majority either of them should, without leaving a son or adopted son, die issueless, in such case any sons then in existence shall take the share of that son, dividing the same in equal portions."

After litigation commencing in 1851, terms of settlement of disputes and for a partition were agreed to. On this a decree [375] was made in a suit, to which the brothers were parties, on the 10th February 1860. A commission of partition was issued by the Supreme Court, possession was given of rightful shares, and deeds, of which the principal one was dated 18th May 1861, were executed. This deed of 1861 was a release of the present plaintiff's one-third share in the immoveable property allotted to Nogender; and it contained the words of which the construction was the main question now raised. They were as follows, in the operative part:—

"They, the said Greender Chunder and Monender do, and each of them doth, by these presents, grant, bargain, sell, alien and release, and by way of conveyance only and not by way of warranty of title, do and each of them doth, also grant and confirm unto the said Nogender, his heirs, representatives, and assigns," (here the parcels) "and all the estate, right, title, interest, use, trust property, possession, possibility, claim and demand whatsoever, both at law and in equity of them &c."

There were other deeds dealing with particular properties.

The case made by the plaintiff was that upon the death of Nogender one-half of his share under the will of Anundo Narain, his father, vested in his eldest brother, Greender Chunder, under the gift over in the will which was to be understood as the effect of the clause above quoted; and that the plaintiff was entitled to possession as against the defendants of one-half of the property allotted to Nogender upon partition, as representing his one-third share, one-half of a one-third share of the property remaining undivided.

The defence was, besides other grounds, that the gift over applied only to the death of Nogender during his own minority, or at any rate during the minority of Monender: also, that the effect of the conveyance and release, on the partition of 1861, had been to convey to Nogender an estate indefeasible by any words of a gift over in the will, however construed, and that thus the claim failed as against the defendants.

Issues raising these points having been fixed, the judgment of the first Court was in favour of the plaintiff.

On an appeal the High Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and WILSON, J.) reversed that judgment. In brief, their decision, delivered by WILSON, J., was that though the construction, as to the gift over [376] in the will of 1850, that it was to take effect upon the death of either of the then minor sons of the testator at any time without issue, was a construction that the words, had they stood alone, would bear; yet, looking at the whole scope of the will and the words together, the Judges inclined to the opinion that the correct meaning of the clause and the intention of the testator was that the attainment of full age by the then minor sons, which was fixed as the period of distribution, was the limit of the time within which the event was to happen which would effect the defeasance: that the gift over, in other words, was not to take effect unless the death took place before the son dying without issue should have attained his majority. But the Judges did not consider it necessary to decide what construction should be placed on this clause inasmuch as the view which they took of the deeds of 1861, executed upon the partition, rendered it unnecessary. They based their judgment, reversing the decision of the Court below, on this, that in their opinion an absolute and unqualified interest in the properties allotted and apportioned to Nogender had been by those instruments given and assured to him; that every possible claim of the kind now made had been renounced in favour of the brother through whom the defendants claimed; and that the plaintiff, having taken the benefit of the arrangement made in 1861, could not be allowed to derogate from his grant.

The plaintiff having preferred the present appeal.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C. Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. H. W. Cave appeared for the appellant.

Sir H. Davey, Q. C. and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondents.

For the appellant it was argued that the agreement and deeds of 1861 were not made with the intention of including any prospective settlement, of a kind that would be final, of the interests of the parties under the will of 1850. It was hardly then in contemplation to conclude all possible questions that might arise between the families of the three brothers. Rather, the deeds were executed to confirm the partition, which, as a partition settled all then existing rights. The agreement had reference only to the purposes and objects of the partition.

[377] The Counsel for the respondents were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was given by

LORD MACNAGHTEN :—There were two questions raised in this appeal. One depends upon the true construction of the will of Anundo Narain Ghose, the father of the appellant, Greender Chunder Ghose, and of his two younger brothers, who were minors at the date of the will and at the date of the death of the testator. The other depends upon the construction and effect of certain instruments made between the three brothers after the two younger had attained their majority. Unless both can be answered in accordance with the contention of the appellant, the appeal must fail. Their Lordships are of opinion that one at least of these questions must be answered in favour of the respondents.

Under the will of Anundo Narain the three brothers were entitled in equal shares to the residuary estate of the testator. The question on the will is :—Did the two younger brothers on attaining majority take an absolute interest, which they could deal with as they pleased, or did they take an interest liable to be divested or defeated in the event of death without issue, natural or adopted? Mr. Justice Trevelyan decided in favour of the latter view. The inclination of the opinion of the appellate Court was the other way, but the matter was not finally decided.

Their Lordships also will leave this question undetermined. They are not prepared at present to assent to the view which commended itself to Mr. Justice Wilson. But as they have not heard Counsel for the respondents, it would not be proper to express an opinion upon the point.

Assuming that Mr. Justice Trevelyan was right so far, their Lordships agree with the appellate Court that the instruments executed by the appellant on the occasion of the compromise and partition operated to pass every interest of every kind which the appellant had or could claim to have in the shares allotted to the younger brothers. So long as those instruments stand, it appears to their Lordships impossible for the appellant to contend with success that any interest, present, future, or contingent, was reserved to him.

[378] Their Lordships may add that there is nothing on the face of the deeds or in the previous agreement, or in the position of the parties, to suggest that this was not in accordance with the intention of every one concerned. They agree with Mr. Justice Wilson "that looking at the deeds" the object of the parties was once for all to dispose finally of the father's estate, and of all questions connected with the father's estate."

The parties were acting under legal advice. They were effecting a separation of interest derived under the will. It is very unlikely that an obvious provision of the will should have been overlooked. It is almost inconceivable that the younger brothers, who were in a position to dictate terms, would have consented to take their shares subject to an executory gift in favour of their elder brother, which, however remote and however inconsiderable at the time, would have had the effect of making it impossible for them during their lives to dispose of the property by sale or mortgage. Their Lordships therefore entirely concur in the judgment of the appellate Court.

There is one other point which perhaps ought to be mentioned. Their Lordships very much regret that, in order to assist them to determine these two simple questions, it should have been thought necessary to furnish them with a record at such enormous length. Nearly 300 pages are taken up by the schedules to the answer in the original suit, not one word of which in any circumstances could have any bearing on the questions before their Lordships. Their Lordships have more than once commented upon the bulk of records sent from India. They will consider whether some means cannot be devised to save litigants in future from this idle expense.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that this appeal ought to be dismissed, and the appellant must pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MUKUNDA LAL PAL CHOWDHRY AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v.
I. LEHURAUX AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[24th June, 1892.]

Partition—Right to Partition—Joint possession—Co-parceners—Suit by subordinate tenure-holder for partition against superior landlord.

Joint possession alone is not a sufficient ground for compelling a partition. In order that persons may be co-parceners and so have a right to partition, not only must they be in joint possession, but that joint possession must be founded on the same title.

A subordinate tenure-holder therefore has no right of partition as against his superior landlord.

Ridhi Nath Sandyal v. Iswar Chandra Saha (1) and Parbati Churn Deb v. Ain-ud-deen (2) referred to.

The plaintiffs were proprietors of a 12-anna share and Durtalukdars of the other 4 anna share, of taluk A, which consisted of a $7\frac{1}{2}$ annas share of so much of the lands of three villages D, B, and T, as appertained to an estate in the Collectorate No. 23. Estate No. 23 with three other estates represented fractional shares in three parganas comprising about 500 villages. No partition had been made of these parganas, but by private arrangement certain lands in a village had been assigned to one estate, and certain other lands to another, some lands being kept joint and common to all four estates. In estate No. 23 there was another permanent tenure, S, a taluk consisting of lands not only in the three villages D, B, and T, but in nine others: of this taluk a 2 anna share belonged to L, one of the zemindars of estate No. 23, and a $7\frac{1}{2}$ anna share of the remaining 14-anna share was held under the plaintiff. In a suit against L for partition of such of the lands of taluk A as appertained to estate No. 23, and were separate from the other estates, to which the other zemindars of estate No. 23 were made parties; Held assuming the plaintiffs were entitled to partition at all, that the suit would lie as regards the lands specified as belonging to estate No. 23 without reference to the lands held in common as belonging to all the four estates. *Hari Das Sanyal v. [380] THIS was a suit for partition. The plaintiffs alleged that within the jurisdiction of the Civil Court of the district of Tippera there were four distinct zamindaris, which respectively consisted of fractional shares in pargana Kudba, and which were respectively recorded as estates Nos. 23, 24, 25, and 26 on the tauzi of the Collectorate of Noakhali: that the whole of the estate No. 23, consisting of 4 annas $6\frac{1}{4}$ gundas share of the said pargana, was the property of Raja Harish Chandra Roy; that on the 12th of Joisto 1267 B. S. (24th May 1864) Raja Harish Chandra granted a mokurrari shekmi taluk of a $7\frac{1}{2}$ anna share in mauzas Deora, Bagmara and Talagao, appertaining to estate No. 23, to one Banga Chandra Das at an annual rent of Rs. 50; that Raja Harish Chandra subsequently granted a putni taluk of the entire estate to Alfred Courjon represented in this suit by his executor defendant No. 1; that Banga Chandra Das having been dispossessed, from his taluk by Alfred Courjon and Rani Joy Doorga, the widow of Raja Harish Chandra (defendant No. 2), sold a 4 annas share, and jointly with the purchaser instituted a suit against them for possession of the taluk (known as taluk Banga Chandra Das) which resulted in a decree confirming them in their respective shares; that at a sale in execution of a decree against Banga Chandra Das, the plaintiffs purchased his 12-anna share on 3rd Falgoon 1283 (13th February 1877), and obtained a dur-taluk of the remaining 4-anna share on the 13th Assar 1291 (28th September 1884), and as talukdars and dur-talukdars were in possession of the entire 16 annas of the taluk; that in consequence of the lands of the taluk being held jointly with other lands of the estate there were constant disputes between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and the plaintiffs were put to much inconvenience and experienced great difficulty in the management and enjoyment of their property. The plaintiff's therefore prayed for partition and possession of ask for the partition of other lands in which third parties are also interested. In the case of Padmamani Dasi v. Jagadamba Dasi (1) it was held that the [384] subject-matter of partition must be a matter of convenience. On this point we are inclined to agree with the learned pleader for the appellants that if the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for partition, such a decree might be made as regards the lands specified as belonging to estate No. 23 without reference to the lands that are held in common as belonging to all the four estates.

As regards the question whether the plaintiffs as permanent talukdar's are entitled to a partition as against their landlord, Dr. Rash Behary Ghose has cited as authorities upon the point the English cases of Hobson v. Sherwood (2) Heaton v. Dearden (3), and Baring v. Nash (4). We are of opinion, however, that this is not a matter in which English cases decided under a wholly different system of law can afford us very much assistance. The authorities relied on by the Subordinate Judge appears to be in point, and the facts in the case of Parbati Churn Deb v. Ain-ud-deen (5) appear to be very similar to those in the case before us.

The plaintiffs base their claim to partition upon their joint possession with the defendant No. 1 of the subject-matter of the suit. We take it, however, that joint possession alone is not a sufficient basis for such a claim. In order that persons may be co-parceners, and so have a right to partition, it seems to us that not only must they be in joint possession of the property, but that that joint possession must be founded on the same title. We are not aware of any Indian case in which a person holding a subordinate interest in land has been held to have a right of partition as against the superior holder. In the present case the plaintiffs pay their rent to defendant No. 1, who is the putnidar of the $7\frac{1}{2}$ -anna share in which in the taluk Banga Chandra Das; he is also the zemindar of a 1 anna share, and the putnidar or durputnidar of the other $7\frac{1}{2}$ annas. The nature of his possession is different from that of the plaintiffs; his possession is that of a subordinate tenure-holder. Such an interest does not carry with it in our opinion the right as against the superior landlord of compelling him to partition the lands in these three villages, so as to assign to the taluk Banga Chandra Das an exclusive interest in certain specific lands instead of a joint undivided interest in all the [385] lands in these villages which appertain to estate No. 23. Such a partition could only be carried out by means of a partition between the three shares of the zemindari, viz., $7\frac{1}{2}$ annas, $7\frac{1}{2}$ annas, and 1 anna; and it could not properly be carried out in respect of these three villages only, without taking into consideration the other villages comprised in the zemindari. Moreover, it is possible—and indeed it is in evidence—that there are other taluks in these villages that would be affected by such a partition, the holders of which have not been made parties to the suit.

For all these reasons we are of opinion that the decree of the lower Court is correct and that the plaintiffs' suit must fail.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Relinquishment of or omission to sue for portion of claim—Cause of action—Joint property, suits for exclusion from, and partition of—Co-sharers—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 43.

One co-sharer suing another for exclusion from joint property, and omitting to include in his claim a portion of the property of which he seeks possession, is not debarred by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure from suing to have the joint estate partitioned, including the portion omitted from the former suit, the causes of action in the two suits being different.

THE plaintiffs, Hakim Abdun Nasir and Mussamut Bibi Shobratun, his wife, sued for partition of a lakheraj mehal called Mansurpore, alleging that the former owners separated 6 bighas 2 cottahs from the lands of the entire mauza and made a hiba of the same in favour of one Buduruddin Hossein, the plaintiffs' ancestor, and then privately divided the remainder of the mehal into three patis according to their respective shares. The plaintiffs alleged that they were entitled to certain shares in each of these patis and also to a 12-anna share in the plot of 6 bighas [386] 2 cottahs, as heirs of Buduruddin, and that the defendant No. 1 was entitled to a 4-anna share in the same plot. The plaintiffs prayed for partition on the ground that the existing division into patis was not recognized by the Collector, and that the payment of cesses continued joint.

Mussamut Bibi Rasulan, defendant No. 1, alleged that after the death of Buduruddin, plaintiff No. 1, Hakim Abdun Nasir, brought a suit against her to have his right of inheritance declared in respect of a 12 annas share of the properties left by Buduruddin, from which he alleged defendant No. 1 had dispossessed him; that in a schedule attached to the plaint in that suit, all the properties belonging to Buduruddin's estate were set out, but that the plot of 6 bighas 2 cottahs was not therein mentioned or included. Bibi Rasulan therefore contended that plaintiff No. 1 had omitted to make a claim which he was entitled to make in the former suit with reference to this plot of land, and was debarred by the provisions of s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure from suing in respect of the 6 bighas 2 cottahs. No objection was raised on the part of the defendants as to the partition of each pati separately among its co-sharers, excluding the 6 bighas 2 cottahs above mentioned.

The lower Court held that the suit, so far as it related to the last mentioned plot, was barred under s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and gave a decree for the separate partition of the patis. From this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Moulvi Mohomed Yusuf and Moulvi Seraj-ul-Islam appeared for the appellants.

Baboo Saligram Singh and Baboo Surendro Nath Roy, appeared for the respondent, defendant No. 1.

20 C. 385.

The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and BEVERLEY, J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This suit was brought to partition property which had belonged to Buduruddin, who died on the 14th of June 1883.

A prior suit had been brought on the 17th of April 1884, by the plaintiff No. 1 against the first defendant to obtain joint possession of the property with her, and that suit was decreed [387] on the 24th of March 1884. In that suit a schedule of the property, joint possession of which was claimed by him, was filed by the plaintiff, and that schedule did not include, either expressly or by implication, a plot of 6 bighas and 2 cottahs of land which formed part of Buduruddin's estate, and which plot is the subject matter of this appeal.

The Subordinate Judge has decreed the plaintiffs' suit as to the whole of the property left by Buduruddin except the plot in question, and has dismissed the suit so far as it claims a share of that plot by partition, on the ground that, as the plaintiff No. 1 did not claim joint possession of it in the suit which he brought in April 1884, he cannot now include any portion of it in his claim for possession after partition by reason of the provisions of s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. In this view of the case we are unable to agree. Section 43 provides that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, and that if he omits a portion of his claim, i.e., of his claim in respect of that cause of action, he cannot afterwards sue for it. If a person is excluded from joint possession of joint property by his co-sharer, he has a cause of action against him for such exclusion, and every co-sharer has a right to bring an action against his co-sharer to have the joint estate partitioned, and to obtain possession of his separated share. The rights, to enforce which these actions may be brought, are separate and distinct, and the causes of action in the one case are not the same as in the other, though no doubt a part of the necessary evidence would be common to both suits. No case has been cited before us which goes as far as the Subordinate Judge has gone in this case.

We therefore decree this appeal, set aside the judgment of the lower Court, and remand the case to that Court in order that he may try the question whether the plot of land in question formed part of the estate of Buduruddin and passed to his heirs at his death. If he finds this issue in the affirmative, the plaintiffs would be entitled on the partition to the same share of this plot as of the rest of the property included in the estate. The costs of this appeal will be costs in this cause.

BALKISHEN DAS AND OTHERS (Decree-holders) v. BEDMATI KOER AND ANOTHER (Judgment-debtors).^{*} [26th August, 1892.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 179—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 232-248—Application for execution by transferee of decree—Benamidar.

The words "in accordance with law" in art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act mean in accordance with the law relating to execution of decrees.

Under s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court executing the decree after giving notice to the decree-holder and judgment-debtor and hearing their objections, if any, has an absolute discretion to allow or to refuse to allow execution to proceed at the instance of a person to whom a decree has been transferred by an assignment in writing. When, therefore, a decree is transferred (really or nominally) by assignment in writing, and the ostensible transferee executes the decree with the permission of the Court, the proceedings taken and the application on which they are based are in accordance with law as between such transferee and the judgment-debtor, although he may be merely a benamidar, and such proceedings and application if made in proper time are sufficient to keep the decree alive. Denonath Chuckerbutty v. Lallit Coomar Gangoprahya (1) and Gour Sundar Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhry (2) distinguished; Abdul Kureem v. Chukhun (3) referred to; Purna Chandra Roy v. Abhaya Chandra Roy (4) and Nadir Hussein v. Pearoo Thovildarinee (5), followed.

Under the circumstances application for execution by the transferee of decree was held to be not barred under art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

In January 1885 Peary Lall Das and others obtained a decree against Mussamat Dulari Koer on a mortgage bond for a sum of Rs. 16,603. On the 19th December 1887 one Bhokola Das applied, under s. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to execute the decree, claiming as a transferee under a written assignment from the decree-holders. On the 27th of January 1888, there [389] being no opposition, the name of Bhokola Das was substituted as decree-holder, and notices under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure were issued. On the 8th of March 1888 the execution was struck off, but was restored on the application of Bhokola Das on the 12th March 1888, and execution then proceeded. On the 16th May 1888 the mortgaged property was put up to sale, but was not sold, and subsequently the execution case was struck off on the 29th May 1888.

On the 24th November 1888 the Court executing the decree found, at the instance of Balkishen Das and others who had attached the decree, that Bhokola was merely the benamidar of Peary Lall Das and others, the original decree-holders. On the 29th of November 1890 Bhokola applied to execute the decree against persons who were alleged to be, but were not in fact, the legal representatives of Dulari Koer. On 31st January this application was admitted as a fresh application for execution, and notices were issued under cls. (a) and (b) of s. 248, Code of Civil Procedure. On the 31st of March 1891 the Court refused the application on the objection of the alleged representatives. On the same day Balkishen Das and others, representing that they had purchased the decree of Peary Lall Das and others, applied for time, so that the objections of the alleged representatives might be disposed of in their presence, but such application was refused on the ground that Balkishen Das and others were not parties to the proceedings.

On 21st July 1891 Balkishen Das and others formally applied, under s. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to execute the decree against the proper representatives of Bhokola, and put in a deed of assignment by Peary Lall Das and others and an agreement by Bhokola in which the latter disclaimed all interest in the decree.

The lower Court held that this application was barred under art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act. Against that decision Balkishen Das and others appealed to the High Court.

The appellants, who are the purchasers of a decree, contend the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that execution was time-barred under art. 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act.

[391] In January 1885 Peary Lall Dass and two others obtained the decree in question against Dulari Koer. The decree was obtained on a mortgage-bond for a sum of Rs. 16,603, and the amount now said to be due is something over Rs. 23,000. The execution proceedings have been taken in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur, which is the Court which passed the decree.

On the 19th December 1887 Bhokola Das applied, under s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code, to execute the decree, claiming as transferee under a written assignment from the decree-holders. The notices prescribed by that section were issued, and, no opposition being offered, the Subordinate Judge directed, on the 27th January 1888, that Bhokola's name should be substituted as decree-holder, and that the notices prescribed by s. 248 should issue. After service had been reported, the case was struck off for default on the 8th March, but was restored on Bhokola's application of the 12th March. Execution then proceeded, and on the 16th May 1888 the mortgaged property was put up to sale. There were, however, no bidders, and as no further steps were taken, the execution case was struck off on the 29th May 1888.

Shortly either before or after this—it is not clear which—the decree was attached in the Court of the District Judge by the appellants, who alleged that Bhokola was merely the benamidar of the decree-holders, and on the 24th November 1888, the Judge found this allegation to be true.

Nothing further was done till the 29th November 1890, when Bhokola again applied to execute the decree against persons who were alleged to be, but were in fact not, the legal representatives of Dulari Koer, then deceased. On the 31st January the application was admitted as a fresh application for execution, and notices issued under cls. (a) and (b) of s. 248. The alleged representatives came in, and on their objection that they were not the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor, the Subordinate Judge, on the 21st March 1891, refused the application. On the same day the appellants, representing that they had purchased the decree of Peary Das, applied for time, in order that the objections of the representatives might be disposed of in their presence, but the application was refused on the ground that they were not parties to the proceedings.

[392] On the 21st July 1891 the appellants formally applied under s. 232 to execute the decree against the proper representatives of Dulari Koer, and they put in the deed of assignment by Peary and an ikrarnama by Bhokola, in which he disclaimed all interest in the decree, and admitted that it had been only nominally transferred to him for the purposes of defeating the claim of the attaching creditors.

The Subordinate Judge has held, on the facts as above stated, that the last application is time-barred, an objection to that effect having been taken by the heirs who came in on notice under s. 248. He holds [citing Denonath Chuckerbutty v. Lalit Coomar Gangopadhya (1) and Gour Sundar Lahiri v. Hem Ohunder Chowdhry (2)] that the applications of Bhokola as benamidar of the decree-holders were not applications in accordance with law within the meaning of art. 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, and that putting them aside more than three years had elapsed from the date of the decree. He also holds that, even if the earlier applications were good, the application of the 19th November 1890 was bad, because it was made against persons who were not the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor, and that putting it aside more than three years had elapsed from the 29th May 1888, when the execution case was struck off.

The two cases cited are, we think, clearly distinguishable from the present case, on the ground that the applications there relied upon and which the Court had to consider were made by a benamidar whose position as transferee was not recognised, and who was not allowed by the Court in the discretion vested in it to execute the decree. In the first case the application was opposed by an attaching creditor, and the application was withdrawn without any order being made upon it; in the second the learned Judges, speaking of the applications, with which they were dealing, say that in none of those applications was any further step taken towards execution of the decree or any order made for substitution of the name of the assignee. It was held in each case that the applications were not in accordance with law within the meaning of art. 179, and, if we may say so, rightly, as the applicants without the permission of the Court could not represent the decree-holders and [393] had no status under s. 232. The decisions were, no doubt, based on a broader ground and professedly followed the earlier case of Abdul Kureem v. Chukhun(1) decided by Mitter and Tottenham, JJ. This case was the converse of the one before us. There the decree-holder transferred his decree to A in the name of B who applied for execution, and had his name substituted, but did nothing more. Sometime afterwards A as the real transferee applied for execution; the application was refused, but a subsequent application to the same effect was allowed. On B's admission that he was a benamidar, it was necessary, in order to avoid limitation, to bring in A's first application which had been refused, and the learned Judges held that it was within the purview of s. 232 and, therefore, in accordance with law, and they did so on the broad ground that a benamidar was not a transferee within the meaning of s. 232 and had no status at all under that section, even if the Court allowed him to execute the decree. But as nothing in that case turned on the application of B, it was unnecessary to consider the effect of that application, or of proceedings in execution taken under it with the sanction of the Court. All that was actually decided was that there being an admitted transfer of the decree to A or B, the application of A, the real and admitted transferee, was a good one. We think we need give to the decision no wider effect. The question whether an application for execution by the real transferee of a decree, where the transfer is made benami and the application is not allowed, will keep the decree alive, and whether the transferee is entitled to execute the decree when objection is taken to his right to do so and the Court finds that he is a mere benamidar, is quite distinct from the question whether an application for execution by an alleged transferee of a decree who is allowed by the Court to carry on the execution, and who is afterwards admitted or proved to be a mere benamidar will keep a decree alive, and an answer to the former in favour of the real transferee, does not, in our opinion, necessarily involve a negative answer to the latter. The former question was the only one which the Court had to consider in the case of Abdul Kureem v. Chukhun, whereas in the present case we have to deal only with the latter.

[394] It was held in Purna Chandra Roy v. Abhaya Chandra Roy (2) that a benamidar could execute a decree, and this case goes very much further than we need go. The only case we can find that deals directly with the question now before us is the case of Nadir Hossein v. Pearoo Thovildarinee (3). In that case it was held that the proceedings taken by a benamidar who was executing the decree would keep the decree alive. The facts of the case as regards the execution were very similar to the facts of this case. The decree-holder had nominally transferred the decree to another person in order to preserve it from the decree-holders against himself. The benamidar took some proceedings in execution, although his application to execute was subsequently disallowed on the ground that he was only a benamidar. Kemp and Pontifex, JJ., held that the proceedings taken kept the decree alive, and they overruled the objection that the proceedings must be taken by a person legally and rightfully entitled to the decree.

These cases were, it is true, governed by the Code and the Limitation Act of 1859, but there is, we think, no substantial change in the law. Sections 207 and 208 of the Code of 1859, and ss. 230-232 of the present Code alike require that an application for execution should be made by the holders of the decree, or (with the sanction of the Court) by the person to whom it has been transferred by assignment or by operation of law, and a person who is a transferee within the meaning of the one is certainly a transferee within the meaning of the other. Nor has art. 179 of the Limitation Act made any real change in this respect. The words "in accordance with law" mean, as we understand them, in accordance with the law relating to the execution of decrees, and it cannot be said that a person who executes a decree with the permission of the Court—a permission which the Court is expressly empowered to give—is not doing so in accordance with law. What he does, whether he is the beneficial owner or not, is as between himself and the judgment-debtor perfectly good for the purpose of the execution, and all that is required is that it should be done in accordance with law.

[395] Under s. 232 the Court, after giving notice to and hearing the objections (if any) of the decree-holder and judgment-debtor, has an absolute discretion to allow or to refuse to allow execution to proceed at the instance of a person to whom a decree has been transferred by an assignment in writing, and as between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor the effect of the sanction is, it seems to us, to place the person who acts under it and proceeds with the execution in the place of the decree-holder for the purpose of the execution, whether the transfer is real or nominal. The legality of the proceedings taken in pursuance of an application made and allowed under s. 232 must depend not on the reality of the transfer, but on the sanction accorded; and if the result was to obtain satisfaction wholly or in part, we know of no authority for the proposition that the proceedings would, as regards the judgment-debtor, be invalid, merely because the person at whose instance they were taken with the sanction of the Court turned out to be a benamidar of the decree-holder. It was in this case a mere accident that the property, when put up to sale by Bhokola, was not sold. It may be that the Court would not and should not accord sanction under s. 232 if it knew that the applicant was a benamidar; but in the absence of objection it can have no knowledge on this matter, and it was not, we think, intended to in any way limit its discretion or invalidate on that account what has been done under the sanction. The object is to obtain satisfaction, and the judgment-debtor gets the full advantage of what is realized from him. Nor is the intention of the decree-holders to commit a fraud on a third person any reason for enabling the judgment-debtor, by ignoring the acts of the benamidar, to escape payment of a just debt, especially when, as in this case, to give effect to the judgment-debtor's objection would be to enable him to defeat the claim of the very person whom it was the original decree-holder's intention to defraud.

When, therefore, a decree is transferred (really or nominally) by assignment in writing, and the ostensible transferee executes the decree with the permission of the Court, the proceedings taken and the application on which they are based, are, we think, in accordance with law as between him and the judgment-debtor, although he may be merely a benamidar, and this is all that is required to keep [396] the decree alive. It would certainly be anomalous if a person who purchased a decree from a benamidar, under circumstances which would give him a good title as against the real owner, could not take advantage of the proceedings which the benamidar had taken to keep the decree alive against the judgment-debtor, and the real owner, if there was no fraud on the judgment-debtor, would be in no worse position.

We must hold, therefore, that Bhokola's applications of the 9th December 1887 and the 17th March 1888, which led to the properties being put up to sale, were in accordance with law within the meaning of art. 179, or had the effect of keeping the decree alive. The same effect must also be given to the application of the 19th November 1890, so far as the benami question is concerned, as it was made by a person who had been executing the decree under the sanction of the Court which was still in force.

It remains to consider whether the last-mentioned application was bad on the ground that it was made against persons who were not the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor. There is no reason to doubt that the application was bona fide and that the persons cited were believed to be the legal representatives. They were in fact the reversionary heirs, although the proper representative was the daughter of the deceased judgment-debtor. We think the mistake does not invalidate the application, and that, even if it could not be properly regarded as an application under s. 234 by reason of the mistake, it would still be an application to take a step in aid of the execution. There might be a reasonable doubt as to who the legal representatives were and no safer course could be followed than to cite the persons who were believed to hold that position.

It was contended for the respondents that the appellants had no locus standi under s. 232 or any other section of the Code, as they merely claimed as transferees, and the Court had not recognized them as such or made any order allowing the decree to be executed at their instance. The respondents did not, however, contend in the lower Court that the decree had not been transferred to the appellants, or that the latter should not be allowed under s. 232 to execute it. Their contention was that the decree was time-barred. This was the question they raised, and which the [397] Court, at their request, considered and determined, and having determined it in their favour, the Court could not order that execution should proceed. We see no force in this contention.

We must, for the reasons given, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge refusing to allow execution on the ground that it is barred under art. 179 of the Limitation Act. It is said that other objections were taken which have not been disposed of. If this is so, the Subordinate Judge must, of course, dispose of them before making an order for execution.

The appellants will get their costs in this Court.

The "numerous parties" mentioned in s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure mean parties capable of being ascertained.

Two plaintiffs instituted a suit, on behalf of themselves and 42 other persons named in a schedule to the plaint, against a mohunt of an akhra to have certain alienations of property belonging to the idol set aside and the mohunt removed on the ground that he was wasting the idol's property and setting up an adverse title to it, and to have another mohunt and trustee of the property appointed in his place. The plaintiffs alleged that they and the 42 others named in the schedule were in the habit of worshipping the idol or of contributing to the worship and expenses of it, but it was clearly established by the evidence that any Hindu who chose was at liberty to give puja or render service and worship, and that others than the plaintiffs and the 42 persons named in fact did so, and that the plaintiffs and the persons named were, therefore, not the only persons interested in the suit. The plaintiffs applied for and obtained leave to institute the suit under the provisions of s. 30 of the Code. A decree having been made in their favour on appeal—

Held, that the suit was not one to which the provisions of s. 30 were applicable, as the persons interested therein, not being the whole Hindu [398] community, were incapable of ascertainment, and that the suit was one to which the provisions of s. 539 of the Code applied, the suit being one based on the existence of a trust for public religious purposes and upon a breach of that trust and for the appointment of a new trustee, and being such should have been dismissed, not having been brought in the District Court or with leave of the Collector.

THIS suit was brought by Baidyanath Deb and Radha Ram Dhar on behalf of themselves and forty-two others, whose names and addresses were given in a schedule to the plaint, and the plaint was presented on the 4th January 1890 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sylhet. It appeared that there was a deficiency in the stamp duty of Re. 1-14 on that date, and on the 6th January, after this deficiency had been made up, an order was passed granting the plaintiffs leave to join their several causes of action under s. 44 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also leave under s. 30 to institute the suit on behalf of themselves and the 42 persons named in the schedule, and it was also then ordered that on the fees being deposited, the notices under the section should be served on those persons.

The plaint alleged that the two plaintiffs and the persons named in the schedule were now and then in the habit of worshipping and rendering service to an idol Narsingha, and of contributing to the worship and service thereof; that certain moveable and immoveable property specified in two schedules annexed thereto belonged to that idol; that the service and worship of the idol was performed out of profits of the immoveable properties, and that the immoveable properties were used in such service and worship, that defendant No. 1 was the mohunt of the akhra (temple, etc.); and had been placed in charge of all properties, and used to manage and look after them, and that he was in possession of them on behalf of the idol. The plaint went on to allege that, although defendant No. 1 had no right of his own in the immoveable properties, he and defendant No. 2 had colluded together for the purpose of extinguishing the rights of the idol, and that defendant No. 1 had executed a kobala on the 4th Choitro 1289 (17th March 1883) in respect of some of the immoveable properties, and two mortgages, dated respectively the 4th Choitro 1289 and 1st Assin 1291 (16th September 1884), in respect of others, in favour of defendant [399] No. 2, and that the latter had obtained a decree on the 31st May 1887 on those two bonds which he was proceeding to execute. The plaintiffs also alleged that defendant No. 1 was not a fit and proper person to continue to act as mohunt, and that he and the other defendant were wasting the property of the idol and were setting up a title on behalf of defendant No. 1 to the other properties. They accordingly prayed that the properties set out in the schedules might be declared the property of the idol; that the kobala and the two mortgages and the decree passed thereon might be declared inoperative as against its rights; that defendant No. 1 might be removed from his office of Mohunt and some competent person appointed in his stead as trustee for the management and protection of the property, and that possession might be given to the person so appointed.

On the 6th January 1890, after the leave above referred to was given, an application was made for a temporary injunction restraining the sale of the properties in execution of the mortgage decree, and an order was passed, which recited that the suit had been filed that day, and granted the application and restrained the sale for a period of three months, or until the disposal of the suit.

The suit was not contested by defendant No. 1, but defendant No. 2 filed a written statement in which, inter alia, he pleaded that the plaintiffs could not maintain the suit; that it was not a suit to which the provisions of s. 30 were applicable, as that section did not apply to a small number of persons or limited number of plaintiffs; that the suit had not been brought on behalf of all the persons interested therein, and that leave under s. 539 of the Code and Act XX of 1863 should have been obtained to institute the suit.

The written statement put forward other grounds of defence to the suit, which it is immaterial for the purpose of this report to notice, having regard to the decision of the High Court.

Twelve issues were fixed for trial, of which those that are material are set out in the judgment of the High Court.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiffs, and defendant No. 2 thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Numerous points were raised and argued at the hearing of the appeal, but the judgment of the High Court renders it unnecessary [400] to refer to any other question than the applicability of s. 30 of the Code to the suit.

The nature of the evidence bearing on that question and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, together with the arguments advanced at the hearing of the appeal, are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Dr. Rashbehary Ghose, Baboo Tara Kishore Chowdhry, and Baboo Mohiny Mohan Roy, for the appellant.

Baboo Taruk Nuth Palit, for the respondent.

The following cases were cited during the hearing of the appeal:—

[401] The judgment of the High Court (NORRIS and MACPHERSON, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The facts out of which this appeal arises as gathered from the evidence upon the record, and the statements of the learned pleaders for the parties, are these.

In the town of Sylhet there is an akhra of the idol Narsingha. This akhra is very old, but when it was founded or established, or by whom, does not appear.

The mohunt of the akhra has, up to the date of the institution of this suit, always been a Baisnab of the Ramayat sect; but every Hindu who pleases can worship in the akhra and render service to the idol, and many persons residing in the neighbourhood of the akhra other than the plaintiffs and the forty-two persons on whose behalf the suit is brought, do as a matter of fact worship therein and render service to the idol.

In the year 1268 (B.S.) one Bala Bhadra Das was mohunt of the akhra, and on the 6th Chaitra of that year, corresponding to 18th March 1862, he made a will which is in the following terms: "This will is executed by Bala Bhadra Das, mohunt of the akhra of the idol Sri Sri Narsing, inhabitant of Kasba, Sylhet, Mahala Kalighat, in favour of you Ram Krishna Das Baisnab and Ram Govind Das Baisnab, inhabitants of the same to the following effect:—That being in possession of the land of the akhra of the aforesaid idol and of the land on the side of the river Sarama and of the undermentioned rent-paying and rent-free lands, appertaining to taluk Sonandpuran and others in pargana Banant, and pargana Bade Diorain, and pargana Ichhamati, and the moveable properties of the akhra under the deed of hiba executed without any consideration on the 23rd Aswin 1260 B.S., and signed by my guru, Doyal Das Mohunt, and also of the lands purchased by me and of the self-acquired moveable properties I have been managing the sheba and puja of the idol. As I am old and infirm and as you, Ram Krishna Das, are my dear and great friend, and as you, Ram Govind Das, are my favourite disciple, and quite competent to perform the puja and sheba, I of my own accord bequeath to you to-day for the due performance of the sheba and puja in future, all the lands mentioned in the said hiba and my self-acquired lands as per schedule mentioned below, [402] and all the moveable properties lying in the akhra on this condition, that on my demise you shall take possession of all the moveable and immoveable properties, and you and your disciples in succession shall perform the sheba and puja of the idol, and being entitled to and possessed of the jamias of the rent-paying taluks, after having them transferred to your names, you will manage the sheba and the puja of the idol established in the said akhra with the profits thereof. None of my other disciples shall have any claim thereto. I duly make over to you all the deeds and documents I have regarding the said lands, etc. To this effect I execute this will, dated the 6th Chaitra 1268 B.S."

Amongst the properties mentioned in the schedule are taluk No. 224, hissa Sunna Ram Rupram, pargana Ichhamati; taluk No. 221, Sananda Puran, pargana Ichhamati; taluk No. 223, Doyal Singh, pargana Ichhamati; taluk No. 222, Mukta Haris, pargana Ichhamati; and taluk No. 75, Baranari, pargana Ichhamati.

The hiba alluded to by Bala Bhadra Das in his will as having been executed by his guru, Doyal Das Mohunt, is not on the record, and whether the above-mentioned properties were comprised therein or were the self-acquired lands of Bala Bhadra Das, does not appear. The defendant No. 1 succeeded to the mohuntship of the akhra on the death of Bala Bhadra Das. On 4th Chaitra 1289, corresponding to 17th March 1883, the defendant No. 1 sold to the defendant No. 2 a portion of taluk No. 224, hissa Sunna Ram Rupram, for Rs. 600; and on the same day he mortgaged portion of taluks No. 221 Sananda Puran, No. 223 Doyal Singh, No. 222 Mukta Haris, and No. 75 Baranari, to defendant No. 2 to secure Rs. 800; and on the 1st Aswin 1291, corresponding to 16th September 1884, he mortgaged further portions of taluks No. 221 Sananda Puran and No. 223 Doyal Singh to defendant No. 2 to secure Rs. 600.

The defendant No. 2 sued on his mortgage-bonds and obtained an ex parte decree on 31st May 1887.

On 14th August 1889, defendant No. 2 applied for execution of his decree, and on 20th September 1889, sale proclamation was directed to be issued, fixing 3rd November 1889 as the date of sale of the mortgaged premises; the sale was subsequently, on the application of the judgment-debtor, defendant No. 1, postponed [403] until 4th January 1890; and on 6th January 1890, after the filing of the plaint in this suit, a temporary injunction was granted staying the sale for a further period of three months, or until disposal of the suit.

The plaint in this suit, which we think we must hold to have been filed on 6th January 1890, after leave obtained under ss. 30 and 44 of the Code of Civil Procedure, alleged that the plaintiffs and forty-two other persons, whose names and addresses are set out in sch. I, are in the habit of worshipping the idol Narsingha or of contributing to the worship and service thereof; that the immoveable and moveable properties specified in schs. II and III belong to the idol; that the defendant No. 1 is the mohunt of the akhra, and as such mohunt is in possession of the said properties on behalf of the idol; that although he had no right of his own to any of the said properties, yet he had executed a kobala (the kobala of 4th Choitro 1289) in favour of the defendant No. 2 in respect of some of the immovable properties, and the mortgages (those of 4th Chaitro 1289 and 1st Assin 1291) in respect of others; that a decree (that of 31st May 1887) had been obtained on the mortgages and execution taken out and a sale proclamation issued; that if the kobala was allowed to stand and the mortgaged properties to be sold, the service and worship of the idol would be stopped; it was alleged, too, that the defendant No. 1 was not a fit person to be continued in the office of mohunt.

The relief claimed was a declaration that the immovable and moveable properties specified in schs. II and III were the property of the idol; a declaration that the kobala and the mortgages executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2, and the execution proceedings taken upon the decree obtained upon the mortgages, were inoperative as against the idol; the dismissal of defendant No. 1 from the office of mohunt of the akhra and from the management of the property of the idol, and the appointment of some competent person as mohunt of the akhra and trustee of the property of the idol in the place of defendant No. 1, and an order for the transfer of the property covered by the kobala and mortgages from the defendants to the person who might be appointed mohunt and trustee.

[404] The defendant No. 1 did not defend the suit.

The defendant No. 2 pleaded that neither the plaintiffs nor the forty-two persons named in sch. I of the plaint had any right of suit; that the suit was not one to which the provisions of s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure were applicable; that if its provisions were applicable, leave had not been obtained under it, nor was the suit brought on behalf of all the parties interested therein; that leave to bring the suit ought to have been obtained under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure and under the provisions of Act XX of 1863; that the plaintiffs were benamidars of defendant No. 1; that there was misjoinder of parties and causes of action; that defendant No. 1 had rights of his own in the taluks Nos. 224, 221, 223, 222 and 75, that the said taluks did not belong to the idol; and that defendant No. 1 had upwards of 12 years before suit sold portions of the said taluks to other purchasers who were in possession.

Upon these pleadings the following issues, inter alia, were framed:—

1. "Whether the plaintiffs and the persons named in sch. No. 1 of the plaint are competent to bring this suit?"
2. "Whether the persons named in sch. No. 1 of the plaint are the persons contemplated under s. 30, Civil Procedure Code?"
3. "Whether plaintiff's claim is tenable without obtaining permission under s. 539, Civil Procedure Code, and under the provisions of Act XX of 1863?"
4. "Whether the plaintiffs are benamidars of Ram Govind Baisnab, defendant No. 1, the judgment-debtor?"
5. "Whether the suit should fail for misjoinder of parties and causes of action?"
6. "Whether the plaintiffs or the persons alleged by them are the only persons entitled to worship or help in the worship of the idol Narsingha?"
7. "Whether the properties mentioned in schs. II and III of the plaint belonged to the idol Narsingha, and whether defendant No. 1 held them as trustee?"

8. "Whether the disputed lands appertaining to taluks Nos. 221, 222, 223, 224 and 75 belonged to defendant No. 1?"

[405] 9. "Whether defendant No. 1 by mismanagement and waste of the property has rendered himself liable to be removed from office?"

All these issues were found in favour of the plaintiffs, and the suit was decreed in their favour.

The Subordinate Judge's decision on the first and second issues is as follows:—

"The plaintiffs have obtained permission of the Court, under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code, to prosecute this suit. This, I think, is a case which comes under that section. Numerous are the parties who have interest in the subject-matter of the suit. I see no incompetency in the plaintiffs to bring and maintain this suit. They are Hindus of the sect who frequent the akhra and worship Narsingha Debta and offer prayer in the temple, and are interested in the preservation of the property dedicated to the idol out of the rents and profits of which their place of worship is kept in repair and order, and numerous rites and ceremonies and festivals are performed."

Upon the third issue the Subordinate Judge says:—"Act XX of 1863 was passed to enable the Government to divest itself of the management of the religious endowments that were vested in them by Reg. XIX of 1810 of the Bengal Code, and s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code relates to trust properties created for public charitable or religious purposes. These properties are private debutter properties."

Upon the sixth issue the Subordinate Judge found that "it has been proved that the plaintiffs worship and help in the worship of the idol Narsingha Debta; there is no satisfactory proof of others being like them worshippers of the said idol."

The finding on the seventh issue is as follows:—"Schedule III of the plaint enumerates utensils, instruments, and chests, and almirahs for keeping them. The utensils and the musical instruments are used for the worship of the idol. Defendant No. 1 does not claim them as his own. Nor does defendant No. 2 set up any right in them. From the will of Bala Bhadra Das Mohunt, it appears that the properties of sch. No. II belonged to him and he dedicated them to the idol Narsingha Debta. Ram Kishen and Ram Govind, chelas of Bala Bhadra, were appointed *shebait*s. They [406] were enjoined and directed by the will to manage the property for the idol and devote the income to the worship of the idol. They are to hold it as trustees for the Debta. Defendant No 1 has sued for rent of those properties as shebait, trustee or mohunt of the akhra Narsingha Debta, and he has dealt with the properties as such."

With regard to the eighth issue the Subordinate Judge says:—"Defendant No. 2 could not show how defendant No. 1 got the taluks 221, 222, 223, 224 and 75. He might have sold some share in this as his own private property. It does not stop plaintiff from proving that Ram Govind got them by will from Bala Bhadra, and that he was merely a trustee or shebait of the idol Narsingha Debta."

Upon the ninth issue the Subordinate Judge finds that defendant No. 1 has been guilty of waste, and points out that he has made no objection to being removed from office.

It appears that one Gour Mohan Das Baisnab has applied to be appointed mohunt in the place of defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs said that he was a fit person, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge appointed him.

The defendant No. 2 appealed. On the hearing of the appeal the main grounds urged by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose were first, that the provisions of s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure were not applicable to a suit of this nature and character. Second, that even if such provisions were applicable, leave under s. 30 was not obtained before the institution of the suit. Third, that if they were applicable, yet the suit ought to be dismissed, as the evidence conclusively shows that it was not brought on behalf of all the parties interested. Fourth, that the will of Bala Bhadra Das did not operate as a valid dedication of the lands mentioned in the schedule thereto to the use of the idol; that upon a true construction of the will it ought to be held that they were given to the defendant No. 1 free from any trust or subject only to a charge for the expenses of the worship. Fifth, that even if the will operated as a valid dedication of the lands to the use of the idol, there was no evidence that the lands comprised in the appellants' kobala and mortgages formed part of the lands so dedicated. Sixth, that the suit was not maintainable without leave obtained under [407] s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure or under Act XX of 1863, or both. Seventh, that the evidence established collusion between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1; that on a proper consideration of the evidence the lower Court ought to have held that the suit was really brought by defendant No. 1 with the object of defrauding his creditors and defeating the just claims of defendant No. 2.

In support of his second contention Dr. Rash Behari calls attention to the fact that the plaint purported to have been filed on the 4th January 1890, and that leave under s. 30 was not granted until 6th January 1890. No doubt there is an impressed stamp at the top of the first page of the plaint bearing these words: "Sub-Judge's Court, Sylhet, filed 4th January 1890," and underneath are the initials "J. K. C.," which are those of the Subordinate Judge. A reference to the order sheet, however, shows that when the plaint was first presented there was deficiency in the court-fee of Rs. 1-14; this deficiency was made good on the 6th January, and then it was ordered "that permission be given to the plaintiffs under s. 30 to bring this suit for themselves and on behalf of the persons mentioned in sch. I;" and on the same day there is another order relating to an application for a temporary injunction to stay the auction sale in execution of defendant No. 2's decree of 31st May 1887, which recites—"As the plaintiffs after filing this suit to-day." It appears, too, that this point was not taken in the lower Court, where, if it had been taken, it could have been decided upon the evidence. We are of opinion that we cannot give effect to it here.

We are, however, of opinion that the appellant is entitled to our judgment on others of the grounds urged by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose.

We are of opinion that the "numerous parties" mentioned in s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure means parties capable of being ascertained; this seems clear from a reference to the provisions for service of notice at the plaintiff's expense upon "all such parties."

In Adamson v. Arumugam (1) it was said that s. 30 "is rather designed to allow one or more persons to represent a class [408] having special interest than to allow such persons to sue on behalf of the general public to which the notices prescribed by that procedure would be inapplicable." The evidence on the record clearly establishes that "every Hindu who pleases can give puja or render service (sheba) to the idol Narsingha of the akhra; every Hindu can go into the said akhra and perform puja, sandhya, or say prayers;" in other words, the evidence shows that the whole Hindu community are interested in this suit, which has for its object, amongst other things, the preservation and continuation of the worship of the idol.

The whole Hindu community is incapable of ascertainment; and if it had been ascertained, it is clear that the notices required by s. 30 have only been served upon forty-two of the community which probably consists of five million times that number. On these grounds, therefore, we are of opinion that this is not a suit to which the provisions of s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure are applicable.

The cases relied on by the learned pleader for the respondent [Radha-bai kom Chimnaji Sali v. Chimnaji bin Ramji Sali (1) and Kalidas Jivram v. Gor Parjaram Hirji (2)] do not appear to help him.

In the first case, the two plaintiffs sued (for themselves alone) to recover possession of a field which they alleged belonged to a certain idol, and which they said defendant No. 1 had alienated to defendant No. 2, who had sold it to defendant No. 3—no question as to the applicability of the provisions of s. 30, Code of Civil Procedure. In the second case, the 13 plaintiffs sued on behalf of themselves and 195 others, but it appears that 208 persons comprised the whole number interested in the suit.

We are further of opinion that this suit is one to which the provisions of s. 539, Civil Procedure Code, apply. The suit is based upon the existence of a trust (which if it exists at all, is clearly one "for public religious purposes") and upon a breach of that trust; the relief sought is the appointment of a new trustee and an order vesting property improperly alienated in the new trustee.

[409] The plaintiffs do not sue for the establishment of their own right as worshippers or devotees of the idol. The suit seems to be one clearly contemplated by s. 539, Code of Civil Procedure.

Suits under that section must be brought in the District Court after leave to institute them has been obtained from the Collector.

This suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and without leave obtained from the Collector, and it therefore cannot be sustained.

We are supported in the conclusions at which we arrive by the following cases, viz., Wajid Ali Shah v. Dianat-Ul-lah Beg (3) and Raghubar Dial v. Kesho Ramanuj Das (4).

In this view of the case it is unnecessary to express any opinion on the other points raised by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose.

The appeal is allowed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Macpherson and Mr. Justice Beverley.

RAM DAS AND TWO OTHERS (Defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5)
*v. CHANDRA DASSIA (Plaintiff). [21st July, 1892.]

Hindu Law—Custom—Law governing family adopting the Hindu religion.

In the absence of any custom to the contrary, or of any satisfactory evidence to show what form of Hindu law they have adopted, the members of a family who have adopted the Hindu religion are governed by the school of Hindu law in force in the locality where they reside.

Faninda Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (1) referred to.

[N.F., 6 A.L.J. 591 (594).]

IN this suit the plaintiff, Chandra Dassia, sought to recover a one third share of certain moveable and immoveable properties as the heiress of her deceased father. She alleged that her father [410] Debi Das and her uncles Ram Das (defendant No. 1) and Durga Das (the husband of defendant No. 2) were uterine brothers, and formed a joint Hindu family; that while they continued as the members of a joint Hindu family they acquired and were in possession of the properties in suit; that she was the only daughter of her father Dabi Das, who died on 18th Pous 1295 (1st January 1889), and consequently his sole heiress, and as such entitled to his share.

The main defence was a denial of the allegation of joint ownership and possession by the three brothers.

At the trial before the Munsif it was further contended on behalf of the principal defendant, Ram Das, who was the sole surviving brother of the plaintiff's father, that inasmuch as the parties were admittedly Rajbansis and not Hindus originally, they were not necessarily governed by Hindu law or by the Bengal school of such law.

The Munsif found that the plaintiff's father, Debi Das, and her two uncles, formed a joint undivided family, and that Debi Das continued a member of it until his death. He also found that the parties were Hindus and were governed by Hindu law; but as the evidence as to which school of Hindu law they had adopted was inconclusive and unsatisfactory, he held that the family must be taken to be governed by that school of law which prevailed in the district where they resided, and that therefore they were governed by the Bengal school. He accordingly held that the plaintiff was her father's heiress, and gave her a decree for most of the properties claimed.

The Subordinate Judge upheld the findings and decision of the Munsif, dismissing the appeal which was preferred to him.

Defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5 appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Gr:ja Sunker Mozumdar, for the appellants.

Baboo Surendro Chunder Sen, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (MACPHERSON and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows:—

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1462 of 1891 against the decree of Baboo Debendro Lall Shome, Subordinate Judge of Rangpur, dated the 4th of June 1891, affirming the decree of Mr. Syed Abdur Rohoman, Munsif of Kurigram, dated the 30th of September 1890.

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover a one-third share of certain properties on the allegation that her father and his [411] two brothers formed a joint Hindu family, and while so living acquired and held possession of the properties in suit. The main defence was a denial of the allegation of the joint ownership and possession of the properties by the three brothers, but this question has been decided in favour of the plaintiff by both the lower Courts, and is not now before us.

During the trial of the suit in the first Court a further point was raised by the principal defendant, who is the surviving brother of the plaintiff's father. This point does not appear to have been taken in the pleadings, unless it is referred to in the supplemental paragraph 3a of the written statement. It is said to form the subject of the third issue and it was no doubt argued before, and discussed in the judgment of, both the lower Courts. The point was this. The parties being admittedly Rajbansis and not Hindus originally, it was said that they were not necessarily governed by Hindu law or by the Bengal school of such law; and evidence of a kind was accordingly given by both sides with the object of showing by which school of law the family was governed. Both Courts have found that the parties are Hindus, but that the evidence as to the particular system which they have adopted was too vague and unsatisfactory to be acted upon, and they have accordingly held that in the absence of trustworthy evidence the family must be held to be governed by that school of law which prevails in the part of the country where they resided. They accordingly held that the Bengal school of law applied, and they gave the plaintiff a decree for most of the properties claimed.

It is contended before us in second appeal that this decision is bad in law; that the Courts below were wrong in holding that the Bengal school of law applied merely on the ground that the parties lived in Rangour, but that they were bound to find upon the evidence by what law the family was governed in matters of inheritance and succession. The case of Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (1) was cited in support of the contention, but it does not, we think, help the appellants. The question there was as to the right of succession to a large estate which had belonged to the family of the litigants for many generations. The family was of the Koch or Rajbansi class, and had adopted Hinduism at a remote time. [412] It was found that although they affected to be Hindus, they had retained and were governed by family customs which, as regards some matters, were at variance with Hindu law. It was not shown that the family had become Hindus out and out, save only special custom; it was held to be in a totally different position. The plaintiff was the admitted heir unless an adoption which was set up by the defendant prevailed; and having regard to the origin and history of the family, the question was stated to be not whether the general Hindu law was modified by a family custom forbidding adoption, but whether, with reference to inheritance, the family was governed by Hindu law, or by customs not allowing an adopted son to inherit; and it was held that, under the circumstances of the case, the burden of proving that the adoption was permitted by the family custom lay upon those who alleged it to be so. Their Lordships added that if the family had been governed generally by Hindu law, the case would have been different; that the defendant then might have relied upon the

(1) 11 C. 463 = 12 I.A. 72.

Hindu law, and the onus of proving a family custom prohibitive of adoption would be on the plaintiff.

Now in the present case the plaintiff clearly claims as heir according to the Hindu law which is current in Bengal and in the locality in which the parties reside, and if that law does apply her title is on the facts found established. Of the history of the family nothing is known, and it is not likely that it has a history. No customs at variance with the Hindu law are pleaded or established. There was at most on the defendants' part a general denial that the Hindu law applied at all, and an assertion that if it did apply, it was the Mitakshara and not the Daya-bhaga.

The Subordinate Judge has found that the parties are undoubtedly Hindus, and that their ceremonies are performed according to the Hindu shastras. No exception to its general application is found to exist, and no special custom regulating succession was either set up or established. The question then was reduced to this—the Hindu law in its entirety applying, which system of that law had the parties adopted? Was it the system prevalent in Bengal and in the locality in which they resided, or the system prevalent in some other parts of India? The evidence on this point was found to be inconclusive and unsatisfactory. The [413] witnesses were ignorant, illiterate people who could not distinguish one system from the other, and the evidence was on the whole such that the Court could not come to any satisfactory conclusion one way or the other. This being the case it was not, we think, wrong to infer that the law of the locality prevailed, and that the inference turned the scale in the plaintiff's favour.

The case is quite distinguishable from those in which a person moving from one part of India to another, where a different law prevails, has been held to carry the personal law with him unless the contrary is shown. Here the parties are Hindus. It must be taken that they have adopted in its entirety one form or other of that law, and it being uncertain which form they adopted, it is not unreasonable to infer that they adopted the form which prevailed in the locality.

The trial has been protracted. There is no reason to suppose that if the parties were allowed to adduce further evidence, more light would be thrown upon the matter. It would be useless to remand the case in order that the Subordinate Judge might determine whether with reference to the facts any particular rule of succession had been established, because it is clear from his judgment that the evidence did not admit of his coming to any decision on the point.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAGHU NATH DAS.* [16th January, 1893.]

Joinder of charges—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 233, 234, 235, and 557—Separate charges for distinct offences—Using forged documents—Charges for using eleven forged documents in three sets on three separate occasions.

The accused was charged with using as genuine eleven forged receipts which were put in by him in sets on three separate occasions, each set with a written statement in three suits pending against him. A charge was framed [414] against him in respect of the using of each set of receipts, and he was tried on these three charges and convicted and sentenced. On appeal it was contended that a separate charge should have been framed in respect of each of the documents, as the using of each document constituted a distinct and separate offence, and that consequently the trial was illegal and should be set aside, the accused having been tried for more than three offences in one and the same trial.

Held, that as the "using" charged was the putting in of each set of documents with the respective written statements in the three suits, and as there was nothing to show that any of the documents had been used at any other time, there was only one using in respect of each set of documents and that there was, therefore, no valid ground for questioning the conviction.

THE accused, Raghu Nath Das Mahapatra, a surbarakar or tenureholder in the district of Balasore, was convicted under ss. 471 and 467 of the Penal Code by the Sessions Judge of dishonestly using as genuine, eleven rent receipts or powtis, knowing them to be forged. The Sessions Judge at the trial grouped the receipts into three sets in the following manner: the first set embraced 3 receipts, Exs. "A," "B," and "C," which had been filed by the prisoner in suit No. 77 on the 26th of August 1891; the second set included 4 receipts, Exs. "M," "N," "O," "P," filed by him in suit No. 131 on the 28th August 1891; and the third set contained other 4 receipts, Exs. "Q," "R," "S," "T," filed also by him in suit No. 132 on the 29th August 1891.

The Sessions Judge, agreeing with the assessors, convicted the accused and sentenced him to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of rupees 100 in respect of each set of receipts, and in default of payment to like imprisonment for a further period of three months; "or in all to rigorous imprisonment for a period of three years and to a fine of Rs. 300, or in default to like imprisonment for a further period of nine months."

Against that conviction the accused appealed to the High Court upon numerous grounds which it is not material to notice, as the only question raised and argued on his behalf at the hearing of the appeal was that relating to the contention, that the trial had been irregularly conducted and was consequently illegal by reason of the accused having been charged with and tried for more than three offences in one and the same trial.

[415] Mr. W. R. Donogh and Baboo Gopi Nath Mukerji, for appellant.

The Deputy Legal remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.

Mr. Donogh.—The appellant has been convicted under s. 471 coupled with s. 467 of the Penal Code of using as genuine eleven rent receipts found to be forged. He has not been actually convicted of forging them, but the Judge has very little doubt that he did either forge them himself.

or have them forged. Three were used on one day, four on another, and the remaining four on a third. There is nothing to show that any one receipt was filed simultaneously with another. Therefore there are here eleven distinct offences, and according to s. 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code there should have been a separate charge for each offence. This stands to reason because in respect of each document there must necessarily be a distinct defence. One might be forged and another not, so that the same defence could not be offered to all the documents in one group. According to s. 233 each offence should be tried separately. The only exception to this is to be found in s. 234, under which three of these offences might have been tried together, but no more. The intention of this very salutary rule was, no doubt, that an accused person might not be embarrassed in his defence by having to meet too many charges at one time. Section 235 contains the only exception to this provision. It provides for the trial of more offences than one if arising out of the same transaction. That might mean more than three. If the filing of each set of receipts constituted one transaction, then it was open to the Judge to try each set of offences separately, i.e., the offences of filing A, B and C together, or M, N, O, P together, or again Q, R, S, T together. Having taken up one set of offences he would not be at liberty to go further and add other charges, for he would thus transgress the rule contained in s. 234 against the trial of more than three offences together. The trial, therefore, of eleven such offences would be a grave irregularity, and not only that, but an illegality sufficient to render the whole trial inoperative. See the dictum of Petheram, C. J., in the case of In the matter of Luchminarain (1). [PRINSEP, J.—It has been held otherwise by this Court. There is a conflict of opinion on that point.] It was held in The [416] Empress v. Uttom Koondoo (2) that such an irregularity would not be fatal unless it had occasioned a failure of justice, but it appears that this case was referred to and considered in Luchminarain's case.

It has been held that irregularities of this kind cannot be cured by s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code. [See Queen-Empress v. Chandi Singh (3)] The object of this section, which is practically the same as s. 283 of the Code of 1872, is to remedy defects of a formal character only and not serious irregularities of such a nature; Regina v. Diva Dayal (4).

In any event it would be proper in this case to limit the trial to the first set of offences and to set aside the convictions and sentences in respect of the others as was done in the case of The Empress v. Uttom Koondoo (2).

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer.—It is proved that each set of documents was filed by the accused with a written statement, on a separate day, in a separate suit. The using of each set was one transaction, one using. The offence in regard to each document of a set is a part of the offence of using the set, and all the documents of one set being used at the same time for the same purpose in one transaction, the accused cannot be punished more severely for using all than for using one of the documents of the set (s. 71, Penal Code). Nor can the user of any one of the documents of a set be considered as a distinct offence within the meaning of s. 233 of the Procedure Code from the user of any other document of that set. It would be as incorrect to make a separate charge for using each document of the set as it would be to charge a thief in separate charges for stealing each of the various coins in a purse taken from a man's pocket. The argument that the accused might have a separate defence in regard to each document is of no weight. Constantly cases occur of jewellers' shops being broken into and large quantities of valuables taken belonging to many different people, and as constantly the thieves make different defences for the different articles found with them. But where there is one transaction, one act of stealing, [417] the taking of each separate article is not and could not be treated as a distinct offence.

The opinion expressed in the case of In the matter of Luchminarain (1) as to what might have been the result if the Judges had found the facts differently was not necessary to the decision of the case and does not agree with the decisions in Manu Miya v. The Empress (2), Empress v. Sreenath Kur (3), and Queen-Empress v. Fakirapa (4). The facts of the case of The Queen-Empress v. Chandi Singh (5) are entirely different from those of the present case, different persons having been tried in one trial for clearly distinct offences committed at different times.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The only point raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant is as to the form of the trial, having regard to the charges and to the findings of the Court convicting the appellant on all those charges. The appellant was charged with having fraudulently and dishonestly used as genuine certain documents which he knew or had reason to believe to be forged documents. These documents were put in by him together with a written statement in each of three suits purporting to show that the sums of money for which he was being sued were not due to the plaintiff. It has been contended that a separate charge should have been made for each one of the documents, and that consequently the trial must be set aside as contrary to law and within the terms of the precedent quoted to us. The three sets of documents were proved at the trial to have been put in in each suit simultaneously, together with a written statement in the particular case, and these are the "usings" charged. There is nothing to show that any of them were used at any other time. We think, therefore, that the Sessions Judge has rightly held that there was only one using in respect of each set of documents. Consequently we see no valid ground for questioning the correctness of the conviction. We observe that no objection on this ground was taken at the trial in the Sessions Court. We think [418] it unnecessary to consider the other point raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant which proceeds on the assumption that the charges related to more than three particular offences. The appeal is therefore dismissed.

Per PETHERAM, C.J. and GHOSE, J. (BEVERLEY, J. dissenting). Where immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree against the ostensible owner as his property, a person claiming to be the beneficial owner is entitled to come in under s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure and object to the sale.

SHEIKH ABDUL GANI, the objector, in his petition to the High Court, stated that he and his brother, Abdul Aziz Meah, purchased taluk Jimina in execution of a decree for arrears of rent in the benami name of Kali Prosunno Ghose, a servant of theirs, and continued in possession of the taluk on payment of rent to A. M. Dunne, Esq., Receiver of the estate of Satya Ghosal Bahadur and others; that the said Receiver obtained a decree for arrears of rent against the said Kali Prosunno, and in [419] execution of the decree the taluk was put up for sale and purchased by the petitioner's brother Abdul Aziz in the benami name of Abdul Karim; that the petitioner applied to the Munsif to set aside the sale under
s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure and s. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, offering to pay the decretal money; that the Munsif without entering into the merits of the case declined to exercise his jurisdiction on the ground that the petitioner had no locus standi to make the application, and that s. 173 of the Tenancy Act did not apply to the case; and that this decision had been upheld on appeal to the District Judge. The petitioner prayed to have the sale set aside.

The grounds upon which the objector relied were, (1) that the sale of the property was fraudulent, (2) that there was irregularity in conducting the sale and in publishing the sale proclamation, (3) that Kali Prosunno was the benamidar of the objector and his brother, Sheikh Abdul Aziz, and
(4) that Abdul Aziz in order to defraud the objector had in collusion with the decree-holder caused the property to be sold and himself purchased it in the name of Abdul Karim Meah, who was ostensibly the auction purchaser.

The Courts below were of opinion that the petitioner had no locus standi, the matter being concluded by the decision of the Full Bench in Asmutunnissa Begum v. Ashruff Ali (1).

A rule having been obtained on the part of the objector, the Court, GHOSE and BEVERLEY, JJ., were divided in opinion and the matter was therefore re-argued before PETHERAM, C.J.

CIVIL RULE.

20 C. 418.

Mr. Sandel for Dr. Rashbehari Ghose, appeared in support of the rule.

Baboo Durga Mohun Das, appeared to show cause.

The following opinions were delivered by the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and GHOSE and BEVERLEY, JJ.)

OPINIONS.

BEVERLEY, J.—This rule was granted under the following circumstances:—

The appellant before us alleges that he and his brother Abdul Aziz Meah held a taluk in the name of their servant Kali Prosunno Ghose; that in execution of a decree for arrears of rent against Kali Prosunno Ghose, the taluk in question was put up to sale and was purchased by the appellant's brother in the name of one Abdul Karim. The appellant then applied to have the sale set aside under s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but both the lower Courts have held that he has no locus standi under that section. The question before us is whether a person claiming to be the beneficial owner of property which has been sold as the property of the ostensible owner, can apply to have the sale set aside under s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

I am of opinion that the matter is concluded by the Full Bench decision in the case of Asmutunnissa Begum v. Ashruff Ali (1). If, as is contended by the appellant, the property sold was the property of the appellant and not that of Kali Prosunno Ghose, the appellant's interest has not been affected by the sale and he is not entitled to come in under s. 311. I am unable to distinguish the present case from that of the Full Bench case, and I am of opinion that the orders of the lower Courts were right and that the rule should be discharged with costs.

GHOSE, J.—It appears that a certain tenure stood in the name of one Kali Prosunno. In execution of a decree for rent of that tenure obtained by the zamindar against Kali Prosunno, the tenure was sold under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and purchased by one Abdul Karim. The petitioner before us, Abdul Gani, subsequently applied, under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale upon the ground of irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale, his case being that he and his brother were the beneficial owners of the property, Kali Prosunno being only a benamidar. This application has been rejected by the Courts below upon the ground that the petitioner has no locus standi under s. 311. And the question that we have to determine is whether this view is correct.

My learned colleague is of opinion that the matter is concluded by the Full Bench decision in the case of Asmutunnissa Begum v. Ashruff Ali (1), and that the order of the lower Courts is right.

[421] I regret, however, I am unable to agree with him in this view.

It may be useful in the first place to refer to what the law on the subject was before the present Procedure Code was passed. The corresponding section in the old Code (VIII of 1859) was s. 256, and it provided that (omitting the first portion of the section) "at any time within thirty days from the date of the sale, application may be made to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of any material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale; but no sale shall be set aside on the ground of such irregularity unless the applicant shall prove to the satisfaction of

CIVIL RULE.
20 C. 418.

the Court that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity." There was a conflict of rulings under this section; the Calcutta High Court and the Agra Court held that it was only the judgment-debtor who could apply to set aside the sale; the Bombay High Court, on the contrary, were of opinion that the word "applicant" in s. 256 is not confined to the parties to the suit, but also includes any person who has sustained injury by reason of the irregularity of the sale: [Joge Narain Singh v. Bhugbano (1); Luchmeeput Singh Doogur v. Mooktakashee Debia (2); Maina Koer v. Luchmun Bhuggut (3); Krishnarav Venkatesh v. Vesudev Anant (4); Rae Sittaram v. Balkrishna Tewaree (5).]

It was, I think, in view of this conflict of authorities that the Legislature provided in s. 311, Act X of 1877, that "the decree-holder or any person whose immovable property has been sold under this Chapter may apply to the Court to set aside the sale," &c., &c. And the language of s. 311 in the present Code is exactly the same as in the Code of 1877.

We have it then that not the judgment-debtor only (as it had been held by this Court under the old Code), but "the decree-holder or any person whose immovable property has been sold" may apply to set aside the sale; and the question we have to consider is whether the petitioner is a "person whose immovable property has been sold."

[422] Now if the allegation of the petitioner be true, he is certainly a person whose property has been sold: he says the property, though it stood in the name of Kali Prosunno, was really his, and that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of the sale.

It has been said that if the property belonged to the petitioner and not to Kali Prosunno, his interest has not been affected by the sale, and therefore he is not entitled to apply under s. 311 of the Code. But it will be observed that the rent decree was passed against the person who was the recorded tenure-holder; and in execution of this decree the whole tenure, and not simply the right, title and interest of Kali Prosunno, would pass to the purchaser under the sale, if it is confirmed. The test that may well be applied in a case like this is to see whether the petitioner would be entitled to bring a suit to contest the sale or to recover the property.

Now, it has been held both in this Court and in Allahabad that the beneficial owner is bound by any decree that may be passed against the benamidar: Gopi Nath Chobey v. Bhagwat Pershad (6), Khub Chand v. Narain Singh (7). In the case of Gopi Nath Chobey v. Bhagwat Pershad (6), Mitter, J., in delivering judgment of the Court upon a question like this, observed: "But apart from authorities, it appears to us that so long as the benami system is to be recognized in this country, the proper rule, in our opinion, is that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary it is to be presumed that the benamidar has instituted the suit with the full authority of the beneficial owner; and if he does so, any decision come to in his presence would be as much binding upon the real owner as if the suit had been brought by the real owner himself." There, no doubt, the previous suit had been brought by the benamidar, but I take it that the same principle equally applies where the suit is against the benamidar.

There is another case which may well be referred to in this connection; viz., the case of Panye Chunder Sircar v. Hurchunder Chowdhry (8).

There, the plaintiff had purchased the tenure from the registered tenant, but he did not get his name registered in the zemindar's office; subsequently the zemindar brought a suit [423] for rent against the registered tenant, and, having obtained a decree, got the tenure sold; the plaintiff applied under s. 311 of the Code to set aside the sale, but the application was rejected upon exactly the same ground that the application of the petitioner has been rejected, viz., that he had no locus standi; and he thereupon brought a suit to set aside the sale. It was held by Field, J., that the ground upon which the application under s. 311 had been rejected was erroneous; that in the absence of fraud the suit was not maintainable, for the plaintiff should have either satisfied the rent decree, or appealed against the order rejecting his application under s. 311 of the Code; and that he was not entitled to treat the proceedings in the rent suit and the sale in execution as nullities, although he was not a party thereto. The Court accordingly dismissed the suit.

In the case of Asmutunnissa Begum v. Ashruff Ali (1) decided by a Full Bench of this Court, it would appear that the applicant under s. 311 claimed the property sold under a conveyance from the judgment-debtor, prior to the attachment; and the question that was then considered was whether he was entitled to object to the sale, under that section. It was held that he was not so entitled. The Chief Justice in delivering the judgment of the Court observed as follows:—

"The words are 'any person whose immoveable property has been sold under that chapter may apply,' but the sale is not to be set aside unless the applicant proves that he has sustained substantial injury. We think that this means that the substantial injury must be the direct result of the irregularity, and that this could only be the case where the property of the person applying had not only been put up for sale and knocked down, but had been sold in the sense that the applicant's interest had been legally affected by such sale, as in the case of Krishnarav Venkatesh v. Vasudev Anant (2), but that a person claiming by title paramount to the judgment-debtor is not within the meaning of the words 'any person' in the section, inasmuch as his title to the property is not affected by the sale, whether it were regular or irregular, and therefore cannot apply to the Court to set aside the sale."

[424] The case before the Full Bench was, as has already been noticed, a case where the applicant claimed under a title acquired from the judgment-debtor before the attachment, so that upon the date of attachment and sale the property was not the property of the judgment-debtor, and therefore the sale could not possibly affect the applicant. But the case before us is wholly different. Here, the rent decree and the proceedings in execution thereof are absolutely binding upon the petitioner, if his allegation of benami be true, and therefore the sale must unmistakably affect his interest in the property. In one sense no doubt he claims the property adversely to the judgment-debtor, but strictly speaking he claims it through him: what he says is that Kali Prosunno is but himself in another name.

Upon these grounds, I am of opinion that the Full Bench decision in the case of Asmutunnissa Begum v. Ashruff Ali (1) does not conclude the matter now before us, and that the Courts below are wrong in holding that the petitioner has no locus standi. The only doubt I entertained, however, was whether the Court could determine in this proceeding

(1) 15 C. 488 (491).

(2) 11 B.H.C. 15.

(the title of the petitioner being disputed) whether he has an interest in the property. But upon further reflection I think that for the purposes of s. 311, the Court would have to determine, as a preliminary question, whether the petitioner has an interest in the property which would be affected by the sale. The remedy under s. 311 of the Code is not confined to the decree-holder and judgment-debtor; and when any third party comes in upon the ground that his interest in the property has been affected by the sale, the Court cannot help determining whether he has such an interest in the property.

If this enquiry be shut out, and his application is rejected upon the ground that his ownership in the property is disputed, he may be debarred hereafter from obtaining relief upon any of the grounds mentioned in s. 311 of the Code.

There being, however, a difference of opinion between my learned colleague and myself upon the main question raised in this rule, I think the case should be referred to a third Judge, and I may say that in this respect my learned colleague agrees with me.

[425] PETHERAM, C.J.—In this case I agree with the view taken by Mr. Justice Ghose, except on one point. Mr. Justice Ghose says that he does not think that the case is concluded by the decision of the Full Bench, I think it is, and I think that the decision of the Full Bench concludes the case in the way in which Mr. Justice Ghose has decided it, because that Full Bench case decided that any person might come in and make an application under s. 311 to set aside a sale, if his interest were affected by the sale, in the sense that it would pass by the sale. In my opinion, if this is a good sale, the present applicant's interest passed under it, because his case is that Kali Prosunno Ghose, the name which appears on the zemindar's serishta and the name in which the rent suit was brought, was his benamidar and his servant, and was in fact another name for himself. If these things were proved, I think that a good title would be established as against the present applicant, Abdul Gani, because he does not claim by any title paramount to that person, but he says that that person is himself under another name.

Under these circumstances, I think upon the authority of the case in the Full Bench that the view taken by Mr. Justice Ghose is the correct view in this case, and the rule will be made absolute as proposed by him. The costs will abide the event.

Before Mr. Justice Macpherson and Mr. Justice Banerjee.

NILMONI SINGH DEO (Plaintiff) v. NILU NAIK AND ANOTHER (Defendants).^{*} [5th September, 1892.]

Limitation—Act X of 1859, s. 33—Discovery of fraud—Agency—Suit for an account and for money misappropriated by agent—Jurisdiction—Cause of action—Bengal Act VI of 1862, s. 20—Bengal Act I of 1879, s. 146.

Where an agency for the collection of rents of tokes G and H was created in district M, in which district toke G was situated, toke H being [426] situated in district L, held, in a suit brought against the agent for an account and for money fraudulently misappropriated, and instituted in district M, that so far as the suit related to toke H the Court of M had no jurisdiction to try it. Bengal Act VI of 1862 requires a suit to be brought in some Court within the district in which the land lies in respect of which the agency was created, and the question where the cause of action arose is material only in determining in which sub-division of the district the suit is to be brought.

Where the plaintiff alleged that the fraud committed by the agent came to his knowledge on a certain date, and the suit was brought within one year from such date and within three years from the termination of the agency, held, that the case came within the proviso of s. 33 of Act X of 1859, and the suit was not barred by limitation.

Held further, that in suits for money misappropriated by an agent where fraudulent accounts have been rendered, the plaintiff has an extended period of limitation of one year, which, in the words of s. 33 of Act X of 1859, runs from the time when the fraud is first known to him, but in any particular case the Court, having regard to the nature of the fraud, the facility with which it may be known, and the likelihood of attention being called to it, may infer such knowledge when the means of knowledge first come, or have for a reasonable time been, within the plaintiff's reach, or, in other words, may hold the plaintiff fixed with constructive knowledge of the fraud. The Court must therefore, in every such case, ascertain when the plaintiff first had knowledge, actual or constructive, of the fraud.

Mackintosh v. Woomesh Chunder Bose (1), Dhunput Singh v. Rohoman Mundul (2), and Huree Mohun Gohoo v. Anund Chunder Mookerjee (3) referred to.

THIS suit was brought on 26th September 1889 for certain Seha and Shumar papers, for an account, and for the sum of Rs. 1,743-15-8 said to have been misappropriated by the defendants.

The plaintiff alleged that the defendants were appointed by him as tahsildars for the purpose of collecting rents in toke Gopalpur for the years 1291 to Jait 1294 (1884 to May 1887), and in toke Hajambasta for the year 1295 (1888) up to Assin (September); that the defendants from time to time collected rents and rendered accounts of them from which it was discovered that they had not entered the names of a large number of tenants from [427] whom they had realized rents; and that the plaintiff for the first time came to know of the fraudulent conduct of the defendants in Assin 1295 (September 1888).

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 793 of 1891, against the decree of C. M. W. Brett, Esq., Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated the 27th of April 1891, affirming the decree of Baboo Ram Saran Bhattacharjee, Deputy Collector of Manbhum, dated the 30th of December 1889.

(1) 3 W.R. Act X, 121.

(2) 11 W.R. 163 and 9 W.R. 329.

(3) 5 W.R. Act X, 63.

The defendants contended that the suit was barred under s. 33 of Act X of 1859, that it was defective owing to misjoinder of causes of action, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the case, having regard to the provisions of s. 20 of Bengal Act VI of 1862. They further alleged that they had filed all the papers, paid all the money collected by them, had not misappropriated any money, and were not liable for the sum claimed.

The Court of first instance, without entering into the merits of the case, dismissed the suit. It was held that the suit was barred by limitation, that there was misjoinder of causes of action, and that the Court had no jurisdiction in respect of the claim regarding toke Hajambasta.

The lower appellate Court came to the same conclusion as the Court of first instance and dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Trailokya Nath Mitter and Dr. Rashbehari Ghose, for the appellant.

Baboo Digamber Chatterji, for the respondents.

The arguments sufficiently appear in the judgment of the High Court (MACPHERSON and BANERJEE, JJ.) which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for certain zemindari papers, for an account, and for a certain sum of money, on the allegation that the defendants were employed as his tahsildars or collection agents in toke Gopalpur from 1291 to Jait 1294, and in toke Hajambasta in 1295 down to Assin; that they had from time to time rendered accounts which were afterwards found to be false; that they had in fact misappropriated Rs. 1,743-15-8 which they had realized in excess of the sums entered in the papers filed by them in plaintiff's sherishta; and that their fraudulent acts came to light since Assin 1295.

The defendants urged that the Court in which the suit was brought had no jurisdiction to try the suit as regards Hajambasta; that the suit was untenable by reason of misjoinder of [428] different causes of action; that the suit was barred by limitation; that the defendants had rendered a true account to the plaintiff, and that they had not misappropriated any money and were not liable for any part of the claim.

The Courts below have held that the suit in respect to toke Hajambasta was untenable for want of jurisdiction, that the suit was bad for misjoinder of causes of action, and that it was barred by limitation, and they have dismissed it without entering into the merits. It is now contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the lower appellate Court is wrong in holding that the claim as regards Hajambasta is untenable for want of jurisdiction in the first Court, that the suit was bad for misjoinder, and that it was barred by limitation.

On the question of jurisdiction we are of opinion that the appellant's contention must fail.

Toke Gopalpur is in the district of Manbhum, in which the suit was brought, but toke Hajambasta is in the district of Lohardaga. In the former district Act X of 1859, supplemented by Bengal Act VI of 1862, is the Rent Law in force, and in the latter Bengal Act I of 1879.

Section 20 of Bengal Act VI of 1862 enacts that suits under that Act or under Act X of 1859 "shall be preferred in the Revenue Office of the district, or when a subdivision of a district has been placed under the jurisdiction of a Deputy Collector, in the Revenue Office of the subdivision in which the cause of action shall have arisen," &c., and s. 146 of Bengal Act I of 1879 contains an exactly similar provision.

It is clear, therefore, that the suit so far as it relates to Gopalpur was rightly brought in the Manbhum Court, but that a suit in respect of Hajambasta can be brought only in the Revenue Office of the district of Lohardaga. It was urged for the appellant that as the agency in respect of this last-mentioned toke was created in the district of Manbhum, and as the papers, accounts, and monies collected were to be made over to the plaintiff's Sadar cutcherry in the district of Manbhum, the cause of action arose in that district and the suit was rightly brought in the Manbhum Court. This argument is not in our opinion sound. The law referred to above requires the suit to be brought in some Court within the [429] district in which the land lies in respect of which the agency was created, and the question where the cause of action arose is material only in determining in which sub-division of the district the suit is to be brought.

The suit as regards toke Hajambasta has therefore in our opinion been rightly dismissed on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

That being so, and the suit being maintainable, if at all, for toke Gopalpur alone, the question of misjoinder does not arise.

Upon the question of limitation the Courts below have held, and we think rightly held, that the plaintiff is not entitled to reckon limitation from the end of Assin 1295 (which was within one year before the institution of the suit) as the time of determination of the agency as regards Gopalpur, because that agency came to an end in Jait 1294, and after a break in the service of the defendants they were appointed agents in a different toke, Hajambasta, where they served till Assin 1295.

But though the plaintiff is not entitled to reckon limitation from Assin 1295 as the time of determination of the agency, as he has alleged in his plaint that the fraud in the account rendered by the defendants came to light since Assin 1295, the question remains whether he is not on that ground entitled to reckon limitation from that date. That question the Courts below have upon the authority of the cases of Mackintosh v. Woomesh Chunder Bose (1) and Dhunput Singh v. Rohoman Mundul (2) answered in the negative, holding as a matter of law that as the plaintiff had the means of ascertaining the fraud, if there was any, if he had used reasonable diligence in examining the accounts, he was not entitled to reckon limitation from the time when he discovered the fraud.

We are unable to accept this decision as correct in law so far as regards the claim for money said to have been fraudulently misappropriated. The law on the subject is laid down in s. 33 of Act X of 1859, which, after enacting that suits for money in the hands of an agent, or for delivery of accounts or papers by an agent, may be brought at any time during the agency or within one year after the determination of the agency, provides that "if the person having the right to sue shall by means of fraud have been kept from the knowledge of the receipt of any such money [430] by the agent or if any fraudulent account shall have been rendered by the agent, the suit may be brought within one year from the time when the fraud shall have been first known to such person: but no such suit shall in any case (except the case of claims now existing as aforesaid) be brought at any time exceeding three years from the termination of the agency." This proviso no doubt does not apply to suits for delivery of papers, nor does it apply to suits for delivery of accounts, for the plaintiff having ex hypothesi come to know of the fraud in the accounts rendered does not require any further accounts to be delivered. But as regards suits for money misappropriated by an agent, and the receipt whereof has been kept from the knowledge of the plaintiff by means of fraud or in respect of which fraudulent accounts have been rendered, the proviso enlarges the period of limitation by giving a further period of one year from the discovery of the fraud, subject, however, to the restriction that the time is not to extend beyond three years from the termination of the agency. Now in the present suit there is a claim for a sum of money said to have been fraudulently misappropriated by the defendant, and the plaintiff alleges that the fraud in the accounts came to light since Assin 1295, and, accepting these allegations as correct, as the Courts below were bound to do when they decided the issues in bar without going into the merits, and seeing that the suit was brought within one year from the alleged discovery of the fraud and within three years from the termination of the agency, the case would come within the language of the proviso, and should not have been held to be barred by limitation. Nor do we feel much pressed by the argument, which was advanced on behalf of the defendants, and which is relied upon in some of the cases cited, that if the proviso is understood literally it will lead to the anomaly of leaving it in the power of the plaintiff to extend the period of limitation indefinitely if he chooses to abstain from discovering the fraud though he has the means of doing so, as such indefinite extension is prevented by the last clause in the proviso, which limits the extreme length of time to three years from the termination of the agency.

(2) 11 W.R. 163 and 9 W.R. 329.

The proviso to s. 33 quoted above has, however, received a limited construction in certain cases, some of which have been [431] referred to by the Courts below, and it becomes necessary to consider how far their decision is supported by those cases. Of the two cases relied on by the lower appellate Court, that of Mackintosh v. Woomesh Chunder Bose (1) is no doubt a strong case in favour of the respondent, as it was broadly laid down in that case that the plaintiff must be held to have had knowledge of the fraud when he had the means of knowledge, that is, when the fraudulent accounts were rendered. But this ruling is evidently opposed to the language of s. 33 of Act X of 1859, and it has never been followed. On the contrary, it has been explained and considerably qualified in the second case cited by the Court below, namely, the case of Dhunput Sing v. Rohoman Mundul (2). In this last-mentioned case, although the Court refused to accept a literal construction of s. 33 of Act X of 1859, and held on the facts before it that the suit had been rightly held as barred, one of the learned Judges, expressly said that means of knowledge and actual knowledge were not always the same thing, though sometimes the former may be said to be equivalent to the latter. And in an earlier stage of the same case, Dhunput Sing v. Rohoman Mundul (3) the same learned Judge observed:—"It is argued that when the accounts were delivered, the plaintiff had the means of knowing that a fraud had been committed, and that when he had the means of knowledge he must be taken to have known of the fraud. But we cannot give our assent to either of these propositions. An inspection of the accounts would, in many cases, give no information as to the fraud, which might be only discoverable by comparing the accounts with the other sources of information, nor are means of knowledge and knowledge in a general sense identical. Suppose a large mass of papers and accounts to be handed over by an agent to his employer, it may be that by a long, careful and patient examination of these a fraud would be discovered, and the employer has therefore in his hands the means of knowledge. But how can it be said that means of knowledge is in such a case equivalent to knowledge?" We may here observe in passing that the present case, so far as one can judge from the pleadings and the facts stated in the judgments of [432] the Courts below, seems to come within the scope of these observations. Then as to the question what is reasonable diligence within the meaning of the case of Dhunput Singh v. Rohoman Mundul (1), which must be exercised by the plaintiff to entitle him to the extended period of limitation, that must be a question of fact to be decided with reference to the facts of each case and to the points noted in the observations quoted above, and this has not in our opinion been done in this case. On the other hand, there is the case of Huree Mohun Gohoo v. Anund Chunder Mookerjee (2), which is not referred to in the case of Dhunput Singh v. Rohoman Mundul (1), in which this Court held that the plaintiff is entitled to sue within one year from the time that the fraud comes to his knowledge, and that s. 33 does not provide that the year should run from the time at which with proper diligence he might have discovered the fraud.

The cases bearing on the point are not therefore quite reconcilable, with one another, nor do those that are in favour of the respondents lay down any hard-and-fast rule of law. The only principle that can be deduced from these cases is that in suits for money misappropriated by an agent where fraudulent accounts have been rendered, the plaintiff has an extended period of limitation of one year, which, in the words of s. 33 of Act X of 1859, runs from the time when the fraud is first known to him, but in any particular case the Court, having regard to the nature of the fraud, the facility with which it may be known, and the likelihood of attention being called to it, may infer such knowledge when the means of knowledge first come, or have for a reasonable time been, within the plaintiff's reach, or in other words may hold the plaintiff fixed with constructive knowledge of the fraud. The Court must therefore in every such case ascertain when the plaintiff first had knowledge of the fraud, actual or constructive.

That can be done in a case like the present only after ascertaining the nature of the fraud, the facility for its detection, and the likelihood of attention being called to it. But no such enquiry has been made in this case in either of the Courts below.

That being so, the case, so far as it relates to the claim for money in respect of toke Gopalpur, must go back to the first Court to be [433] tried upon the question of limitation with reference to the foregoing remarks and also on the merits, if necessary. But the suit so far as regards the claim in respect of Hajambasta and the claim for papers and accounts in respect of Gopalpur has been rightly dismissed, and the decrees of the Courts below in regard to those portions of the claim will stand. Costs will abide the result.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

SAODAMINI DASI (Plaintiff) v. THE ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL AND OTHERS (Defendants).
[2nd and 16th December, 1892].

Hindu Law—Widow—Hindu widow's estate—Her right to dispose of accumulated income not made part of the inheritance—Intention of the widow in regard to it.

The executor of the will of a Hindu testator made over to the widow of the latter an aggregate sum consisting of accumulations of income accrued during eight years from her husband's death, undisposed of by his will. The money was not received by her as a capitalized part of the inheritance, but as income that had been accumulated during her tenure of her widow's estate. The widow did no act showing an intention on her part to make this sum of money, the greater part of which she invested in Government securities, part of the family inheritance for the benefit of the heirs. After the lapse of about twenty years she disposed of it as her own.

Held, that the money so invested by the widow belonged to her as income derived from her widow's estate and was subject to her disposition.

[F., 28 M. 1 (5); R., 25 M. 351 (353); 16 C.W.N. 831 = 13 Ind. Cas. 691; D., 7 Ind. Cas. 27 (29).]

APPEAL from a decree (18th May 1889) of the appellate High Court, affirming a decree (5th September 1883) of the High Court in its original jurisdiction.

Three suits, consolidated and heard together by order of the High Court, gave rise to this appeal, in which the question was as to the right of a Hindu widow to dispose of the accumulations of [434] the income of the estate held by her as a widow, she having invested the accumulations and disposed of them before her death by deed of trust. One judgment, given in these three suits by TREVELYAN, J., reported as Girish Chunder Roy v. Broughton (1), was affirmed on appeal by a Divisional Bench (PETHERAM, C.J., and WILSON, J.) reported as Saodamini Dasi v. Broughton (2). The judgments fully state the case, of which the facts also appear in their Lordships' judgment on this appeal.

The appellant was the daughter of Nobokumar Mullick, deceased on the 16th March 1856, and his wife Badamkumari, deceased, on the 18th September, 1886, they having had three other daughters, but no son. Nobokumar's estate, after the life interest of Badamkumari, his widow, devolved upon the appellant and her sister, Saratkumrai. On the 14th August, 1866, Shamcharan Mullick, brother of Nobokumar, as executor of his will made over to Badamkumari, Rs. 2,89,000, the accumulations, during eight years of the income of her deceased husband's estate, together with other money. The above sum was made over to her as widow, when events had rendered impossible an adoption, contemplated by Nobokumar's will under certain restrictions imposed by it, and this money was taken in settlement of disputes between the widow and Shamcharan as to her rights. By deed of that date she acknowledged receipt of it "in satisfaction of her demands in respect of the residuary estate of Nobokumar, and undisposed of by his will." And soon after, out of the above sum, she invested Rs. 2,69,500 in Government paper, and so invested it remained. On the 12th July 1886, Badamkumari indorsed these notes, with others for Rs. 10,500, representing the interest obtained upon them, to the Administrator-General whom she constituted trustee by a deed executed on that date, termed, in the Court of first instance, the deed of settlement. On the same date she made her will. Both were in the English language and form, and the deed, in the material part, is set forth elsewhere (1). As to the will, a caveat having been filed, the Administrator-General commenced proceedings which resulted in the first of these three suits, and in 1887 the two others were filed. Of the latter, [435] the first was Grishchunder Roy's suit, he suing as grandson of Badamkumari, and a beneficiary under her will, to have the trusts of the deed of 12th July 1886 carried out. The third suit was brought by Saodamini, the present appellant, who claimed the Rs. 2,69,500 as belonging to the estate of Nobokumar, her grandfather, and part of the estate which she, and her sister Saratkumari, had inherited. She also claimed to have the "deed of settlement" of 12th July 1886 set aside.

Issues of fact relating to the testamentary and disposing capacity of the settler Badamkumari, on that date, she having died in the following September, were finally disposed of by the concurrent judgments of the Courts below, establishing her capacity on that date, contrary to the assertions of this present appellant. The only remaining question now raised in this appeal was the following, viz., whether, according to Hindu law, Badamkumari had power to alienate, as she purported to do on the above date, the two sums of Rs. 2,69,500 and Rs. 10,500; and whether those sums, one or both, did not constitute a portion of the estate of her deceased husband; and also whether they on her death, on the 7th September following, did not descend to this appellant and her sister. The Courts below had also concurred in holding that Badamkumari had, under the circumstances of the case, with due reference to Hindu law, a legal right to dispose of these sums; and had, accordingly, dismissed Saodamini's suit.

Sir Horace Davey, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant:—The widow represents the estate of her husband, as heiress, but she cannot alienate accumulations that have been made, as the sum invested by Badamkumari was part of the principal estate. The Hindu widow has no power to alienate invested savings, where her acts have already indicated her intention to add them to the family estate. The prima facie presumption in this case is that the accumulations followed the principal from which they had, as income, been derived. The deed of acknowledgment signed in 1866 shows that the Rs. 2,89,000 were taken as part of the deceased husband's estate with reference to this will. This being so, on the widow's death so much of that amount as had not been expended by her, having been by her invested in a permanent security, devolved on her [436] husband's heirs. During the years during which the income was accumulated in hands other than her's she could not increase the principal estate; but, during twenty years from the receipt by her of the money, she made no attempt to alienate it. However, taking it that the question rests upon her intention alone to make this sum part of the inheritance, or not to make it part, then the contention is that her intention was clearly shown by her having invested it, and thus capitalized it. Reference was made to Gonda Koor v. Koor Oodey Singh (1); Sheolochun Singh v. Saheb Singh (2); Rabutti Dossee v. Sib Chunder Mullick (3); Isri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (4). There was so far an indication of the widow's intention by her having capitalized the income, that the burden of proof rests on the respondents to show that it was not her intention to treat these savings as added to the inheritance; and unless the contrary is established, it must be taken that they were added to it.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. H. W. Cave, for Grishchunder Roy:—The fund in question, accumulated income, was not "capitalized" in the sense that it was made part of the family estate of inheritance. The widow received this accumulated income, as to which there was no direction in her husband's will, with full power over it as her own, and showed no intention to do otherwise than retain it for herself. The evidence shows that she intended to blend it with her other investments of income, and that it was never amalgamated with the family estate. Investment of it in a permanent security is no sign of her intention to effect such an amalgamation. She had full power to spend, or to accumulate, and the mere fact of the accumulation having taken place is insufficient to render this sum part of the inheritance. As heir and representative of the estate, she would have had power to accumulate, and might have done so without its being necessary for her to have received authority in her husband's will so to do. In that respect she had full power as a widow. The principle on which this case should be determined is not distinguishable from that which was held to determine [437] the right to the accumulations after the decease of the testator in Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (5).

Mr. J. H. A. Branson appeared for the Administrator-General, and stated his position as a trustee, without more.

Mr. R. V. Doyne replied.

On a subsequent day, 16th December, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by:—

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAND:—On this appeal the only question raised for decision is whether Badamkumari Dasi, the widow of Nobokumar Mullick, a member of the Mullick family of Calcutta, had power to dispose as she did, by a deed executed by her on the 12th July 1886, about two months before she died, of certain Government of India promissory notes. These Government securities were purchased with a sum of Rs. 2,69,500, which she had received out of her husband's estate, and a further sum of Rs. 10,500, being interest which had accrued during her lifetime on that amount. Mr. Justice Trevelyan held that Badamkumari had absolute power to alienate and dispose of these securities, and his decision was confirmed by the appellate Court.

The appellant's contention has been that the sum of Rs. 2,69,500 and the Government securities for that amount, were possessed by Badamkumari, not as her own property with a power of alienation, but as part of the estate of her husband Nobokumar Mullick, in which she had the right of interest only of a Hindu widow.

The circumstances in which she obtained possession of this fund, which are very peculiar, may be shortly stated. Her husband, who was a man of very large means real and personal, by his will dated the 15th March 1856, appointed his widow and his younger brother Shamcharan Mullick, his executors, to manage his estate; and he directed that his widow should receive for maintenance and for the expenses of religious acts and observances one lak of rupees. Having no son, he, by the 9th clause of his will, made the following provision in regard to his general estate: "Should my executor Sreeman Shamcharan Mullick, my younger brother, have more than two sons within eight years from this date, in that [438] case such son shall be made my adopted son. Should such adopted son die within the said appointed period of eight years, in that case should there be other sons of my brother within the specified time of eight years, power is reserved for adopting up to the extent of a third time. Should my brother have no more than two sons, or the adopted sons shall die one after the other, in that case the share belonging to me of Company's papers and lands and houses and gardens and so forth, the whole real and personal estate will be received by my younger brother, Sreeman Shamcharan Mullick." This, which was the only clause in the will regulating the disposal of the general estate of the testator, made no special provision in regard to the income of the estate during the eight years, in the course of which the testator's brother might have a son who could be validly adopted as the testator's heir.

Shamcharan Mullick had one son only, and consequently the power of adoption conferred by the testator on his widow could not be exercised. During the eight years which elapsed after the testator's death Shamcharan Mullick himself administered the estate, and received the income and retained it. On the expiry of that time Badamkumari not only required payment of the lakh of rupees to which she had right by the special direction in her husband's will, but also of the eight years' income which had not been specifically disposed of by the will, and which she maintained to be intestate succession falling to her as her husband's widow and heiress. Shamcharan Mullick contested this claim, and seems for a time to have maintained that the income of these years became his property under the general destination to him of the real and personal estate of the testator.

This dispute and other questions which had arisen between the parties were settled by a deed of agreement dated the 14th August 1866. That deed narrates this will, and states the question which had arisen regarding the accumulated income of eight years; and the nature of the widow's claim and the arrangement in regard to it are thus stated:—"And I the said Srimati Badamkumari Dasi as the sole widow, heiress and legal personal representative of the said Nobokumar Mullick, deceased, claim to have the accumulations of the said estate from the time of his death down to the expiration of the said eight years next succeeding his death, [439] the same as I contend and am advised being residuary estate undisposed of by the said will of the said Nobokumar Mullick. And whereas the said Shamcharan Mullick has consented and agreed to concede the point in question and to give up to me as such heiress of the said deceased the accumulations of the said estate from the death of the said deceased for the period of eight years, the time within which the contingency of a son being born to the said Shamcharan Mullick to be adopted by me was limited and fixed. "The deed then goes on to state that, in order to avoid the delay and expense of taking an account of the accumulations, it had been agreed by the parties that the amount should be taken at Rs. 2,89,000, and this amount having been paid to her, Badamkumari, granted a full discharge of all her claims for these accumulations. Before leaving the deed it should be mentioned that, in respect of payment then made to her, Badamkumari also discharged Shamcharan Mullick of her legacy of Rs. 1,00,000, and Rs. 62,450 of interest which had accrued on it; and she also granted a discharge for payment of a sum of Rs. 24,000 which she accepted as compensation for relinquishing her right to live in her husband's family house on the estate. The several sums payable and paid under this deed amounted in the aggregate to Rs. 4,75,450, and the payment was made in currency notes of various amounts, the most of these being one thousand rupee notes, others being notes for Rs. 500 and Rs. 100.

Out of the sum of Rs. 2,89,000 of accumulated income, Badamkumari paid away about Rs. 20,500 for law and other costs, and with the balance, as well as with the other sums above mentioned received from her brother-in-law, she purchased Indian Government promissory notes yielding interest payable half-yearly. She survived till the 7th September 1886, and, as already mentioned, in July of that year she executed a deed of settlement and trust, by which she transferred to the Administrator-General of Bengal as trustee the securities in which she had invested the sum received as the eight years of accumulated income from her husband's estate, after deducting costs and charges, and also other Indian Government promissory notes for Rs. 10,600, being part of the interest which had accrued on the securities originally bought, which had not been spent by her in the meantime. The purposes [440] of the trust were generally the payment to herself or for her use of the interest or dividends of the securities during her life, and after her death a provision that the securities should be held in trust for Grishchunder Roy, her grandson, whom she had resolved to bring up as her son, and his heirs and assigns, for his and their absolute use and benefit.

The appellant, alleging that she and her sister (called as a defendant) are the only heirs now alive of Nobokumar Mullick entitled to succeed as his heirs in intestacy, has brought her suit, claiming right to the Government securities, and in her plaint she alleges that these form part of the estate of Nobokumar Mullick, that Badamkumari was not entitled to endorse or convey them away, as she did by the deed of the 12th July 1886, and that this deed is invalid.

The ground on which this claim has been supported in argument is that, under the provisions of the ninth clause of the will of Nobokumar Mullick, there was an implied direction by the testator that the income of his estate should be accumulated and capitalized for the eight years during which Shamcharan Mullick might have a son to be adopted, and that under the deed of arrangement and compromise and release of the 14th August 1866, between Badamkumari and Shamcharan Mullick, Badamkumari claimed and accepted the accumulated income as a capitalized sum which in her hands was part of the capital of the estate of her husband; that she therefore acquired only a Hindu widow's interest in the fund, and was not entitled to alienate it or deal with it in any way which would deprive Nobokumar Mullick's heirs of their right to receive it as part of his estate to which they had a right of succession. If this view of the purport and effect of these instruments were sound, there might be great force in the argument of the appellant.

Their Lordships are, however, clearly of opinion that the view presented by the appellant is not warranted by the terms of the will and the deed of arrangement. As regards the will of Nobokumar Mullick, all parties are agreed that it gives no specific direction as to what was to become of the income of the estate until the adoption of a son to be born to Shamcharan Mullick, or until the expiry of the eight years during which a son, to be [441] adopted, might be born. There is no direction in the deed either to capitalize or to accumulate that income, and nothing, in their Lordships' opinion, from which such a direction can be held to have been implied. The income as it fell due each year after the testator's death became either the property of Shamcharan Mullick under the general destination to him of the testator's whole real and personal estate (and were the question still open, it seems difficult to suggest a reason for holding that it was not covered and conveyed by that destination), or it was entirely intestate succession which, as it fell due, became the absolute property of Badamkumari as the widow and heiress of her husband. And accordingly it was this right which Badamkumari maintained in the dispute on the subject which arose between her and Shamcharan Mullick, and which he yielded to her by the deed of agreement and release. The language of the deed being: "And whereas the said Shamcharan Mullick has consented and agreed to concede the point in question and to give up to me as such heiress of the said deceased"—that is, as appears from the sentence preceding, as the heiress and legal personal representative of the said Nobokumar Mullick,—“the accumulations of the said estate from the death of the said deceased for the period of eight years.” The claim of Badamkumari to this part of the income of her husband's estate was made by her as heiress of her husband entitled to income not disposed of. She claimed this income as her absolute property, and their Lordships can see nothing in the language of the deed of agreement, or in the transaction with Shamcharan Mullick, which can support the appellant's contention that she agreed to receive this income as capital in which she should acquire only the estate of a Hindu widow, or that the nature of the fund should differ in any way after she received it from what it had been before.

There is nothing to support the appellant's argument in the circumstance that the income was received in one sum and only after the lapse of eight years after her husband's death. The right she claimed was to receive payment as the income came in. That was a question between her and Shamcharan Mullick. If he had immediately on the testator's death taken the same view as he took when the agreement was made, all the income would have [442] reached the widow's hands as it accrued, and there could have been no question as to the character in which she took it. It cannot make any difference that the title was not admitted for eight years, and that pending the uncertainty the income was accumulated. The administration of the estate was left entirely in the hands of Shamcharan Mullick, and it was only after the lapse of eight years that Badamkumari received from him even the lakh of rupees left to her for her maintenance, and that a general settlement of her claims was made.

In this state of the facts there seems to be no ground for the appellant's claim. Although at the earlier stage of the argument it was suggested that, even if the fund was to be regarded as income and not capitalized estate, it nevertheless became the husband's estate, because of the subsequent actings of Badamkumari; this view was hardly maintained in the reply by the appellant's Counsel.

The appellant's Counsel contended that the savings of a Hindu widow must be presumed to have been made for the benefit of her husband's estate. Without examining the precise result of the decisions, it is sufficient to say that in this case there is no room for any such presumption, for the corpus of the estate never came to the widow, but was taken by Shamcharan Mullick under the will, and the income to which the widow succeeded was separated from it, and became and was dealt with as an entirely separate fund. To use the words of Mr. Justice Trevelyan in reference to Badamkumari's position (1):—"There was no estate of her husband's in her hands for her to augment." She did nothing to indicate an intention to make the fund received, or the interest on it, part of her husband's estate which was in other hands, or to justify the inference that she wished it to revert to her husband's heirs. It was said she had placed it in investments of a permanent nature. Had she done so, it does not appear to their Lordships that this circumstance alone would have added the fund to the estate devolving on her husband's heirs. But the fact is that, having received the money in currency notes which yielded no return, and the keeping of which was attended with much risk, she at once placed it, as any prudent person would do, [443] in securities, investing it in Government promissory notes yielding regular interest, but which were negotiable instruments transmissible by mere indorsation. It is important also to observe that the other funds which she received from Shamcharan Mullick were invested precisely in the same way and at the same time, and that for purposes of investment therefore the fund in dispute was not kept separate, but was mingled with her general personal means; and she seems to have used the interest and income of the whole indiscriminately for her maintenance, and spent the greater part of it. It may be further mentioned that, while her trust settlement by which she conveyed the income in question was executed in 1886, this deed superseded an earlier testamentary deed of 1882, which she cancelled in 1886, in which she distinctly records her view that she had received the fund as her absolute property, and had placed it in Government securities "for my own absolute benefit, and without any intention or desire to make the same or any part thereof accumulations to the estate of the said Baboo Nobokumar Mullick, but on the contrary with the full intention of having, retaining and exercising full and uncontrolled dominion by will, deed or otherwise over the same and every part thereof."

Their Lordships, being thus of opinion that the fund in question was not in any sense received by Badamkumari as capital or capitalized income of her husband's estate, but was received as income which, under the arrangement with Shamcharan Mullick, was her own absolute property, and further that she never indicated any intention to make the same part of her husband's estate for the benefit of his heirs, will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal, and the appellant must pay the costs of the appeal, which, however, will be one set of costs only, to the respondent Grishchunder Roy.

THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KISHUNWA.* [24th January, 1893.]

Arms Act (XI of 1878), ss. 13, 19—Going armed without license—License to carry arms, production of—Retainer carrying arms.

A servant of a person who possessed a license for two swords and a gun, which license also covered one retainer, was stopped by the police on the road while carrying a sword. On being asked to produce his license he was unable to do so, it not then being with him. No opportunity was afforded him of producing the license, but he was charged with an offence under s. 19 of Act XI of 1878, and on these materials convicted and fined.

Held, that the conviction was wrong. The law does not require a licensee always to have his license with him. If under such circumstances on being required to produce it, he is prepared to do so on a reasonable opportunity being given him to get it, and it exists, he should not be prosecuted; if prosecuted the production of the license at the trial is a sufficient answer to the charge of infringing the Arms' Act.

Held, further, that a license granted to a person to carry arms and including a retainer, authorizes any retainer to carry the arms specified with the permission of his master, and does not restrict him merely to carry them while in the actual presence of his master.

[F., 3 C.W.N. 394 (395).]

THE accused, a servant of one Waris Ali, the manager of the Raja of Makandpore, was charged with an offence under s. 219 of Act XI of 1878. It appeared that he was stopped by the police while proceeding along the road carrying a sword, and when asked to produce the license failed to do so. It further appeared that the accused's master had a license which covered one retainer and was a license for two swords and one gun. Three witnesses were called for the prosecution, who merely deposed to the accused being caught with the sword going along the road, and in his examination by the Deputy Magistrate, the [445] accused stated that the license was not with him at the time, but with another man who was left behind.

The Deputy Magistrate recorded the following judgment:—

"The accused admits not having shown the license of his master to the police when he was caught; his explanation is that the license was with another servant who was behind him. As a retainer he could not go armed without his master. Technically he is guilty, as he did not show his license to the police when he was caught; in fact he had no license at the time. The Court finds the accused guilty of going armed without a license, punishable under s. 19, Act XI of 1878, and sentences him to pay a fine of rupee one only."

The Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court with the following report:—

"A license was granted to one Syed Waris Ali, of which I extract the following relevant entries:—

'License to possess arms and to go armed, &c., granted to Syed Waris Ali. One retainer is covered by the license. License for two swords and one gun.'

* Criminal Reference No. 4 of 1893, made by A. C. Brett, Esq., Sessions Judge of Gaya, dated the 6th of January 1893, against the order passed by Baboo R. A. N. Singh, Deputy Magistrate of Gaya, dated the 8th of October 1892.

"A servant of the licensee was found carrying a sword, and he had not the license in his pocket. He has been fined a rupee.

"I have called upon the Deputy Magistrate for an explanation, and this has been sent to me with some covering remarks by the District Magistrate. The arguments used by these officers would make it an offence for a licensee to send a retainer (even though covered by the license) across the road with a sword in his hand unless he gave him the license to put in his pocket. And if the licensee had two retainers (covered by the license) two swords, and (presumably) only one license, he would be placed on the horns of a dilemma.

"I do not think the fine is warranted by law, and I submit the record accordingly."

No one appeared at the hearing of the reference.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

These proceedings were very arbitrary and unjust. It is not denied that the master of the accused has a license sufficient to cover the sword carried by him. He has been convicted simply because he had not the license with him, and he was given no opportunity of producing it before he was prosecuted. The law does not require, nor the license provide, that a license to carry [446] arms shall always be on the person of the particular man. If, on being required to show his license, the bearer of arms is prepared to produce it on being given a reasonable opportunity to get it, and such license exists, he should not be prosecuted. The production of the license at the trial is a sufficient answer to the charge of infringing the Arms' Act and to show that the prosecution was without proper consideration.

It has also been said in support of the order that because the license was given for one retainer to carry arms, the arms could not be carried except in the presence of the master, the actual licensee. This is a very narrow construction of the terms of the license which cannot be reasonably placed upon it. The reasonable construction is that any retainer can carry the particular arms with the permission of his master. We further observe that the award of a portion of the fine to the Police officer who arrested the accused was injudicious as encouraging interference without sufficient cause. When the Police officer required the accused to produce the license for the sword he was carrying, and was told that he had one, not on his person but at home, the Police officer, if he had any doubt on the subject, should have accompanied the accused to his house to satisfy himself by seeing it.

The conviction and sentence must be set aside, and the fine, if paid, refunded.

RAM GOPAL BYSACK AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. NURUMUDDIN alias NOOR MAHAMED MUNDUL (Defendant).^{*} [16th December, 1892.]

Fishery, right of—Jalkar—Immoveable property—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1869), s. 3—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106.

A jalkar, or right of fishery, as being a benefit arising out of land covered by water, comes within the definition of "immoveable property" set out in [447] the General Clauses Act (I of 1868), and is therefore immoveable property under s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

[R., 14 C L.J. 572 = 12 Ind. Cas. 305 (307).]

THIS was a suit to recover possession of a jalkar or right of fishery. The plaintiffs, the patnidars under one Radha Mohun of a certain mahal, alleged that the defendant held the jalkar by virtue of a lease from Radha Mohun for a certain period which had expired, and that, as he refused to give up possession, they brought the suit to eject him. The defendant pleaded that he had held possession of the jalkar, not under a temporary lease, but as kaimi ijaradar, and that he was entitled to notice to quit.

The Munsif held that the defendant was a mere tenant-at-will, holding at the pleasure of the landlord, and that notice to quit was not necessary, and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession.

The Subordinate Judge held that the defendant had no permanent interest in the jalkar, but that he had such a holding as made a notice to quit necessary before he could be ejected. He observed:—

"It has been contended by the plaintiffs that jalkar is not 'immoveable property.' I think the contention is not valid. The pleader for the plaintiffs contended that it is an incorporeal right, and that the latter portion of s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply. In the case of Parbutty Nath Roy Chowdhry v. Mudho Paroe (1) it was held that jalkar right is not an easement, but an interest in immoveable property: the defendant's jalkar right, therefore, falls within the scope of the latter portion of s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. Moreover, in a Full Bench case, Rajendronath Mookhopadhyaya v. Bassidar Ruhman Khondkar (2), the High Court have held that a ryot whose tenancy is determinable at the will of the landlord cannot be ejected without notice. Following the broad principle laid down in that case, I think a notice is necessary, though the tenure is a jalkar one. As no notice has been served on the defendant, the plaintiffs' case must fail."

The Subordinate Judge accordingly dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jassoda Nandan Paramanick, for the appellants Baboo Kishory Lal Sarkar, for the respondent.

[443] The judgment of the Court (NORRIS and MACPHERSON, JJ.) was as follows:—

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 39 of 1892, against the decree of Baboo Krishto Chunder Dass, Subordinate Judge of Pubna and Bogra, dated the 25th of August 1891, reversing the decree of Baboo Lal Bahary Bhaduri, Munsif of Nowabgunge, dated the 30th of November 1889.

(1) 3 C. 276 = 1 C.L.R. 592.

(2) 2 C. 146.

JUDGMENT.

The only question argued in this second appeal by the learned pleader for the appellant is that the lower appellate Court has erroneously held that the jalkar right in dispute between the parties in this suit was immoveable property within the meaning of s 106 of the Transfer of Property Act.

We think that the decision is a correct one. We are of opinion that this jalkar right is immoveable property within the definition of immoveable property as set out in the General Clauses Act; that it is a benefit to arise out of land covered by water; and this conclusion we think is justified by the expression of opinion of at least three of the learned Judges who were parties to the Full Bench decision of Fadu Jhala v. Gour Mohun Jhala (1).

The appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), ss. 44, 45 and 353—Powers of Chairman, delegation of—Prosecution for obstructing drain.

The proviso to s. 45 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, cannot be considered as altogether overriding the body of the section, and relates only to specific acts in which an express or implied consent may have been given or held to have been given. It cannot be held to apply to a general authority, verbally given by a Chairman to a Vice-Chairman, to institute prosecutions under the Act, as such power can only, under the body of the section, be delegated by a written order.

[449] In a prosecution instituted by a Vice-Chairman for obstructing a drain, where it appeared that the Chairman had some months previously verbally given the Vice-Chairman general authority to institute all such prosecutions under s. 353 of the Act, and it appeared that a conviction had been obtained before a Bench of Magistrates, and that on appeal to the Magistrate the conviction had been upheld, the Magistrate himself being the Chairman and hearing the appeal with the express consent of the accused, and where it was contended in revision before the High Court that although there was no written order by the Chairman delegating his powers, it must be taken upon the facts proved and the circumstances of the case that the prosecution had been instituted with the express or implied consent of the Chairman obtained, both previously and subsequently, within the terms of the proviso to s. 45.

Held, that the proviso did not apply to the case, that the prosecution had not been properly instituted, and that the conviction and sentence must be set aside.

for removing an encroachment on a drain. The accused, about two or three years prior to the date of the notice, built, with the permission of the Commissioners, a shed covered with tiles, and some time previous to the notice he constructed some brickwork in the shape of a posta or abutment beyond the water-fall mark of the shed, and thereby obstructed the drain in question and, as alleged by the prosecution, wholly stopped the flow of the water.

The notice, which was dated the 30th January 1892, was signed by the Vice-Chairman, and directed the removal within 8 days of the entire length of the posta. This notice not having been complied with, the prosecution was instituted on the 9th May 1892, the complainant's name being given as Audhor Chunder Ghose, an overseer of the Municipality. On the case coming on to be heard before a Bench of Honorary Magistrates, a preliminary objection was raised as to the authority of the Vice-Chairman, who issued the summons, to institute the prosecution. This objection was overruled by the Bench, who relied on s. 45 of the Act. On the merits, the accused pleaded that as the drain and the land adjoining were private property, the Municipality had no right to interfere. The Bench, however, considered that, under [450] s. 190, the Municipality had power to control all drains, whether public or private, and convicted the accused and fined him Rs. 20 and directed him to pay the costs, Rs. 4.

A further objection was raised at the hearing to the effect that the proceedings were barred by limitation, but the Court held that the offence was a continuing one, and referred to the provisions of s. 353 of the Act.

Against the conviction the accused appealed to the District Magistrate, who was also the Chairman of the Municipality. No objection was, however, taken by the accused on that ground to the appeal being heard by him, although the Magistrate himself called attention to his position before the appeal was argued.

The following was the judgment of the District Magistrate:—

"I drew the attention of Counsel for the appellant to the fact that the appellate Court is also Chairman of the Municipality. Counsel said that he had no objection to my hearing the appeal. I therefore hear the appeal.

"The appellant has been convicted, under s. 218 of the Municipal Act, with failing to comply with a requisition issued by the Municipal Commissioners of Howrah under s. 202 of the Act to remove an encroachment from an open drain within the Municipality. The points to be decided in this case are, (1) whether the notice was a legal one, (2) whether it was duly served, (3) whether the accused failed to comply with it.

"As regards the first point, there is the clearest evidence that the drain was an open one. It was also subject to the control of the Commissioners (s. 190 of the Municipal Act). An attempt is made to argue that 'open' means 'public,' and that as the drain (as alleged by the appellant) is a private one, s. 202 does not apply. An open drain is, however, a drain which is open to the air, as distinct from a covered drain, and the interpretation proposed is quite untenable. There is also ample evidence that the appellant made an obstruction or encroachment in this drain. Nay actually, since the case began, he has filled it up with earth. He says the drain is a private one, but that has nothing to do with the matter. All drains, public or private, are subject to the control of the Commissioners, and if open, are protected from obstruction (s. 202). It would indeed be monstrous that a person should be allowed to infect a whole neighbourhood by stopping up a so-called private drain (the expression does not occur in the whole Municipal Act). It is urged that the Municipality should have proceeded under s. 191. It is, however, clear that the Municipality had power in this case to proceed under s. 202, and it is [451] not for the appellant to dictate to the Commissioners what course they should pursue.

"As regards the service of the notice, the lower Court accepted a written admission of the fact made by the appellant's pleader. It was hardly wise to do that, and so acting under s. 428 of the Criminal Procedure Code I supplemented the record by taking formal evidence of the service. It clearly proved that the appellant failed to comply with the notice.

"Some points raised by counsel may be noticed. The case was not barred, for the offence (failure to comply with a notice) is a continuing one and its occurrence was brought to the notice of Commissioners on the 6th May 1892.

"The Vice-Chairman had the implied consent of the Chairman to institute the prosecution, vide s. 45 of the Municipal Act.

"I do not know what the petition of appeal means by a definition of 'encroachment' in the Municipal Act. There is no such definition. The wording of s. 202 is 'obstruction or encroachment.'

"I dismiss the appeal."

Against this decision the accused then moved the High Court to send for the record and reverse the order of the District Magistrate on the following, amongst other grounds,—

(1) That the District Magistrate had erred in dealing with the case under s. 218 of the Act.

(2) That the six hours' previous notice in writing, prescribed by s. 191 of the Act, had not been given.

(3) That the District Magistrate ought to have considered that no sanction was given under s. 353.

A rule was issued calling on the Magistrate to show cause why the conviction should not be set aside, and in reply thereto the District Magistrate stated, inter alia, that for some months previous the Vice-Chairman had his express consent to institute proceedings under s. 353 of the Act, but did not allege that any written order had been given or any express permission granted to institute this case.

The only point material for the purposes of this report, having regard to the judgment of the High Court, was that relating to the power of the Vice-Chairman to institute the prosecution.

Mr. T. A. Apcar, for the petitioner.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the opposite party.

[452] Mr. T. A. Apcar, amongst other objections which it is not material to notice, contended that the conviction could not be upheld on the ground that the prosecution had been instituted without the order or consent of the Commissioners as required by s. 353. Under s. 44 the Chairman was vested with the powers of the Commissioners, but there was nothing to show here that the Chairman had ordered the prosecution or given his consent to it; the Vice-Chairman could only exercise the power of the Chairman when the latter had delegated his power by a written order, as provided by s. 45, which was not alleged in this case, and the mere general sanction, given verbally by the Chairman to the Vice-Chairman, to institute all such cases was not sufficient.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby) contended that the provisions of the second paragraph of s. 44 were ample to cover this case.

It was clear that the Chairman had given the necessary authority, and though not by written order, the prosecution could not be held invalid, if it appeared it had been instituted with the express or implied consent of the Chairman previously or subsequently obtained. Here the Chairman stated that he had given his consent previously, and apart from that he had himself heard the appeal and had undoubtedly sanctioned the prosecution subsequently, for he had upheld the conviction. The case was clearly covered by the terms of that paragraph of the section, and it could not, therefore, be held that the prosecution was improperly instituted.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

It is unnecessary, in the view we take of this matter, to consider more than the first objection raised to the conviction and sentence under s. 218 of the Municipal Act of 1884. That objection is that the prosecution has been instituted without proper authority within the terms of s. 353, read with ss. 44 and 45 of the Act. It is not denied that no order or consent of the Commissioners was previously obtained before prosecution, nor has it been contended that the Chairman, exercising the powers of a Commissioner under s. 44 ordered this prosecution, nor that the Chairman, by any written order, delegated to the Vice-Chairman this duty. But it has been stated by the District Magistrate, who heard the appeal—and this been repeated in the explanation [453] given on the issue of the rule—that for some months past the Vice-Chairman had his express consent to institute proceedings under s. 353 of the Act. It seems to us that the law requires not express consent, but a written order where such general powers are delegated by the Chairman. No doubt the proviso sets out that nothing done by the Vice-Chairman which might have been done under the authority of a written order from the Chairman, shall be invalid for want or defect of such written order, if it be done with the express or implied consent of the Chairman previously or subsequently obtained. But we do not understand that proviso to altogether override the body of the section to which it is annexed. It seems to us rather that the proviso relates to specific acts in which an express or implied consent may have been given or held to have been given. In this particular instance the authority contended for is a general authority which had been given many months previously. We think that is not the authority contemplated by the Act. We think, therefore, that the prosecution has been improperly instituted and that the conviction and sentence should be set aside.

H. T. H.

Rule made absolute and conviction set aside.

SHEO PERSHAD SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants Nos. 4 and 5) v. SAHEB LAL AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)* AND RAJKUMAR LAL AND OTHERS (Defendants 2, 3, and 4) v. SAHEB LAL AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs).* [20th August, 1892.]

Hindu law—Joint family—Mitakshara—Debts incurred by agent of joint family—Sale of joint family property in execution of decree—Suit and decree against managing members of a joint family business—Effect of sale against other members though not parties to decree—Execution proceedings, setting aside of.

The plaintiffs, who were the members of a joint Hindu family, sought to recover a share in certain properties on the allegation that they were [454] joint family properties, but wrongfully sold in execution of a decree upon a bond executed by their paternal uncles L and S and one B. S. The family was a trading family and carried on a money-lending business under the supervision of L and S. One Z M had dealings with L and S, and in the course of such dealings he deposited a certain sum of money with them for which the above bond was executed, in which certain properties belonging to the family were pledged as security. Subsequently Z M sued on this bond, obtained a decree and put up the properties for sale, which were purchased by some of the defendants, who dispossessed the plaintiffs. The share of the properties advertised for sale, certified in the sale certificates granted to the defendants to have passed to them, was the share of the whole family in the properties sold, but it was described as the right, title and interest of L and S, the person sued. Held, that L and S, though not the managers of the family, were yet its accredited agents in the management of the money lending business, and as such had the authority of the other members to pledge the family properties for a joint debt contracted in the ordinary course of that business.

Johurra Bibee v. Sreegopal Misser (1) referred to.

Held, also, that the sale having been under a decree in respect of a joint debt of the family, the whole interest of the family in the properties in dispute passed at the sale, although L and S only out of the members of the family were sued.

that the properties were joint family properties. The genealogy of the family, which was governed by the Mitakshara law, was as follows:—

The plaintiffs alleged that on the death of their father, Raghu Nath Lal, in 1862, they lived as members of a joint family with their grandfather, Meher Chand Sahu, who was the manager of the family until his death, which occurred in 1872; that on the death of Meher Chand Sahu, their paternal uncle, Gajadhar Sahu, became the manager of the family and continued as such up to 1879, when a separation took place between the plaintiffs and their paternal uncles, the defendants 10 and 11; that the latter never became managers of the family, nor did they ever have any authority to borrow money on behalf of the members of the family; that in 1880 Gajadhar Sahu died, leaving him surviving his widow and heiress Ganga Koer, who on the 14th Assin 1296 (4th October 1888) executed a will in favour of the plaintiff Gharib Chand, and gave the latter all the property left by her husband; that the defendants 10 and 11, having on their own account, on the 25th June 1872, borrowed a certain sum of money, executed a bond in favour of one Zaki Mistri, and pledged the family properties mahal Adai and mouzah Udaibigha; that the said Zaki Mistri brought a suit and obtained a decree against them; that on the death of Zaki Mistri his son, the defendant Hortal Mistri, caused mahal Adai and mouzah Udaibigha to be sold by auction, and himself, along with other defendants, purchased the right, title and interest of the defendants 10 and 11. The plaintiffs contended that although only the right, title and interest of the defendants 10 and 11 had passed by the decree, yet the auction-purchaser [456] defendants wrongfully took possession of the entire estate belonging to the joint family, and that the bond which was executed by the defendants and their gomashtha, Bishen Sahu, was not for the benefit of the family nor for any legal necessity.

The defendants 10 and 11 did not appear.

The defendants 4, 5, and 9 in No. 271 of 1890, and the defendants 3 and 4 in No. 170 of 1891, appeared, filed written statements and contended that mahal Adai and mouzah Udaibigha were not the ancestral properties of the plaintiffs, but were the separate properties of the defendants Nos. 10 and 11, Lalji Sahu and Sitaram; that the money-lending business was also the separate business of the latter, and that the properties were rightly sold in execution of the decree of Zaki Mistri, in whose favour the bond was executed. They further denied the separation above referred to, and questioned the genuineness and validity of the will of Ganga Koer.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit with costs.

The defendants Nos. 4 and 5 appealed to the High Court and the plaintiffs cross-appealed.

The nature of the arguments sufficiently appears in the judgment of the High Court (PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ.) which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In the two suits out of which the present appeals arise, the plaintiffs, who are members of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, seek to recover a share in two properties named [457] Adai and Udaibigha, on the allegations that these properties were joint family properties, that they were wrongfully sold in execution of a decree obtained against certain members of the family on the basis of a bond executed by those members for a personal debt for which those members only were liable, and that they were accordingly dispossessed from those properties, on the 4th August 1877, and on the 18th July and the 25th September 1878, by the principal defendants, who are the purchasers of the properties at the Court sales. The genealogy of the family, which is admitted, is given in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs, Sahab Lal and Gharib Chand, are the grandsons of one Meher Chand Sahu, who died in March 1872. The plaintiffs' own father, Raghu Nath Lal, died in 1862. When Meher Chand died he had three sons then living, viz., Gajadhar, Lalji, and Sitaram. Gajadhar died in 1880, leaving a widow Ganga Koer, who died in October 1888. Lalji and Sitaram are now both alive, and they and their respective sons, Mangal Pershad and Ram Pershad, have been made parties defendant to the suits. The family was a joint family. According to the plaintiffs a separation took place in 1879, but this is denied by the defendants. The properties which form the subject of dispute were purchased, the first in 1869 in the name of Bishen Sahu, the gomastha of the family, and the second in the name of the plaintiffs' uncle Sitaram. It (i.e., the second property) was first held under a mokarari lease dated 12th December 1865, and was subsequently acquired outright by a kobala dated 18th February 1872. The family was a trading family, and carried on several businesses, as detailed in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The only business with which we need concern ourselves in these cases is the money-lending business, which was carried on by Bishen Sahu under the supervision mostly of the plaintiffs' uncles, Lalji and Sitaram. Now, one Zaki Mistri had dealings with Lalji and Sitaram. In the course of these dealings he deposited with them a certain sum of money, for which a registered bond dated the 25th June 1872 was executed by Lalji, Sitaram, and Bishen Sahu. In this bond the properties acquired in 1869 and February 1872 were pledged as security. Subsequently, Zaki Mistri sued on this bond, obtained a decree, and put up the properties to sale. They were sold and [458] purchased by the several defendants, who in due course took possession.

Now the plaintiffs sue the purchasers of the properties alleging that the properties were joint family properties, that the debt for which the bond of the 25th June 1872 was given was a personal debt for which only the executants of the bond were liable. They are therefore entitled, they say, to the share of their father Raghu Nath Lal in these properties. The plaintiff No. 2 also claims the share of his uncle Gajadhar in the properties, on the ground that in 1879 before his death the family separated, that his share passed to his widow Ganga Koer, who bequeathed it to the plaintiff No. 2 by a will dated 14th Assin 1296 (4th October 1888).

The allegations of the defendants, on the other hand, are that the properties were the separate properties of Lalji and Sitaram, and were rightly sold in execution of the decree obtained against them. They deny the alleged separation of the family, and they impugn both the genuineness and the validity of the will alleged to have been executed by Ganga Koer.

The Subordinate Judge has found that the family was joint in estate at the time of the acquisition of both Adai and Udaibigha; (2) that these properties were acquired for the benefit of the whole family; (3) that the money-lending business, carried on by Bishen Sahu and supervised by Lalji and Sitaram, was the business of the joint family; (4) that the debt for which the bond of the 25th June 1872, by which Adai and Udaibigha were mortgaged, was a personal debt of Lalji and Sitaram; (5) that consequently the decree obtained on that bond and the subsequent sales in execution of it did not affect the interests of the plaintiffs in these properties; (6) that no separation of the family in estate ever took place either before or after the death of Gajadhar; consequently that nothing passed to Ganga Koer on her husband's death, and that therefore she could make no valid will in favour of the plaintiff No. 2; and (7) that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover in these suits both their own share and such amount of Gajadhar's share as they are entitled to otherwise than under the alleged will of Ganga Koer.

The purchaser-defendants in the two suits now appeal and contend (1) that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in finding that the [459] properties Adai and Udaibigha are the joint properties of the whole family, and that the money-lending business managed by Bishen Sabu, Lalji and Sitaram was the business of the joint family; (2) that if the Subordinate Judge is right on this point and the properties are held to belong to the whole family, then the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the debt for which the bond of the 25th June 1872 was given was a separate debt of Lalji and Sitaram, and that the sales held in execution of the decree obtained by Zaki Mistri did not affect the plaintiff's interests; and (3) that in any case the Subordinate Judge was wrong in giving the plaintiffs a decree for any portion of Gajadhar's share which one plaintiff did not claim at all and which the other claimed under a different title from, and one inconsistent to, that set up for him by the Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiffs, on the other hand, cross-appeal and urge that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that no separation of the family ever took place, and that the will of Ganga Koer was consequently invalid.

As to the first of the appellants' contentions, we would say that we feel no doubt that the Subordinate Judge is quite right. The family was clearly a joint family. The property of Adai was undoubtedly acquired for the benefit of the whole family in the name of Bishen Sabu, the servant of the family, probably, as it is said in the evidence of Kamha Charan and Guru Sabai, because his name was considered an auspicious name to acquire the property in. Similarly, the property of Udaibigha purchased in the name of Sitaram, when Sitaram was a youth of 16 or 17 years of age, was no doubt acquired for the benefit of the whole family. As to the money-lending business, this was, like all the other businesses of the family, a family business, was carried on by the family servant, Bishen Sahu, in the family dwelling house, and supervised principally by Lalji and Sitaram,— their father, Meher Chand, being too old to take an active part in the management. So far we see no reason to disturb the findings of the Subordinate Judge.

We consider, however, that he has erred in thinking that the bond executed by Bishen Sahu, Lalji, and Sitaram in favour of [460] Zaki Mistri on the 25th June 1872 was executed on account of a personal debt of Lalji and Sitaram. The circumstances of the case all point to a different conclusion. This bond was executed to secure the payment of a sum of money which Zaki Mistri had previously deposited, we feel no doubt, with the money-lending business: as indeed the recital in the bond itself seems to indicate. For this, all the partners in the business, that is all the members of the family, would be liable. The fact that Lalji and Sitaram only of the members of the family executed the bond does not show that they only were liable. They only executed the bond because they only managed this business, which was carried on in their names. The facts that the family servant Bishen Sahu, the benami holder of the family property Adai, joined in executing the bond, and that the family properties Adai and Udaibigha were pledged as collateral security for the debt, point to the same conclusion. All this we think would not have been done, if the debt had been only a personal debt of Lalji and Sitaram. Finally, there is another circumstance which forcibly suggests the same inference, viz., that the plaintiffs into whose possession the books of the money lending business admittedly passed, do not produce them. They tell a story improbable in itself and which has been disbelieved by the Subordinate Judge, as to these books having been destroyed by white-ants, the children, and the females of the family. Now these books, if produced, would have shown whether the debt was a debt of the joint family or a personal debt of Lalji and Sitaram; their suppression, therefore, is very much against the plaintiffs.

The next question is as to how far the interests of the plaintiffs have been affected by the sales held in execution of the decree obtained by Zaki Mistri against Lalji, Sitaram, and the heirs of Bishen Sahu. We think their interest must be held to have been affected by these sales, which in our opinion conveyed to the purchasers the interests of the whole family in the property. It is true that Lalji and Sitaram were the only members of the family sued, that execution proceedings were taken out only against them, and that the sale certificates obtained by the defendant purchasers only purport to convey to the latter the right, title and interest of Lalji and Sitaram in the properties. But on [461] the other hand, the debt for which they were sued, was, as we have found, a joint debt of the family. Lalji and Sitaram were sued because they only managed the money-trading business and had as agents of the family contracted the debt. The heirs of Bishen Sahu were also sued because Bishen Sahu had been the ostensible owner of the family property Adai. In the execution proceedings execution was asked for against the whole share which as a matter of fact the united family possessed in the two properties in dispute, and the sale certificates purport to convey this share in them, though they describe it as the interest of Lalji and Sitaram only, whereas, as a matter of fact, Lalji's and Sitaram's several shares in the properties were much less. In these circumstances we think the sales did convey the interest of the family in the property, and the plaintiffs (who have taken no steps to assert their rights in the properties for upwards of eleven years) are not now entitled to the decree which the Subordinate Judge has given them. Mr. Mayne in paragraph 308 of his "Hindu Law and Usage" has said, on the authority of Manu and Raghunandan:—"All the members of the family, and therefore all their property, divided and undivided, will be liable for debts contracted on behalf of the family by one who was authorized to contract them. The most common case is that of debts contracted by the common manager of the family. He is ex-officio the accredited agent of the family and authorized to bind them for all proper and necessary purposes within the scope of his agency." This seems exactly applicable to this case, for Lalji and Sitaram, though not the managers of the family, were yet its accredited agents in the management of the money-lending business, and as such had the authority of the other members to pledge the family property for a joint debt contracted apparently in the ordinary course of that business. Pontifex, J., in Johurra Bibee v. Sreegopal Misser (1) has pointed out that "all persons carrying on a family business, in the profits of which all the members of the family would participate, must have authority to pledge the joint family property and credit for the ordinary purposes of the business, and therefore debts honestly incurred in carrying on such business, must override the right of all members of the joint family in property acquired with funds derived from the joint business.

[462] Again, in Pursid Narain Singh v. Honooman Sahay (2) the same learned Judge had said:—"It has been decided that if the managing member of a family, the other members of which are at the time minors (the plaintiffs in these two cases were both minors at the time of the contracting of the debt, and one of them at least was also a minor at the time of the institution of the suit against Lalji and Sitaram), having authority (the touchstone of which is necessity), mortgages the whole 16 annas of the property, then in a suit by the mortgagee the sale under the decree would pass the whole 16 annas of the mortgaged property, although the mortgagor alone was made defendant, and the reason for such decision probably is that the 16 annas having been validly mortgaged to the mortgagee, and his remedy being foreclosure or sale, the decree of the Court would affect what was in the parties before it, viz., the mortgagee's right, validly acquired, to have the whole 16 annas sold."

In the case of Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Luchmessur Singh (3) it was held that two decrees passed against one of two heirs affected a third heir, "being substantially decrees in respect of a joint debt of the family," and "could be properly executed against the joint family property;" while the case of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (4) may also be cited as an authority for holding that the interest of a joint family may pass at a sale in execution of a decree obtained on account of a joint family debt, though all the members of the family are not made parties to the suit which resulted in the sale. The present cases are in fact very similar to the case of Daulut Ram v. Meher Chand (5), which was a suit on a mortgage debt in which the mortgagee brought his action, not against the whole joint family, but against the two members of the family who were managers of it and who had executed the mortgage. In this case their Lordships say :—" It appears from the cases that have been cited that notwithstanding the defendants were not made parties to the suit, still as the suit was brought upon the mortgage to recover the mortgaged property, and the plaintiff in the suit obtained a decree and executed that decree by seizing the mortgaged property, the question would be whether the [463] mortgage included the interest of all the parties or only the right, title and interest of the two parties who were made defendants." Their Lordships answered this question by holding that the interest of the whole family passed, and reversed the decision of the lower Courts, who held that only the right, title and interest of the two mortgagors had been sold. We may also cite on this subject the cases of Gaya Din v. Raj Bansi Kuar (1), Ram Narain Lal v. Bhawani Prasad (2), Phul Chand v. Luchmi Chand (3), Bemola Dossee v. Mohun Dossee (4), Baso Koor v. Hurry Dass (5), Samalbai Nathubhai v. Someshwar (6), and Hari Vithal v. Jairam Vithal (7).

On the strength of these authorities we think we must hold that the whole interest of the family in the properties in dispute passed at the sale, although Lalji and Sitaram only out of the members of the family were sued, and seeing that the share of the properties advertised for sale certified in the sale certificates granted to the defendants to have passed to them is the share of the whole family in the properties, we do not think that the description of that share as the right, title, and interest of Lalji and Sitaram was material. As has been said by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bissesswar Lal Sahu v. Luchmessur Singh (8), in execution proceedings the Courts will look at the substance of the transaction and will not be disposed to set aside an execution upon mere technical grounds when they find it is substantially right.

In this view of the case we need not consider the cross-objection of the respondents, or the third contention of the appellants, the decision of which would depend upon the view we might take of the Subordinate Judge's finding as to the alleged separation of Gajadhar in 1879 and as to the genuineness and validity of the will of Ganga Koer. As we hold that the sales held at the instance of the heirs of Zaki Mistri affected the whole properties, the share which Gajadhar may have had in them must have passed away from him before the time when he is said to have separated [464] himself from the rest of the family. We therefore need not enter into the other questions raised before us.

We accordingly decree these appeals with costs and dismiss the cross-appeals.

LAKSHIMONI DAS (Plaintiff) v. NITYANANDA DAY AND ANOTHER, MINORS, REPRESENTED BY THEIR MOTHER AND GUARDIAN KRIS-TOMONI DASSI (Defendants).* [2nd December, 1892.]

Hindu Law—Gift—Gift without delivery of possession—Transfer of possession—Sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 123, 129—Immoveable property—Acceptance of gift.

P executed a deed of gift of certain property in favour of the plaintiff in 1877 before the Transfer of Property Act was passed, and the deed was duly registered. In 1891 P sold certain portions of the same property to the defendants, and gave possession to them of such portions. P died six years after the execution of the deed of gift, and after his death some of the title deeds of the property covered by the deed of gift came into possession of the plaintiff. Both the lower Courts found that there had been no delivery of possession given by the donor nor acceptance by the donee. In a suit brought five years after the death of P for possession of the property the subject of the alleged gift: Held that mere registration was not sufficient to make the gift complete, according to the Hindu Law, under which some possession or acceptance by the donee was necessary: there being neither possession nor acceptance the suit should be dismissed.

Dagai Dabee v. Mothuranath Chattopadhyaya (1), Kishto Soondery Debea v. Kishtomotee (2), and Harjivan Anandram v. Naran Haribhai (3), referred to. Dharmadas Das v. Nistarini Dasi (4) approved.

THIS appeal arose out of two suits brought against the defendants for possession of certain lands covered by the registered deed of gift executed in favour of the plaintiff by her brother one Pran Krishna Dutt on the 26th Aughran 1284 (10th December 1877). [465] The deed was proved to have been executed, but it appeared that Pran Krishna Dutt during his lifetime had sold portions of the same property to the defendants, who were also put in possession by him. The question was whether the gift was accepted by the plaintiff, as it was not shown that possession of the property was ever delivered to the plaintiff during the lifetime of Pran Krishna Dutt.

The Munsif dismissed the suit.

On appeal, the District Judge also dismissed the suit, and on the question of possession observed as follows:—

“As to possession, the plaintiff has quite failed to prove it. The deed of gift is dated some years before Pran Krishna's death, the defendants got possession six years before his death, and the plaintiff never asserted her claim till five years after his death. The appellant's pleader says possession is not essential, and quotes the case of Dharmadas Das v. Nistarini Dasi (4), but in that case the question of the necessity of possession was not gone into. The respondents' pleader quoted the cases of Dagai Dabee v. Mothuranath Chattopadhyaya (1) and Kali Dass Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (5). On the authority of these rulings, and Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 329, I think delivery of possession in some way was necessary. As to the title deeds having been made over at the time of the gift, I don't find any evidence except a recital in the deed to that effect."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mukerji, for the appellant.

Baboo Sarat Chunder Roy Chowdhry, for the respondents.

Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mukerji.—The deed of gift having been registered, it passed a good title to the donee. Possession is not absolutely necessary under the Hindu Law [see Mayne's Hindu Law, s. 351, and Dharmodas Das v. Nistarini Dasi (1).] To complete a gift there must be a transfer of the apparent ownership from the donor to the donee. In this case the plaintiff is in possession of all the properties which formed the subject-matter of the gift excepting the disputed portion, and the title-deeds are also in her possession. This is sufficient to entitle [466] her to a decree. The gift cannot be invalid in part: either it is wholly void or it is wholly valid (see s. 129 of the Transfer of Property Act IV of 1882). The case of Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (2) supports my contention that possession is not necessary. In the case of Dagai Dabee v. Mothuranath Chattopadhyaya (3), simply a deed was executed: besides this authority seems to conflict with the case of Moheshur Buksh Singh v. Gunoon Koonwar (4). In case of transfer for consideration, it was at one time considered that possession was necessary, but the case of Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Dataram Roy (5) lays down "that delivery of possession is not under the Hindu Law essential to complete the title of a purchaser for value." The plaintiff was in possession of the title-deeds, which should have been admitted in evidence.

Baboo Sarat Chunder Roy Chowdhry.—Here there is a finding by both the Courts below that the plaintiff had no possession of the disputed properties; possession is absolutely necessary to complete a gift [see Dagai Dabee v. Mothuranath Chattopadhyaya (3)]. The provisions of Act IV of 1882 do not apply to this case. In the case of Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (2) the donor was out of possession and therefore could not deliver possession. There is no evidence that the title-deeds were in the possession of the donee before the death of the donor.

Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mukerji in reply.

The judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiff in these suits sued to recover possession of certain properties on the ground that they were covered by a deed of gift executed in her favour many years ago by her brother, one Pran Krishna.

Both the Courts below have dismissed the suits on the ground that the deed of gift propounded by the plaintiff was not operative in law.

[467] The deed in question bears date the 26th Aghran 1284. It is a registered document, and purports to cover, so far as can be gathered, all the properties belonging to Pran Krishna. Four years later, namely, some time in 1288, Pran Krishna sold a portion of the same property, for a consideration of Rs. 160, to the defendants in one suit, and shortly afterwards another portion, for a consideration of Rs. 290, to the defendants in the other suit; and he appears to have died six years after the execution of the deeds of sale. The present suit was brought, as appears from the judgment of the appellate Court, five years after Pran Krishna's death.

The defendants contend that though the deed of gift may have been executed by Pran Krishna in his lifetime, the plaintiff never obtained possession of these properties, and that, therefore, the gift was invalid, and that they themselves were put in possession by the vendor, and have been ever since in possession of the properties purchased by them. Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mukerji, who appeared for the appellant in this Court, contended that the fact of the deed of gift being registered was sufficient to convey the property to the plaintiff, no possession being required under the Hindu Law to perfect the gift. He further contended that, as a matter of fact, possession had been delivered, and that the lower Courts were wrong in holding otherwise. And thirdly, he urged that the plaintiff was in possession of the title-deeds of the properties, and the Courts were wrong in not admitting them in evidence.

It must be observed in the first place that the deed of gift was executed long before the Transfer of Property Act came into force, and it is conceded that, whatever alterations may have been made in the provisions of the Hindu Law by s. 129 of the Transfer of Property Act, they do not affect any right taken under the present deed of gift. We have therefore to consider whether the view propounded by the pleader for the appellant is well founded, viz., whether when once a deed has been registered no possession is necessary to perfect the gift.

Mr. Mayne in his work gives a general epitome of the prevailing law on the subject, and his conclusion may be summarized thus: that though there is no specific direction in the Hindu Law as to delivery of possession, the general course of decisions has [468] been that some sort of possession is necessary, and there is no doubt that in a number of cases [see Dagai Dabee v. Mathuranath Chattopadhyaya (1), Harjivan Anandram v. Naran Haribhai (2), Kishto Soondery Debea v. Kishtomotee (3)] that view has been adopted. The case of Dharmoādas Das v. Nistarini Dasi (4), which was referred to in argument, explains in a somewhat different way the rule of Hindu Law. In that case Mr. Justice Mitter says: "We may, however, state here that it is by no means clear under the Hindu Law that, to make a gift of immoveable property valid and complete, delivery of possession is essentially necessary. What is laid down in the Hindu Law is this, that to constitute a valid gift there must be acceptance by the donee, and one of the modes of acceptance in gifts of immoveable property is delivery of possession on the part of the donor and receipt of possession by the donee. Without going into the question of Hindu Law, and assuming that law to be in favour of the appellant, viz., that delivery of possession is essential under the Hindu Law to complete a gift, we think the law has been abrogated by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act."

The cases of Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (5), Mahomed Muse v. Jijibhai Bhagwan (6) and Moheshur Buksh Singh v. Gunoon Kunwar (7), which were cited, have little bearing on the present question.

(6) 9 B. 524.

(7) 6 W.R. 245.

But accepting the view enunciated by Mitter, J., it seems to us that in the present case the Courts below have found as a fact that the plaintiff never had possession during Pran Krishna's lifetime, nor did she ever make any objection to the defendants taking possession of the property sold to them. There is no indication that she ever accepted the gift; and the facts detailed in the Munsif's judgment would lead to the conclusion that the plaintiff had no connection with any portion of the property at any time after the execution of the deeds.

It is urged that the delivery of the title-deeds is some evidence of delivery of possession. The plaintiff is the mother of the next [469] heirs of Pran Krishna. Upon his death such documents as were in his possession would naturally come into their hands. Apparently, with the exception of one of the documents, none of them relate to any of the properties in suit. The mere fact therefore that she is now in possession of some of the title deeds relating to the properties covered by the deed of gift would throw no light upon the question of possession, even as explained in the case of Dharmodas Das v. Nistarini Dasi (1), and both the Courts have negatived, upon the evidence, the allegation of possession of any portion of the property forming the subject of the gift. So far, therefore, as the two first grounds taken by the pleader for the appellant are concerned, we must decide upon the facts against the plaintiff.

As regards the third ground, we find from the order sheet of the Munsif that the documents were not produced until after the case had concluded and been reserved for judgment. We are therefore of opinion that the original Court was right in refusing to admit them at that stage. It is unnecessary to enter into the ground mentioned by the lower appellate Court for refusing to admit those documents.

On the whole, we are of opinion that the plaintiff has failed to prove her case, and that the appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Before Mr. Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Hill.

NILKANTA SINGH AND OTHERS (Petitioners) v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS AT THE INSTANCE OF MANJHI SINGH (Opposite party).^{*} [23rd September, 1892].

Witnesses—Recalling witnesses for further cross-examination after charge—Evidence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 257.

There is under s. 257 of the Criminal Procedure Code no absolute right of cross-examination which would enable the accused to recall and [470] cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution, no matter how completely and fully they have already been cross-examined.

Where the witnesses for the prosecution were fully cross-examined and a charge framed against the accused, and after an adjournment for ten days the witnesses for the defence were examined and cross-examined, and on the day on which the judgment was to be delivered, an application under s. 257 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was made on behalf of the accused asking that process should issue for the witnesses for the prosecution to be recalled and further cross-examined. Held that if the Magistrate was of opinion that the application was made with the intention and for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice, he was right in refusing the application.

It lies upon the party who thinks himself aggrieved, to show that the ends of justice have been in some way frustrated in consequence of the refusal to recall the witnesses. It is necessary to be very careful that persons on their trial should not be prejudiced; but it is also necessary, on the other hand, to see that proceedings in the Criminal Courts are not hampered in a needlessly carping and litigious spirit, losing sight of the main purpose of those proceedings, and giving over-attention to matter of mere form.

In this case the petitioners were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Monghyr on the 30th of July 1892 of an offence under s. 147, read with s. 378, of the Penal Code, and sentenced each to one year's rigorous imprisonment. They were further directed to furnish certain securities to keep the peace for a period of one year.

The trial of the accused took place, commencing on the 7th of June 1892 and continuing on to the 18th of June, and on that date the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution was closed. The witnesses for the prosecution had been fully cross-examined and a charge was framed against the accused, and the case was adjourned to the 28th of June. On the latter date the witnesses for the defence were examined and cross-examined, and on the 29th of June they were finished. But between the 18th and 28th of June no application was made to recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution. After the witnesses for the prosecution had all given their evidence, and on the day when the judgment was to be delivered, an application under s. 257 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was made to the Deputy Magistrate on behalf of the accused upon a petition, dated the [471] previous day, asking that process should issue for the witnesses for the prosecution to be recalled and further cross-examined. That application was refused and the accused were convicted; but no reasons were recorded by the Deputy Magistrate for such refusal.

The accused preferred an appeal to the Sessions Judge of Bhagulpur against the conviction and sentence of the Deputy Magistrate, but the appeal was dismissed.

The petitioners then applied to the High Court under its revisional powers for a rule to show cause why the proceedings should not be set aside and the witnesses for the prosecution recalled and cross-examined before the Deputy Magistrate, and a trial had after the hearing of that evidence.

Upon that application a rule was issued by PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ., which now came on to be heard.

Mr. A. P. Gasper with Baboo Atulya Churn Bose, for petitioners.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (PIGOT and HILL, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In this case a rule was granted under s. 257 of the Criminal Procedure Code applied for upon the ground that the Magistrate was wrong in rejecting the prayer of the petitioner for recalling the witnesses for the prosecution. The grounds of the rule are sufficiently stated in the judgment which was delivered at the time that the rule was granted. They were expressly stated to be, by reason of the omission of the Magistrate to record his grounds for considering the application to recall the witnesses for the prosecution, to be a frivolous and vexatious one, or, to use the terms of the section, made for purposes of vexation and delay or of defeating the ends of justice.

The Magistrate omitted to record the reasons for his refusal, and by reason of that omission we thought it right to call the case up here. When called up here the case is to be looked at for this purpose, viz., to see whether or not the persons before the Court were prejudiced by reason of the witnesses not having been summoned for cross-examination. The section is a very salutary one, and it is very important that the Courts of lower jurisdiction should not be allowed in any way to hamper the due and proper [472] testing by cross-examination of the testimony given by the witnesses for the prosecution. That is a right which ought to be preserved jealously for the prisoners, but that is unfortunately a right which sometimes in our Courts in this country is carried to such a length as to amount to a very serious abuse. Now it is a practice, sometimes at any rate, to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution before the charge is drawn at very great length. That with regard to some of the witnesses is stated by the Magistrate to have been done in this case, and indeed the length of time during which the inquiry proceeded would itself indicate that that was the case; but a protracted cross-examination by no means shows that the parties on whose behalf the cross-examination has been conducted may not be entitled to further cross-examine the witnesses; and although it may be that the cross-examination before the charge is framed has been of a lengthy and elaborate character, it may perfectly well happen that for the interests of the accused it may be desirable that that cross-examination should be, after the charge is framed, resumed, if necessary, at some length. On the other hand, it is absolutely essential to protect the time of Courts of Justice and of witnesses from being wasted by a needless, though not necessarily malicious or vexatious, cross-examination, but, as Lord Justice Turner once called it, "pruriency of cross-examination." If, therefore, the Magistrate, when it is sought to recall witnesses who have been cross-examined already for further cross-examination, is of opinion that the application is made with the intention and for the purposes indicated in the words I have read in the section, he may refuse the application; but when we are considering a case in which he has refused such an application without following strictly the terms of the section, we may think it necessary to call up the case. Now, the case having been called up, it lies upon us to consider whether the application ought not to have been granted, and whether by reason of its not having been granted the prisoners have been prejudiced. In the present case the learned Counsel who appears for the prisoners has put his case in support of this rule upon the ground that there is an absolute right of cross-examination conferred by s. 257, an absolute right which can only exist if it be within the right of the accused to recall the witnesses and cross-examine them, no matter how completely and fully they have already been cross-[473] examined, and he puts his case so high as to say that the deprivation of that right would alone entitle him to have this rule made absolute. That we do not agree with. We think, as we have said, that it lies upon the party who thinks himself aggrieved under such circumstances to show us that the ends of justice have been in some way frustrated in consequence of the refusal to recall the witnesses. It is necessary to be very careful that persons on their trial should not be prejudiced, but it is necessary, on the other hand, to see that proceedings in the Criminal Courts are not hampered in a needlessly carping and litigious spirit, losing sight of the main purpose of those proceedings, and giving over-attention to matter of mere form.

We have asked the learned Counsel to point out any particular in which the prisoners have been damaged or prejudiced. We have none before us, and we have, on the other hand, the opinion of the Magistrate on the application which was made either the day before or on the day on which judgment was fixed to be delivered. The petition is dated the 28th of July, but upon the proceedings it would appear that the application was made on the 29th, the day on which the judgment was to be delivered. An interval of ten days had therefore elapsed from the 18th of July when the proceedings closed, to the 28th, and during that interval no application to recall the witnesses such as was made on the 29th of July was made to the Magistrate. The Magistrate says:—"Their motives in making such an application at that time are quite apparent; they wished to cause delay, harass the prosecution and in the event of a refusal on the part of the Court to comply with their request, to raise a ground for appeal." That is the opinion which the Magistrate expresses in his explanation. Had he recorded that expression of opinion when he refused to recall the witnesses, we should not have granted the rule upon the application as framed.

There being no case made of prejudice occasioned by his refusal to recall the witnesses, there seems no other reason for the application than that which the Magistrate suggests; at any rate there is no other reason shown to us for making the rule absolute, and we, therefore, discharge it.

Where a Deputy Commissioner issued a sanction to prosecute the accused upon an express application made on behalf of a certain person against whom a charge of torture had been made, and which he found, for reasons stated in his judgment, to be false, held, taking the order to have been one made under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that it was a proper sanction, inasmuch as it was given to a contemplated prosecution by a definite person.

Semble, on the supposition that the order was one under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that it was not necessary for the validity of an order under that section that there should be any evidence on the record contradicting the case which was thought to be false, or that there should be a preliminary inquiry. Although it may sometimes well be that a preliminary inquiry ought to be held, the adoption of a rigid rule to that effect is neither rendered imperative by the law nor is it desirable.

IN this case the petitioner had charged the Sub-Inspector of Police of Jorehat and two other persons with the offence (under s. 331 of the Penal Code, of torturing him in order to extort confession in respect of certain stolen property.

The Deputy Commissioner of Sibsagar held an inquiry into the matter, and after going through the whole evidence, was of opinion that the charge against the Sub Inspector of Police could not stand, as the whole story of the petitioner was false. He therefore dismissed the complaint under s. 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Upon an application on behalf of the Sub-Inspector of Police for sanction to prosecute the petitioner, the Deputy Commissioner, on the 13th July 1892, gave an order for [475] prosecution under s. 182 of the Penal Code, and sent the case to the nearest Magistrate for trial.

Thereupon an application was made to the High Court for a rule calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Sibsagar to show cause why the order granting the sanction on the 13th July 1892 should not be set aside and the sanction revoked, and a rule in these terms was issued.

The rule now came on to be heard.

Baboo Surendra Nath Roy in support of the rule:—The order of the Deputy Commissioner is bad in law, inasmuch as he did not hold any preliminary inquiry under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, before he gave the sanction to prosecute. Section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be read with s. 476. There must be direct and distinct evidence of the commission of an offence before sanction could be granted. The offence in this case is one under s. 182 of the Penal Code, and there was no evidence on the record that such an offence was committed. See Kedarnath Das v. Mohesh Chunder Chuckerbutty (4).

The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and HILL, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

We think this rule must be discharged. The Deputy Commissioner issued the sanction which has been granted for this prosecution on the 13th of July, as appears by the record, and he did so, as also appears by the record, upon the express application on behalf of the Sub-Inspector against whom the charge of torture had been made, which charge he found, for reasons stated in his judgment, to be false and concocted. It was therefore a sanction given to a contemplated prosecution by a definite person; and here with reference to that matter it is proper to say, as was said in this Bench some weeks ago with reference to sanctions for prosecution, that it does appear to us both that a sanction for a prosecution under s. 195 is not intended by the Code, as it is sometimes treated as being intended, as a sanction given in the abstract, not to any intended prosecutor, not on any application, but a sanction in the abstract which practically may float about the world like a bit of [476] thistledown until it comes in contact with some possible prosecutor. That is an opinion which it is desirable to express, as it sometimes happens that a sanction of that sort is given in respect of no contemplated prosecution or upon no application at all, but simply intended, supposing it to have that effect, to authorize any one to prosecute. We should not have treated the order in the present case as a proper sanction under s. 195 had this been the character of it, but should have felt bound to treat it as it has been argued that it is an order under s. 476; it does no doubt do what is unnecessary in a sanction under s. 195, viz., send the case to the nearest Magistrate, Mr. Moor. Upon looking, however, at the record, it now appears that there was a definite prosecution contemplated which was sanctioned in this case. That being so, there is nothing in the case which in our judgment would entitle the applicant to have that sanction recalled. The case of Kedarnath Das v. Mohesh Chunder Chuckerbutty (1), which has been cited, in no respect whatever applies to this case, for in this case the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner went completely into the matter and stated fully the character of the charge made and the reason for holding it to be false; and besides that the record before us contains a full statement of the evidence given upon the inquiry at which the charge was dismissed and a full disclosure of the circumstances attending it. There is no reason therefore taking the order to be a sanction under s. 195 as we hold it to be, for interfering with it at all. The Deputy Commissioner appears to be under the impression, and that was also the impression under which the rule was applied for—an impression that we gathered from the statement made to us when the rule was applied for—that the order was made under s. 476, and no doubt there is very often some confusion arising in proceedings under these two sections, which lead to misapprehensions of this kind. On the footing that the order was made under s. 476, the learned pleader argued that a preliminary inquiry before the case was sent for trial or inquiry to the nearest Magistrate was necessary: he argued that matter upon the ground that a preliminary inquiry in such cases must be had unless there be upon the record of the case, out of which the order under s. 476 has been made, sworn [477] testimony establishing, if true, that the offence against the section under which the contemplated prosecution or inquiry is to proceed has been committed; that is to say, sworn testimony, for instance, that the case dismissed was false or that the evidence given in it was false; or the like. That contention is, we think, inconsistent with the decision in In the matter of Mutty Lall Ghose (2) in which Chief Justice Garth refers to the decision of Mr. Justice Macpherson in the case of The Queen v. Baijoo Lall (3), and points out that that decision had been a little misunderstood. It is to be observed that s. 476 differs in terms from the corresponding section, s. 471 of the old Code, which was in force at the time the case of The Queen v. Baijoo Lall (3) was decided; the words of the old section being “after making such preliminary inquiry as may be necessary,” those of the present section being “after making any preliminary inquiry that may be necessary,” a change of language which, so far as it goes, confirms the opinion which we should decidedly entertain upon the construction of the section as it stands. In In the matter of Mutty Lall Ghose (2) the Court refused to interfere with an order, the discretion of which they thought doubtful, made by the District Judge under s. 476 although, as the Court said, the sworn evidence was all one way ; that is to say, was all in favour of the statement, the belief in the falsehood of which led the District Judge to make the order under s. 476. That case, therefore, is a direct authority for the proposition that an order under s. 476 may be made without making any preliminary inquiry, although there is no sworn evidence on the record to contradict the statements in the case which are treated in the order as false, and the learned Judge who pronounced the judgment in the case of Khepu Nath Sikdar v. Girish Chunder Mukerjee (1), who was consulted by me on this subject just before the vacation, authorised me to say that there was no intention in that judgment to go against the ruling in the decision of Sir Richard Garth in the case of In the matter of Mutty Lall Ghose (2), which was not referred to in that judgment or so far as it appears from the report in the argument in the case.

(2) 6 C. 308.

Under these circumstances, if the case were one under s. 476, we should not think ourselves bound to hold that the order of [478] the Deputy Commissioner was bad by reason of there not being any evidence on the record contradicting the case which the Deputy Commissioner thought to be false, and also of there having been no preliminary inquiry held. We do not think that it is necessary for the validity of an order under s. 476 that there should be in the original proceedings such contradictory evidence on the record, or that there should be a preliminary inquiry. Although it may sometimes well be that a preliminary inquiry ought to be held, the adoption of a rigid rule to that effect would simply introduce into the criminal procedure in this country a new stage as a matter of imperative necessity, and as we understand the case of Khepu Nath Sikdar v. Girish Chunder Mukerjee (1) we do not think it was intended to introduce such practice as the words used would seem to convey. We do not think that such a practice is rendered imperative by the law, and it is not desirable that it should be necessarily, and in every case introduced. We think, were this an order under s. 476, we ought to follow the decision of Sir Richard Garth in In the matter of Mutty Lall Ghose (2). We thought it necessary to mention this, as s. 476 was relied upon. We think that the rule must be discharged in the present case.

moveable property, and that being found insufficient to cover the fine, his immoveable property was also attached under the order, held, that the liability of the immoveable property of the deceased could not be enforced by distress.

Reg. v. Lallu Karwar (1) followed.

Section 386 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not applicable to such a case.

THIS was a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Jessore under the provisions of s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The facts of the case were as follows:—A man was fined Rs. 50 under the Penal Code. He died before the fine was paid. The Magistrate ordered the realization of the fine by attaching and selling his joint moveable property.

On the 18th May 1892 the Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court for orders on the questions (a) whether the joint moveable property was saleable under s. 386 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and (b) whether the immoveable property was saleable; and if so, under what section and what procedure.

The High Court (O'KINEALY and AMEER ALI, JJ.) on the 3rd June 1892 made the following order:—

"In regard to moveables we think the Magistrate can only attach moveables of which the deceased was sole owner. No question in regard to immoveable property has as yet arisen, and this Court does not answer abstract questions of law that may never arise. When a question arises, and not till then, can any reference be made."

The material portion of the present letter of reference was in the following terms:—

"The Magistrate first ordered the sale of the joint moveable property that had been attached (no other property was available). That property was not sufficient to cover the fine, and the High Court held that it could not be attached. The Magistrate upon receiving the order, passed another order directing the fine to be realized by attachment and sale of the immoveable property. This immoveable property has now been attached and will be sold.

"This order is illegal, so far as I am aware, inasmuch as there is no authority given in the law for the attachment and sale of immoveable [480] property. Section 386, Criminal Procedure Code, is not applicable to this case.

"Then as to the second point, the Calcutta High Court have held that although under the Code of Criminal Procedure only moveable property belonging to the offender is liable in satisfaction of a fine [see Criminal Letter of the High Court, dated the 19th September 1865 (2)], yet under the terms of s. 70, Penal Code, after his death any property which would be legally liable for his debts would be liable to the payment of a fine remaining unpaid at his death; the restriction as to the distress and sale of moveable property continuing only during the lifetime of the offender. This view must be followed in Bengal no doubt; but even so the third question remains unsettled. I may note here that the Bombay High Court has refused to follow this view of the Calcutta High Court [Reg. v. Lallu Karwar (1)], holding that the law has provided for the distress and sale of moveable property only, and there is no way by which immoveable property can be made liable for a fine.

"There remains the third question—If immoveable property is liable for the payment of a fine, what is the procedure to be adopted? Is the summary procedure order, s. 386, Criminal Procedure Code, applicable, or should Government bring a civil suit? So many points would occur where the question of the sale of immoveable property arises that I do not think s. 386 would be applicable. It would require a regular suit to ascertain and define the respective rights of the offender and his co-sharers. I think these points are of great importance, and would therefore ask the High Court to pronounce a decision upon them. Meanwhile, as I consider the Magistrate's action not according to law, I have directed that his proceedings be stayed until final orders are received."

The order of the Court (PIGOT and HILL, JJ.) was as follows :—

ORDER.

We do not understand the Criminal Letter of the High Court, dated the 19th September 1865 (1), to lay down that the liability of the immoveable property which is exacted by s. 70 of the Penal Code can be enforced by distress under the Criminal Procedure Code. That question was not before the Court when the Letter was written, so far as can be judged.

The Letter is on a question as to the scope of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV of 1861), s. 6, and states that under that section only moveable property within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate is, in the lifetime of the offender, liable. This recognizes the fact of the liability of immoveable property after the [481] offender's death under s. 70, Penal Code, but it does not say expressly nor, we think, even by implication, how that liability is to be enforced.

We think we are free to follow the authority of Reg. v. Lallu Karwar (1) so far, at any rate, as that it cannot be enforced by distress. If no special form of remedy is provided for such a case, it follows that the normal remedy, that by suit, must be the only one. Section 386 does not of course apply to such a case as this.

The order of the District Magistrate must therefore be set aside and all proceedings under it, if any, set aside also.

THIS case was referred by the Sessions Judge of Jessore, under the provisions of s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in the following terms :—

" A Civil Court peon was sent by a Munsif to attach the property of a judgment-debtor. The peon reported to the Munsif that he had been [482] obstructed. The Munsif drew up an order, dated the 11th June 1892, as follows :—' From inquiry it appears that so-and-so took away forcibly cattle from the custody of the peon while under attachment in execution of a writ of this Court. This is a fit case for investigation and trial by the Criminal Court, and therefore I send it to the Magistrate for that purpose.'

" On the 25th June the Deputy Magistrate examined the peon to ascertain what persons should be summoned as accused. On the same date two persons were ordered to be summoned. One of them appeared and he was acquitted on 4th July. The peon in many instances flatly contradicted what he had said before the Magistrate, so the Magistrate in the order of dismissal directed the peon to pay Rs. 20 compensation to the accused.

" The Magistrate had no power to order the peon to pay compensation, as the peon was not a ' complainant.' There was no ' complaint' as defined in s. 4 of the Code made to the Magistrate by the peon. The complainant was the Munsif. The peon may of course be prosecuted under s. 193, Penal Code, or any other section applicable, but he may not be fined under s. 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

" This case is exactly on all fours with that of In re Keshav Lachman (1). I can find no rulings of the Calcutta High Court on the point, but the Bombay ruling is presumably correct, and therefore I refer the case for the orders of the High Court."

No one appeared on the reference.

The order of the Court (PIGOT and HILL, JJ.) was as follows :—

ORDER.

We have read the explanation of the Deputy Magistrate forwarded upon receipt of our order of the 24th August.

The distinction pointed out by the Deputy Magistrate between s. 250, now repealed, and s. 560, that at present in force, does no doubt exist.

But in this case the peon was not the real complainant, the Munsif, acting judicially, was the real complainant, and although the peon was nominally informant in the case before the Deputy Magistrate, the complaint was not his, nor can the proceedings properly be said to have been instituted before the Deputy Magistrate upon his information.

We agree with the Sessions Judge that under these circumstances the peon ought not to be held liable to pay compensation under the section. We think the Deputy Magistrate fell into an error [483] in not noticing that the law was set in motion against the accused, not by the peon but by a judicial officer acting as such.

Very possibly the Munsif was misled by the peon, who may have told him the story which the Deputy Magistrate found to be false; and this may perhaps have led the Deputy Magistrate to treat the peon as the real complainant. But though a not unnatural error, if this was what influenced him, we think it was an error. In such a case this section does not apply.

We accordingly set aside the order of the Deputy Magistrate of 4th July 1892, ordering compensation to be paid by Bharat Chunder Nath to Javed Ali Biswas.

The complainant charged the accused with an offence under s. 366 of the Penal Code, in respect of his wife. The Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused of an offence under s. 498 of the Penal Code, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The Sessions Judge being of opinion that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict the accused under s. 498, there being no complaint by the husband, under s. 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the offence did not fall under s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code, referred the case to the High Court. Held, that such a case is within the intention of s. 238. The intention of the law is to prevent Magistrates inquiring, of their own motion, into cases connected with marriage unless the husband or other person authorized moves them to do so. But when the husband is complainant and brings his complaint under s. 366, a conviction under s. 498 may properly be had if the evidence be such as to justify a conviction for the minor offence, and yet insufficient for a conviction for the graver one.

On the 18th July 1892, one Jatra Shekh laid an information at the police station, charging Reazat Shekh and Abdul Shekh with an offence under s. 366 of the Penal Code, in respect of his young wife Meherjan, on the following allegations: On the night of the 17th July he had gone to hear songs in the house of a mudi near his own house, leaving his young wife aged 15 or 16 at home. Reazat, he heard the sound of his wife weeping in an hotel there. He then called some of his neighbours and entered the hotel. He saw Reazat and Abdul Shekh standing near his wife. The room being dark he went to fetch a light, and when he came back he found that Abdul Shekh had made his escape, but found Reazat in the room. He left the latter and his wife in charge of the persons there and went to call a chaukidar. When he returned he found that Reazat had been allowed to go. The police after inquiry, sent up both the accused on a charge under s. 366 of the Penal Code, that is, abducting a woman to cause her defilement, an offence cognizable by the police.

The Deputy Magistrate to whom the case was made over convicted the accused of an offence under s. 498 of the Penal Code, enticing the woman with criminal intent, and sentenced them to one month's rigorous imprisonment, whereupon the accused Abdul Shekh moved the Sessions Judge.

The material portion of the letter of reference was as follows:—

"In the application filed on behalf of the accused, it has been urged that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict the accused of an offence under s. 498 of the Penal Code, there having been no complaint of an offence under that section (s. 199, Criminal Procedure Code, provides that no Court shall take cognizance of an offence under s. 498 of the Penal Code, except upon a complaint made by the husband of the woman, or in his absence by some person who had care of such woman on his behalf at the time when such offence was committed, and s. 238, Criminal Procedure Code, authorizes the conviction of a person, charged with an offence, of a minor offence, although he is not charged with it, when facts are proved which reduce the offence with which he is [435] charged to a minor offence, expressly providing that nothing in the section shall be deemed to authorize a conviction of an offence referred to in s. 199 when no complaint has been made as required by that section).

"Now, as I have said, the complainant chose to bring his case under s. 366, Penal Code, before the police, instead of making a complaint before the Magistrate under s. 498, Penal Code. Both before the police and before the Magistrate he stated that he heard his wife crying, from which it would appear that he intended the Court to understand that she had been taken to and was being kept in the hotel against her will, which would constitute an offence under s. 366, Penal Code.

"He nowhere showed any sign of inviting the Court to hold that his wife was implicated, or a consenting party. The wife, presumably with her husband's knowledge and approval, charged the accused with having forcibly taken her from her bed. It appears from the explanation of the Deputy Magistrate that he disbelieved the story of the forcible abduction, and came to the conclusion that the woman was unchaste and had been enticed by the accused. In other words, he found facts which reduced the offence of forcible compelling with which the accused was charged under s. 366, Penal Code, to the minor offence of enticing under s. 498, Penal Code, and he accordingly convicted them under that section. This is precisely what the concluding paragraph of s. 238, Criminal Procedure Code, prohibits.

"Mr. Mayne in his Commentary on the Penal Code, points out the difference between cases under s. 366 and cases under s. 498, Penal Code. Section 366 he says "seems to apply to cases when, at the time of the abduction, the woman has no intention of marriage or illicit intercourse, but it is contemplated that her marriage or illicit intercourse with her will be accomplished by force or seduction brought to bear upon her afterwards. Section 498, Penal Code, embraces all cases where the object of taking or enticing is, that the wife may have illicit intercourse with some other person, even though, as generally happens, she is quite aware of the purpose for which she is quitting her husband, and is an assenting party to it.

"If this be correct, it may well be that a husband who brings a charge under s. 366, in order to constitute which force or deceit is necessary, does not thereby sanction the imputation upon the character of his wife, which is frequently the result of a conviction of her abductors under s. 498, Penal Code. I would observe that the case of Queen v. Poddee (1) was decided under the old law.

"The question is one of some importance, as it not unfrequently happens that during the course of a trial of a case under s. 366, Penal Code, facts are elicited which tend to show complicity on the part of the woman, and it is desirable that there should be an authoritative decision whether in such a case, s. 238, Criminal Procedure Code, precludes a conviction [486] under s. 498, Penal Code, when there has been no complaint under that section, but only a charge under s. 366, Penal Code.

"The Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict under s. 498, Penal Code, the offence charged by husband and wife being one under s. 366, and there being no complaint under s. 498. On this point I would respectfully refer to ss. 238 and 199, Criminal Procedure Code, and to a ruling of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Empress of India v. Kallu (2).

"If the High Court be of opinion that the Deputy Magistrate had not jurisdiction, it will be necessary to set aside the convictions of both the accused.

"There is no reliable evidence to support the finding that the accused Abdul enticed or detained the woman with criminal intent.

"I consider the sentence of one month imposed in this case to be very unsatisfactory. It will greatly assist me in my work in this district if the learned Judges who dispose of this reference, are good enough to express an opinion with reference to the imposition of non-appealable sentences of imprisonment in cases in which the facts are such as to render it very desirable that an appealable sentence should be passed. It is a practice against which I set my face steadily."

No one appeared on the reference.

The order of the Court (PIGOT and HILL, JJ.) was as follows:—

ORDER.

We think that when the husband is complainant and brings his complaint under s. 366, a conviction under s. 498 may properly be had, if the evidence be such as to justify a conviction for the minor offence, and yet insufficient for a conviction for the graver one. We think that such a case is within the intention of s. 238. The intention of the law is to prevent Magistrates inquiring of their own motion into cases connected with marriage, unless the husband or other person authorized moves them to do so: and we think it cannot be held that a conviction such as was had in the present case was contrary to the intention of the law in this respect.

We do not think we should interfere with the conviction of either prisoner.

MOHESH NARAIN MUNSHI (Plaintiff) v. TARUCK NATH MOITRA
AND OTHERS (Defendants). [15th and 16th November, 1892.]

Limitation Act (IX of 1871), sch. II, art. 129—Suit questioning an adoption—Invalidity, by Hindu law, of second adoption.

An adopted son, proprietor in possession of half of the estate of his adoptive father, deceased, sued to obtain the other half which was in the defendant's possession. The defence was that the latter was entitled to the half share in dispute, having been adopted to the deceased under a power given by him to his widow, and exercised by her.

Held, that the suit, having, in order to succeed, brought into question the second adoption, was a suit to set aside an adoption, within the meaning of art. 129, sch. II, Act IX of 1871, the Limitation Act in force for a period after the cause of suit had arisen. Jagadamba Chowdhurani v. Dakhina Mohan (1) referred to and followed. With reference to the coming into operation of the subsequent Limitation Act XV of 1877, s. 2 of the latter Act prevented the revival of any right to sue already barred by the previous Act, as the right now claimed had been. Appasami Odayar v. Subramanya Odayar (2) referred to.

It was nevertheless clear that if this suit had not been barred, the second adoption could not have been held valid under Hindu law as an adoption; because, by that law, a second adoption cannot be made during the life of a son previously adopted. Rungama v. Atchama (3) referred to.

APPEAL from a decree (4th September 1889) reversing, so far as it was in favour of the plaintiff, a decree (14th June 1887) of the Subordinate Judge of Pabna and Bogra.

In this suit, brought on the 21st November 1885, the plaintiff sued as the adopted son of Shib Narain Munshi, a Brahman of Bogra, who died on the 30th November 1850, the adoption having taken place in 1848. Before that adoption, in 1844, Shib Narain [486] had executed an anumatipatra giving power to his two wives, Harosunderi and Tripura Sunderi who were childless, to adopt. Under that power the latter acted in 1851 by adopting Taruck Nath Moitra, by the name of Girish Narain Munshi, the first and principal defendant in this suit.

The question now raised was whether the appellant, Mohesh Narain Munshi, who, as the adopted son by Shib Narain himself, had succeeded to a moiety of the estate of his adoptive father, was entitled to a decree for the other moiety, or whether the suit was barred under art. 129 of sch. II, Act IX of 1871, more than twelve years having elapsed from the date of the adoption to that of the institution of the suit.

The clauses in the anumatipatra of 1844, which was addressed to the two co-wives, were the following:—

“If no son be born of either of you, then on my death each of you shall, according to this anumatipatra of mine, adopt five sons, that is to say, on the death of the first one a second, and on his death a third, and on his death a fourth, and on his death, up to a fifth; otherwise, as long as one adopted son is alive you shall not find fault with him for no reason and adopt a second son. If I die during the lifetime of my mother, then as long as she lives she will hold all the properties, moveable and immoveable, left by me, and maintain you both together with the adopted sons. You will not be able to hold possession yourselves without her consent. On her death you will yourselves hold the management and enjoy the proceeds for life, and both of you will get in equal shares also the moveable and immoveable properties which I may acquire hereafter, whether in my name or benami. You shall have no power to effect sale or gift, and as long as you live the adopted son shall not be able to dispossess you, or register their own names in lieu of your names in the sudder, or effect sale or gift. On your death they will themselves have the management.”

In 1845 and in 1848 Shib Narain addressed to the Deputy Collector petitions, stating that he had given his adopted son to his elder wife, and referred to the anumatipatra as authorizing an adoption of a son to him by his younger wife, such son to be hers. After Shib Narain's death in 1850, his mother, Nobodurga applied in a petition in which the widows joined for mutation of names by entry of theirs. But this was deferred, and meantime Tripura, the younger widow, adopted Taruck Nath on the 16th September 1851, the petition being afterwards renewed, with a statement of [489] the fact of both the adoptions. Nobodurga died in 1854, and on 31st March 1855 the widows, describing themselves as mothers respectively of the two minor adopted sons, petitioned for a certificate under Act XX of 1841. This was granted by the District Judge to them as guardians of the two minors. Down to 1869 the widows lived jointly with the adopted sons as an undivided family. After that time the widows separated, each taking her son with her; and the income of the estate was divided and a moiety was paid to each and her son, separate collections being made till the death of Tripura in 1884. The plaintiff came of age about 1861 and the first defendant in 1862-63.

The plaint was filed against Taruck Nath and his children, and against the surviving widow, Haro Sunderi. It alleged that the adoption of the first defendant was invalid, and claimed the property left by Tripura, at whose death, on the 10th August 1884, the cause of action was stated to have occurred. The property sued for was divided into four schedules, the first comprising the estate in Shib Narain's possession at his death; the second, moveable property; the third, other moveables in the possession of the defendant; the fourth, estate acquired by Tripura after the death of her husband.

The first defendant in his written statement asserted his own adoption, relying on the continued recognition of himself as an adopted son. He claimed part of the property in suit as his own and part as the property of Tripura, which she had given to him by her will. He also relied on limitation under art. 129 of sch. II of Act IX of 1871. The other defendants, except Harosunderi, who supported the plaint, and who died pending the suit, set up, in effect, the same defence. Much of the evidence was directed to establish the making of the two adoptions, matters not material to this report, for the first adoption was no longer disputed at the stage of this appeal, and the validity of the second could only come into question if the suit should be held not to be barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge's judgment was for the plaintiff as to the property in the first schedule of the plaint;—that was the property in land left by Shib Narain, which at his death came into the possession of Tripura. He dismissed the suit as to the [490] property in the other schedules on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show that it was the estate of Shib Narain. The reasons given were that the plaintiff had a good title as adopted son, while the defendant had no such title, he having been in effect only the nominal son of Tripura, and not a son legally adopted to Shib Narain. He held, upon the construction of the anumatipatra that it was testamentary, conferring life estates upon Shib Narain's mother and the widows in succession. The result was, in his opinion, that the plaintiff's right to the estate held by Tripura till her death in 1884 did not arise till that occurred, and that the plaintiff's suit was not barred by limitation.

Both parties appealed from this decision. The High Court (TOTTENHAM and GHOSE, JJ.) on the appeal of the defendant reversed, on the 4th September 1889, the decision of the original Court in favour of the plaintiff, and on the 15th February 1890 the same Bench dismissed the plaintiff's cross appeal, holding that the latter decision was governed by the former.

In their judgment the High Court arrived at a different conclusion from that of the original Court as to the effect of the anumatipatra. They considered that that document, if it stood alone, would have interposed life estates of the widows before the interests of the adopted sons arose. They thought, however, that this intention had been changed so early as June 1845, when Shib Narain's petition was presented to the Deputy Collector, and that the documents which were exchanged at the time of the plaintiff's adoption excluded the idea that his estate as heir to his father was to be postponed to that of the widows. The subsequent petition to the Collector in May 1848 did not revive the anumatipatra in its entirety, but merely repeated the authority it gave for a second adoption. That being so, the plaintiff's title accrued at the death of Shib Narain in 1850, and the adverse possession of Tripura and her son accrued at the latest in 1869, when the separation between the widows took place. The result was that the suit was barred by art. 141 of Act XV of 1877.

The Court also considered that long before the Act of 1877 came into force the suit had been barred by art. 129 of Act IX of 1871, inasmuch as the plaintiff could not have recovered [491] the whole property at any time after the second adoption in 1851 without setting it aside, and therefore, according to the decision in Jagadamba Choudhrani

v. Dakhina Mohun(1), the limitation of twelve years ran from the date of the adoption of the principal defendant by Tripura in 1852. The plaintiff's suit was accordingly held to be barred, so that no occasion arose for considering whether the adoption of the first and principal defendant was valid in law or not, a decision which in effect determined the result of the plaintiff's appeal as well as that of the defendant.

On this appeal preferred by the plaintiff,

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that the judgment of the High Court had wrongly applied limitation. The suit was not barred as a suit for property that had been held adversely to the plaintiff for more than twelve years, nor was it barred under art. 129 of sch. II of Act IX of 1871, by reason of the appellants not having sued "to set aside the adoption" of the defendant within twelve years from the time when it purported to have been made. Upon a right construction of the anumatipatra of 1844 followed by the acts of the parties, the High Court should have decided that estates vested in the mother and in the widows preceded the interests of the plaintiff and of the first defendant, in such a manner that the plaintiff was not entitled to bring this suit until after the death of Tripura in 1884. The directions in the anumatipatra that the widows should not be dispossessed, and that their management was not to be disturbed, had been carried out; and the result was that the plaintiff having sued within twelve years from the time when his right had accrued, was within time. This referred to the limitation imposed upon suits generally for the possession of property; and neither art. 141 of sch. II of Act IX of 1871, nor art. 140 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877, barred the present one. A double limitation had, however, been put forward; and besides the above, the special bar in suits involving the question of an adoption had been set up. Article 129 of sch. II of Act IX of 1871 on this point did not apply to this case. Article 118 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877, an amended law, related to suits for declaration of the invalidity of the adoption or that it had not [492] in fact taken place and the distinction pointed out in Basdeo v. Gopal (2) should be referred to. This was that when the suit was for the possession of property to which a limitation, other than that of art. 118 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877, was applicable, that other limitation might govern, although the question of the validity of the adoption might arise. Jagadamba Chowdhani v. Dakhina Mohun (1) was not identical with the present case.

Sir H. Davey, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondents, argued that the suit was barred by limitation under art. 129, sch. II, Act IX of 1871. They referred to the judgment in Jagadamba Chowdhani v. Dakhina Mohun (1), and contended that the appeal involved only a repetition of the argument which did not prevail in that case. They also referred to Appasami Odayar v. Subramaniam Odayar (3) as showing that a suit, once barred, as this had been, under Act IX of 1871, could not be treated as falling within Act XV of 1877. Upon the alternative bar applicable to this as to other suits, without reference to the alleged adoption, they relied on the plaintiff's having been out of possession from the time when there was a separation of the members of the family in 1869, arguing that from 1873 onwards there had been, upon the facts, a possession adverse to the plaintiff.

LORD SHAND:—The plaintiff is in possession, as proprietor, of one moiety of the estate, moveable and immoveable, of the deceased Shib Narain, and in this suit he seeks to have it declared that he is entitled as proprietor to possession of the other moiety of that estate. The plaintiff's undisputed right to the half of the estate in his possession arises from the fact that Shib Narain, who died in 1850, had adopted him as his son in 1848. The principal defendant, Grish Narain (hereinafter referred to as the defendant), in possession, of the other half of the estate, maintains his right to continue in possession, and to have the plaint dismissed on the [493] ground (1) that he also is an adopted son of the late Shib Narain, having been adopted as such by Tripura Sunderi Debi, the second of two surviving wives of Shib Narain, who made the adoption by authority of her husband, alleged to have been conferred in a deed of anumatipatra granted by him in 1844, about six years before he died, and (2) that in any view the suit is barred by limitation on two separate and independent grounds, one being the defendant's possession of the property claimed for upwards of twelve years before the present suit was instituted, the other the lapse of twelve years after the defendant's adoption without any suit having been raised to set the adoption aside. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was not barred by limitation on either of the grounds now stated, and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff, but on appeal to the High Court this decree was reversed, and the suit was dismissed, the Court having held that the suit was barred by limitation on each of the separate grounds pleaded.

The validity of the plaintiff's adoption has not been disputed in this appeal. On the other hand it is clear that the adoption of the respondent was invalid, for it has been long settled, according to the Hindu law of adoption and succession, that a valid second adoption cannot be made when a son under a previous adoption is alive; Rungana v. Atchama (1). The plaintiff accordingly would be entitled to succeed, if his suit were not barred by limitation; and on the question of limitation the decision of the appeal depends.

Shib Narain was survived by his two wives, Harosunderi, to whom he had given the plaintiff as a son at the time of his adoption, and Tripura Sunderi, who, as already stated, after her husband's death, adopted the respondent. Tripura Sunderi survived till the year 1884, and in the following year 1885, the present suit was instituted, Harosunderi (who has since died) having been called as a "pro forma defendant." The plaintiff's answer to the plea of limitation, in so far as founded on adverse possession, is that Tripura Sunderi and not the defendant was the person in possession of the moiety of the estate in dispute till her death, and that consequently until that event occurred, no [494] cause of action for possession arose. The plaintiff, referring to the provisions, of the anumatipatra by Shib Narain of 1844 alleges that it gave to each of his two widows a right to a life-rent of a moiety of his estates, and that, at least after the death of Shib Narain's mother (to whom the plaintiff maintains that a life-rent of the whole estates was given by the same deed, and who died four years after her son), Tripura Sunderi obtained and continued in possession of the moiety now in dispute till she died.

(1) 4 M. I.A. 1.

In reply to this defence the defendant has maintained, first, that any life-rent right intended to be conferred by Shib Narain on his wives by the anumatipatra was conditional on his death without having adopted a son, and that as he afterwards adopted the plaintiff no such right of life-rent existed on his death. Again, it was maintained that at least the plaintiff's adoption, taken in connection with certain subsequent actings by his father, prevented the acquisition of any life-rent by his widows; and further that, in any view, in point of fact, neither of the widows were in possession or maintained a right to possession as for themselves. The defendant alleges that after Shib Narain's death, and after his adoption by Tripura Sunderi, possession was all along held by the plaintiff and defendant as adopted sons. He contends that their respective mothers, in so far as they acted, did so originally as guardians of their adopted sons, who were minors, and that such possession as the widows continued to have after the sons respectively came of age, was held on behalf of their sons as having the right of ownership of the estates.

Much of the argument on the appeal related to the points just mentioned, and involved a critical examination of the provisions of the anumatipatra, and the actings of the parties, particularly as bearing on the character of the alleged possession of the widows. Their Lordships have however come to the conclusion (without expressing any dissent from the view of the High Court that the suit is barred by adverse possession) that it is unnecessary to form any opinion on these questions, for their Lordships are satisfied that the defence of limitation has been clearly established on the other ground, viz., the long unchallenged adoption of the principal defendant, notwithstanding his assertion of the status and right of an adopted son, and his enjoyment, with the complete [495] knowledge of the plaintiff, of the advantages which that status gave him.

The Limitation Act of 1871, which applies to the time when the period of limitation was running in this case, required by art. 129 of the second schedule that any suit to set aside an adoption should be instituted twelve years from "the date of the adoption, or (at the option of the plaintiff) the date of the death of the adoptive father." The present is not a suit in which the plaintiff expressly asks for a decree to "set aside" the defendant's adoption, or to obtain a declaration that the "adoption was invalid," which would probably be a more apt expression to use. The plaintiff merely asks for a declaration of his right, and that possession may be given to him of the properties in dispute. But this, in the circumstances, obviously involves the setting aside of the defendant's adoption, or in effect a judgment or finding by the Court that the adoption is invalid, for the defence of possession founded on the adoption directly involves the decision of the question,—was the adoption invalid? In the case of Jagadamba Chowdhurani v. Dakhina Mohun(1) which was very fully argued and carefully considered, it was settled that a suit to set aside an adoption within the meaning of these words in the Limitation Act need not be a suit having declaratory conclusions, but that any suit in which the decree prayed for involves the decision of the question of validity of an adoption set up in defence is a suit to set aside an adoption. It was there said: "It seems to their Lordships that the more rational and probable principle to ascribe to an Act whose language admits of it, is the principle of allowing only a moderate time within which such delicate and intricate questions as those involved in adoptions shall be brought into dispute, so that it shall strike alike at all suits in which the plaintiff cannot possibly succeed without displacing an apparent adoption by virtue of which the defendant is in possession."

The present suit is, therefore, within the meaning of the Limitation Act of 1871, a suit "to set aside an adoption." The adoption was made by Tripura Sunderi, on the alleged authority of the anumatipatra by her husband in the year 1851, with all the usual ceremonies, and was duly reported to the Government [496] Collector. Thereafter, on the 20th February 1852, it was ordered—on a petition by Nobodurga, the mother of Shib Narain, and his two widows in which it was stated that Nobodurga "together with the said two sons" had taken possession of all the moveable and immoveable properties of the deceased—that the names of Nobodurga, of Harosunderi as mother of Mohesh Narain, minor, and of Tripura Sunderi as mother of Grish Narain, minor, should be registered in respect of the deceased's property. After the death of Nobodurga, the two widows, describing themselves as mothers of their respective minor sons, presented an application under Act XX of 1841 to obtain a certificate of title for the administration of their late husband's estate, which would enable them to sue all debtors to the estate. In this petition they stated that their two minor sons had got the right of inheritance in all the properties, moveable and immoveable, of the deceased, and that they, the petitioners, became entitled thereto as guardians on behalf of the said two minor sons, and were in possession on their behalf; and in 1855 a certificate was granted to them accordingly "as guardians of the said minors," under the authority of which they thereafter administered the estate. It need only be further stated that from the time of his adoption in 1851, the defendant lived with his mother, Tripura Sunderi, as the adopted son of her late husband, till she herself died in 1834, being for about 33 years; that down to 1869, a period of 18 years, the two widows and their adopted sons (the plaintiff and the defendant) lived in family together; and that even after that date down to 1880 the collections of rents and income of the deceased's estates were made jointly by the widows and divided in equal moieties, the widows having their respective sons in family with them. It is thus quite clear—apart from any question of possession, and whether the possession for so long a period of time as elapsed at Tripura Sunderi's death was truly the possession of her son, for whom she acted as guardian and after he attained majority as his manager, or was possession by herself in virtue of a right of life-rent conferred by her husband's anumatipatra, and in any view—that the right of the defendant to the status of an adopted son of Shib Narain was openly and constantly asserted, not only in all actings connected with the estates, but also in his daily life in family with [497] the plaintiff, who, indeed, in many ways acknowledged or acquiesced in the assertion of this right.

The plaintiff came of age in 1861-62, and the defendant in 1862-63. The period of twelve years after the defendant's adoption expired in 1863, and eight years more had elapsed when the Limitation Act of 1871 was passed. By s. 1 of that statute, which received the assent of the Governor-General on the 24th March 1871, it was provided that the clauses of limitation should not come into force until the 1st April 1873. The plaintiff had thus upwards of two years after March 1871 within which he might have brought his suit to set aside the adoption, and had notice under the statute that the period of limitation of twelve years from the date of the adoption would be applicable on the expiry of that time. Accordingly, on the 1st April 1873, no such suit having been raised, the plaintiff's right of action was barred.

It was suggested that the Act of 1871 having been superseded by the Act of 1877, the question of limitation should be determined with reference to the provisions of the latter statute, in which the language used is somewhat different, the suit there referred to, as necessary to save the limitation, being described as one "to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid, or never, in fact, took place." It seems to be more than doubtful whether, if these were the words of the statute applicable to the case, the plaintiff would thereby take any advantage. But the statute of 1877, in its second section, provides as follows:—

"All references to the Indian Limitation Act, 1871, shall be read as if made to this Act; and nothing herein or in that Act contained shall be deemed to affect any title acquired, or to revive any right to sue barred, under that Act or under any enactment thereby repealed."

It is clear that, on the first April 1873, the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation under the Act of 1871, and the Act of 1877 could not revive the plaintiff's right so barred, a point which was indeed decided, in regard to the Limitation Acts of 1859 and 1871, in the case of Appasami Odayar v. Subramanya Odayar (1).

[498] Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed, and the appellant will pay the costs of the appeal.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

SURJA KANT ACHARYA (Defendant) v. HEMANTA KUMARI (Plaintiff). [6th and 16th December, 1892.]

Right of Suit—Enhancement of rent, Suit for—Right of a Hindu widow to sue for enhancement of rent as representing the estate of the deceased zamindar or as guardian of a minor son adopted to him by her—Bengal Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869), ss. 31, 46, 47.

A Hindu widow, representing a zamindari interest in a mahal, sued for the rent upon a rent-paying tenure at an enhanced rate. She had, in former years, adopted a son to her deceased husband. The defendant objected throughout that this son (deceased in 1884) having been of full age in 1881 when this suit was brought, the widow was not entitled to sue at that time, he having that right;

Held, that the Courts below had rightly disallowed this objection. There was no sufficient evidence to show that the adopted son had attained majority when this suit was brought, and the plaintiff could sue either in her character as widow of the deceased, or as guardian of the minor adopted son.

To bring into operation the special limitation enacted in s. 31 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, where deposit had been made under s. 46, the deposit could only have been effectively made of rent that had accrued due before the date of such deposit.

Two appeals, consolidated, from two decrees on one judgment (1st February 1869) of the High Court, affirming two decrees (28th February and 28th May 1887) of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh.

Both these suits related to the enhancement of the rent of a separate ten-annas portion of an ancestral tenure named Tarati, comprised within a ten-annas share of zemindari Pakhoria [499] Jarusahai, in the Mymensingh district, and forming part of a larger tenure named Kilghati. The ground of enhancement alleged was that the rent of the latter, i.e., Kilghati, had been decided by the Sadar Diwani Adalat, in 1806 to be enhanceable in its entirety, and had been accordingly so enhanced; and that Tarati, part of that tenure, had become liable to further enhancement, according to the custom prevalent in the district and pargana, by reason of the rent paid by the defendant before the Bengali year 1288, corresponding to 1881, being less than that paid in similar mahals by holders of ijara taluks in the surrounding parganas. The defendant, now appellant, denied the plaintiff's right to enhance, either at all, or to the extent demanded.

Questions were raised in the Courts below as to the real character of the tenure held by the defendant, described in some of the documentary evidence as "maurasi ijara" and reference was made to the decision of 1806 and the terms of a lease made in 1808 between persons now represented by the parties. It was also considered whether the defendant had held of the plaintiff and her predecessors in estate as proprietors of a separate share and independently of other co-sharers. When it had been decided that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for rents at rates in excess of those previously subsisting, the rates were then determined. But the only questions on this appeal were in the first suit as to whether Maharani Sarat Sunderi Debi, the plaintiff, who was widow of the late Jogendra Narain Roy, zamindar, had been, when she sued, in a position to bring the suit, she having adopted a son to her deceased husband; and in the second suit a point was involved as to the proper construction of s. 31 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 in connection with ss. 46 and 47.

The widow, who died pending the suits, was now represented, as she had been in the appeals to the High Court, by her daughter-in-law, Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi, widow and executrix of the late Kumar Jotindra Narain, the son adopted by Sarat Sunderi to her deceased husband. Jotindra Narain died in 1884. The first suit was brought on the 10th July 1882 (27th Assar 1289) for enhanced rent in arrear, after service of notice of enhancement, dated 4th January 1881, with cesses and interest, amounting to Rs. 6,790, in respect of the Bengali year 1288, or [500] 12th April 1881 to 12th April 1882. The second suit was brought by and against the same parties on the 10th April 1886, while the first suit was still pending, to avoid the possible bar of limitation as to part of the claim, and to recover the rent, as sought to be enhanced in the first suit, in respect of the subsequent years 1289, 1290, and 1291, and the first part of 1292.

In the first suit the Subordinate Judge, after obtaining the report of a Sub-Deputy Collector, deputed to make enquiries as to the area and quality of the lands in suit, and the rates prevailing in the district, decided in the plaintiff's favour, decreeing an enhanced annual rent of Rs. 4,076.

In the second suit the Subordinate Judge held that limitation of six months under s. 31 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, on which the defendant relied, was not applicable. He found that the deposits purporting to have been made by him under ss. 46 and 47 were all made before the expiration of the respective years in respect of which the plaintiff sued; in other words before the rent, which was annual, was due. He also disallowed that part of the claim which related to the rent for the unexpired year 1292 as being a premature claim. But he made a decree in the plaintiff's favour at the rates, as enhanced in the first of these suits for the years 1289, 1290 and 1291.

In the first suit, on appeal and cross appeal from the Subordinate Judge's judgment to the High Court, his decision was affirmed in all respects.

In the second suit the High Court dismissed the defendant's appeal on the ground that the deposits of rent in question had not been made in accordance with law, disposing of the appeals in both suits in a single judgment (delivered by PRINSEP and GHOSE, JJ.) which, on the points now raised, was as follows:—

"It appears that the objection really taken by the defendant, and pressed by him until the last stage of the case, after the evidence had been taken and the arguments of the pleaders on both sides laid before the Subordinate Judge for decision, was, that the suit had been brought by the lady on her own account and that inasmuch as she had adopted a son who had attained majority, she was not competent to sue. Whether the adopted son, Jotindra Narain Roy, had attained majority or not at the time of the institution of the suit, does not appear on the evidence on the record. There is no evidence either way, except that we are referred to the terms of his will [501] the first clause of which refers to a previous will executed by him, from which we are asked to infer, that at the time he made his previous will, he had attained his majority. It is impossible for us to form any conclusion from such a statement. We are also referred to vague statements made by two or three witnesses as to his age. It is impossible from the evidence of these witnesses to come to any reasonable conclusion as to his exact age, or that he had attained majority before the institution of the suit. From the proceedings on the record of this case, it seems that the plaintiff had all along acted as proprietor of the estate, and that she had been so regarded by the defendant. Her own name was registered as proprietor, and continued until Jotindra Narain Roy asserted his right on attaining majority. In the rent-receipts granted by her, which were put in as evidence by the defendant, she appears as the actual proprietor. The notice of enhancement served on the defendant, bearing date the 15th Pous 1287, also purports to proceed from her in her own right; and the rent at the old rates, which alone the defendant admitted was payable, was deposited by him in the Collectorate also in her name as proprietor. If, therefore, the suit be regarded as brought by the plaintiff in her own right, as apparently it was, the objection cannot be regarded by us as in any way fatal. If the suit was brought in her own right, it was simply a case of assignment of her interest in the suit to Jotindra Narain. If, on the other hand, it be regarded as a suit brought by her on behalf of her adopted son, the minor, it is not proved that on that date she was incapable of suing because her son had attained majority; and we may observe that there can be no doubt that when he attained majority, he by his acts approved what may have been done on his behalf."

As to the appeal in the other suit, the judgment proceeded thus:—

"This appeal relates to a suit brought by the same plaintiff for arrears of rent for the years 1289, 1290, 1291 and up to the Falgun kist of 1292, that is to say, for years subsequent to that which formed the subject of the previous suit, and at the same rate of rent which was there claimed. The defendant deposited the rent at the old rates for all these years within the period ranging from the 27th to the 30th Cheyt of each year, and pleaded that, inasmuch as this suit had not been brought within six months from the dates of deposit, it was barred by limitation under the provisions of s. 31 of the Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII) of 1869. To this the plaintiff objected, that inasmuch as the deposits had not been made in accordance with law, but had been made before the rents fell due and were therefore premature, the defendant could not get the benefit of that law. Other objections were made which it is unnecessary to consider. We agree with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that, consequently, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for [502] arrears of rent at the rates given in the other case. This is the only point raised in this appeal before us. We observe that the rent for the year 1292 up to Falgun kist has been disallowed, inasmuch as it was held in the previous case that rent was not payable by monthly instalments, but only at the end of each year. This matter has not been brought before us in appeal. The result is that this appeal is also dismissed with costs."

On this appeal.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C. and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, appeared for the appellant.

Sir H. Davey, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the respondent.

For the appellant it was argued that the first suit could only have been instituted by, or on behalf of, the adopted son Jotindra Narain. He should have sued in his own name, if of full age, or if he was not of full age, the widow might have sued as his next friend, or guardian, on his behalf. There was, however, evidence on the record, to which reference was made, showing that he had attained eighteen years of age when the plaint in the first suit was filed. Reference was made to Ram Kannye Gossamee v. Meernomoyee Dossee (1).

The chief ground of appeal in the second suit was that the claim for rent for the years 1289, 1290 and 1291 was barred by the deposit of the rent admitted to be due before suit brought under s. 31 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. As to service of notice reference was made to Taramonee Koonwaree v. Jeebun Mundur (2).

Counsel for the respondent were heard only as to the date of rent due and service of notice.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, replied.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment on 16th December was delivered by SIR R. COUCH.—The suit in the first of these appeals was brought by Sarat Sunderi Debi, widow, executrix of the late Raja Jogendra Narain Roy, to recover from the appellant the rent at an enhanced rate for one year, ending on the 11th April 1882 of a separate ten-annas share of lands held by the appellant under a lease which was perpetual and heritable, but the rent of which was liable to be enhanced under the provisions of Act VIII [503] of 1869 of the Bengal Council. Raja Jogendra Narain Roy, who was the owner of the ten-annas share, married Sarat Sunderi Debi, and after his death, the date of which does not appear in the proceedings, she adopted a son to him, named Kumar Jotindra Narain Roy, who married the respondent and is now dead. The first Court decided that the plaintiff was entitled to rent for the year at an enhanced rate, and made a decree for it fixing the amount. This decree was affirmed on appeal by the High Court.

(1) 2 W.R. 49.

(2) 6 W. R. Act X, 99.

The plaint stated that the plaintiff had the title to and the possession of the ten-annas share, which, by a partition of the zamindari, was recorded as No. 122 in the Collectorate of the district, and that the defendant had been paying to the plaintiff the old rent. The defendant, the present appellant, in his written statement took many objections to the suit, but Mr. Cowie, in opening the case for him, said that the only question for determination by their Lordships was whether the plaintiff had a right to bring the suit. This question was raised in the written statement, by the allegation that Jotindra Narain Roy, having come of age long before the institution of the suit, the plaintiff was not entitled to bring the suit in respect of the zamindari left by her husband. The first of the settled issues is: "Whether the plaintiff has a right to sue for enhancement?" Now the allegation in the plaint that the defendant had been paying the old rent the plaintiff has not denied. Consequently the defendant could not dispute the plaintiff's title. He could only show that it had expired, and that therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to any rent. In addition to his written statement, the defendant, in a petition filed on the 5th December 1883, in answer to a petition filed by Jotindra Narain Roy for the substitution of his name for that of the plaintiff, said that the plaintiff was the owner only during the son's minority, and that, as the son attained majority before the institution of the suit, she had no right to bring it. Construing the issue with the written statement and this petition, the question to be tried appears to be whether the son had come of age before the institution of the suit. This would be the question, whether the plaintiff was suing in her own right or as guardian of her minor son. It is unnecessary to [504] consider the effect of the title to the plaint, where she is called "widow of the late Raja Jogendra Nath Roy, mother of Sriman Kumar Jotindra Narain Roy, minor," which may be consistent with her suing in either character. The plaint rather supports the view that she was suing in her own right. Two of the plaintiff's witnesses deposed on cross-examination to the age of Jotindra Narain Roy. The defendant did not give any evidence of it. A will of Jotindra Narain Roy, made when he admittedly was of age, referring to a previous will executed by him, was also relied upon. Their Lordships agree with the judgment of the High Court, which said that it was impossible to form any conclusion from the statement in the will, and impossible from the evidence of the witnesses to come to any reasonable conclusion as to his exact age, or that he had attained majority before the institution of the suit. Therefore the only question for their Lordships' determination must be decided in the plaintiff's favour, and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the High Court and to dismiss this appeal.

The suit in the second appeal is between the same parties, and was brought for enhanced rent of the property for the three subsequent years and part of a fourth year. The only defence relied upon before their Lordships was that the old rent and cesses for each of the three years were tendered to the plaintiff in proper time, and she not having accepted them they were deposited in Court under Act VIII of 1869 (Bengal Council), and the plaintiff brought no suit within six months of the date of the deposit, and so the claim for rent at an enhanced rate was barred by a special law of limitation. As to the part of the rent for the fourth year, the defence was that the rent was payable yearly and was not due. Section 46 of Act VIII of 1869 enacts that if any under-tenant or raiyat shall tender payment of what he shall consider to be the full amount of rent due from him at the date of the tender, and if the amount so tendered shall not be accepted and a receipt in full forthwith granted, the under-tenant or raiyat may deposit the amount in the Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the rent. By s. 47 the Court is to issue a notice to the person to whose credit the money has been deposited, and serve it. [505] By s. 31 it is enacted that whenever a deposit on account of rent shall have been made no suit shall be brought against the person making the deposit on account of any rent which accrued due prior to the date of the deposit, unless the suit be instituted within six months from the date of the service of the notice required by s. 47. The rent for the first of the three years became due on the 12th April 1883, for the second on the 11th April 1884, for the third on the 12th April 1885. The deposits were made on the 10th April 1883, the 8th April 1884, and the 11th April 1885, all before the expiration of the year when the rent became due. The words of the Act are plain that the deposit must be of rent which accrued due prior to the date of the deposit. They do not admit of any other construction. The first Court disallowed the rent for the part of the fourth year on the ground that it was not due, and made a decree for rent for the three years at the rate which had been fixed for the year in the previous suit. The High Court, on appeal, affirmed that decree and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the High Court, and to dismiss this appeal. The appellant will pay the costs of the appeals.

Res judicata—Rent suit Decree as to rent payable for former years—Evidence of rent payable.

The plaintiffs sued the defendants for rent of a certain jote, claiming a higher rent than the defendants admitted. The High Court in second [506] appeal gave a decree at the lesser rate admitted by the defendants. Subsequently, the plaintiffs again sued the defendants in regard to the same jote for arrears of rent for subsequent years at the rate claimed in the former suit. The defendants contended that the rate of the rent as regards this jote was by virtue of the judgment of the High Court in the previous suit res judicata as between themselves and the plaintiff.

Held, that where in a rent-suit a Judge tries the question and gives judgment on the question "what is the yearly rent," and makes that the foundation of his judgment, that decision is res judicata between the parties. The previous judgment of the High Court, therefore, operated as res judicata.

Hurry Behari Bhagat v. Pargun Ahir (1) followed.

Per NORRIS, J.—Even if the judgment of the High Court did not operate as res judicata, still it was some evidence of the rate of the rent of the previous year.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The plaintiffs sued to recover the rent of a certain jote at the rate of Rs. 52-12 per annum. The defendants admitted the holding, but stated that the rent was not Rs. 52-12 per annum but Rs. 15-6-6, and stated that the whole of the rent had been paid. Prior to this there had been another suit between the same parties concerning the same jote, and in that case also the plaintiffs had claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 52-12 per annum, the defendant contending as in this suit that the amount due should be calculated at the rate of Rs. 15-6-6. The lower appellate Court in deciding that case gave a decree at the rate of Rs. 52-12. Acting on that decision the Munsif in the present case gave a decree at the same rental. The defendants then appealed to the Subordinate Judge. In the meantime the previous suit had been appealed to the High Court, and the decree of the lower appellate Court was modified, a decree being passed at the rate of Rs. 15-6-6. The Subordinate Judge basing his decision in the present suit on the decree of the High Court, gave the plaintiffs a decree at the rate of Rs. 15-6-6. The plaintiffs being dissatisfied with this decision appealed to the High Court.

DEC. 8.

LATE

CIVIL.

PETHERAM, G.J.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants to recover the rent of a jote, and the rent claimed is at the rate of Rs. 52-12 a year. The defendant Nizamuddi in his written statement, admits the holding, but states that the rental is Rs. 15-6-6 instead of the larger sum, and goes on to say that everything has been paid. The matter came before the Munsif in the first instance, and he decreed the suit at the rental alleged by the plaintiffs on the ground that, in a prior suit brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants in respect of the same holding, the first Court of appeal had decreed the plaintiffs' rent at that rate. From that judgment the defendants appealed, and the matter then came before the Subordinate Judge, and he decreed the appeal and modified the decree by giving the plaintiffs a decree for the amount of rent at Rs. 15-6-6 only, on the ground that the decree, upon which the plaintiffs had relied in the first Court, had in the meantime been reversed by this Court, and that the decree, as it then stood, was for the smaller amount only. From that decision the plaintiffs have now appealed, and their only ground really is that the decision in the prior suit cannot be given in evidence to show what is the rental in this suit. Now, that is a question upon which there has been a considerable amount of discussion, but the last case on the subject which is reported is the case of Hurry Behari Bhagat v. Pargun Ahir (1). In that case the learned Judges held that, where in a rent-suit a Judge tries the question and gives judgment on the question, "what is the yearly rent," and makes that the foundation of his judgment, that becomes res judicata between the parties. That, as I said just now, is the last case on the subject, and is a case which we are bound to follow, and consequently it has been necessary to do, as was done in that case, viz., to examine the judgment of this Court upon which the Subordinate Judge acted in giving a decree for the smaller sum. When one comes to examine that judgment, it appears that, as in the case of Hurry Behari Bhagat v. Pargun Ahir (1) the Judges in arriving at the conclusion at which they arrived, as to the amount of money due [508] from the defendants to the plaintiffs, tried and decided the question judicially, what was the yearly rent at which the tenure was held by the defendants under the plaintiffs. They having done that, as in the other case, this case falls exactly within the authority of that case. Consequently, the conclusion at which the learned Subordinate Judge arrived upon these materials was correct, and the materials upon which he arrived at it were rightly and properly before him. In the result this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

NORRIS, J.—I concur in holding that this appeal should be dismissed, I think I ought to say, because I entertain a somewhat strong opinion on the subject, an opinion not shared in any degree by the Chief Justice, that, even if the judgment of the High Court—a judgment of Mr. Justice Ghose and myself, which the Chief Justice says, having been arrived at upon the authority of the case decided by Mr. Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Gordon, operates as res judicata—does not operate as such, still it is some evidence as to the rate of rent of the previous year. But I distinctly wish it to be understood that this is an expression of my own opinion, and that it is not shared in by the Chief Justice.

[509] THIS suit was instituted by one Fatima Bibi, otherwise called Azizunnissa, stated to be an infant of the age of 8 years or thereabouts, through her father and natural guardian, Hafiz Abdool Kadir.

The plaint, which was verified by Hafiz Abdool Kadir, stated that an agreement in writing was entered into on the 16th September 1888 between the defendant and the plaintiff's father, acting on the plaintiff's behalf, whereby the defendant agreed to let certain premises therein described as vacant land to the plaintiff for a period of one year at a monthly rent of Rs. 5-8, exclusive of taxes ; that Hafiz Abdool Kadir entered into possession of the premises on behalf of the plaintiff, and acquired from the out-going tenant a tiled hut situate on the land ; that some months subsequent on Hafiz Abdool Kadir complaining to the defendant of the unsatisfactory nature of tiled huts for letting purposes, the latter offered to let the land on a heritable and alienable lease on the same terms as to rent and taxes as those already agreed to, provided that Hafiz Abdool Kadir agreed on behalf of the plaintiff to erect permanent masonry buildings on the land ; that thereafter negotiations took place between them, which ultimately resulted on the 12th Magh 1295 (24th January 1889) in the defendant giving the plaintiff a hukumnamah, or order to build, and also agreeing to execute in favour of the plaintiff such a heritable and alienable lease as would be sufficient in law to carry out the arrangement. A copy of the translation of the hukumnamah will be found in the judgment of the Court.

The plaint went on to state that thereafter Hafiz Abdool Kadir on behalf of the plaintiff erected a pucca two-storied building on the land, and that the defendant during the construction frequently suggested alterations and improvements ; that during the construction and subsequent thereto, Hafiz Abdool Kadir frequently asked the defendant to execute the lease, but the latter put him off on various pretexts, though he received the rent at the agreed-on rate up to January 1892 ; that in that month, however, the defendant demanded an increased rent, which was refused, and that this resulted in a notice to quit the house and land being served by the defendant ; that in reply to this notice the plaintiff caused a letter to be written, in which it was stated that some Rs. 10,000 had been [510] spent by her on the construction of the house; and referring to the agreement, it called on the defendant forthwith to execute the lease as arranged; that thereafter on the 23rd February 1892 the defendant instituted a suit in the Calcutta Small Cause Court, in the nature of a suit for ejectment, which was still pending.

The plaintiff claimed that the defendant might be restrained from proceeding with the Small Cause Court suit; that he might be ordered to execute a proper lease in favour of the plaintiff, and do all other acts necessary to give effect to the arrangement, and that in default of the Court decreeing specific performance the defendant might be ordered to pay compensation to the plaintiff for the amount expended by her on the house and improvements; and that an enquiry might be directed to ascertain what she had so expended.

The defendant in his written statement admitted that he executed the agreement of the 16th September 1888 in favour of Fatima Bibi and Azizunnissa whom Hafiz Abdool Kadir had represented to be respectively his daughter and wife, and both adults, and he annexed a copy of a translation of that agreement which was in Bengali, and which was expressed to have been made and executed by two persons named Fatima Bibi and Azizunnissa through Hafiz Abdool Kadir. The written statement went on to deny any such arrangement as that set up in the plaint, and stated that the alleged hukumnamah was a forgery, and though the defendant admitted that Hafiz Abdool Kadir had caused a two-storied building to be erected, he stated the cost was only about Rs. 2,000, and alleged that some walls, which were in existence when the plaintiff took possession, had been utilized in the building. The defendant also, while denying the material portion of the plaintiff's case, pleaded a number of matters which it is not material to notice for the purpose of this report.

Mr. R. Mitra and Mr. Chuckerbutty, for the plaintiff.

Mr. T. A. Apcar and Mr. Sale, for the defendant.

After Mr. Chuckerbutty had opened the facts of the case, Mr. Apcar objected that the suit would not lie, both on the ground that an infant cannot enforce specific performance of a contract, and that the contract sued on was so vague in its nature that [511] the Court could not decree specific performance of it. As regards the former point, he contended that the right must be mutual; and that as an infant cannot be sued, he cannot therefore sue, and cited Flight v. Bolland (1) in support of his contention. He further urged that the plaint showed that the agreement sought to be enforced was with Azizunnissa as well as with the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff could not therefore sue alone.

Mr. Mitra, for the plaintiff contended that in this country a contract with an infant is only voidable and not void. Mahamed Arif v. Saraswati Debya (2) and Hanmant Lakshman v. Jayarao Narsinha (3); and that an infant can sue for specific performance. He referred to ss. 12 and 21 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), and urged that as there was nothing in that Act which required that the right to specific performance should be mutual, the plaintiff could enforce the contract, and was entitled to maintain the suit.

Mr. Apcar, in reply submitted that it was immaterial whether the contract was void or voidable, as there still existed the same want of mutuality.

The judgment of the Court (NORRIS, J.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit brought by a minor, Fatima Bibi, through her father and natural guardian, Hafiz Abdool Kadir, as her next friend, for the specific performance of a certain agreement. I take the facts from the opening of learned Counsel, Mr. Chuckerbutty, that on the 16th September 1888, corresponding with the 1st Assin 1295, the defendant granted to the minor plaintiff a lease of a piece of land for the term of one year. On this piece of land there was a tiled hut; that on the 24th January 1889, corresponding with the 12th Magh 1295, the defendant entered into a contract with the minor plaintiff in these words —

“To “Sri Fatima Bibi and Azizunnissa.

Know by (this) letter that I have given orders to construct a pucca building on my land, situate at No. 6, Rajmohun Bose's Lane. Having [512] erected the same, you and your sons, grandsons, &c., shall continue to reside therein. I shall execute an agreement hereafter. I have no time now. Finis. Year 1295. Date 12th Magh.”

“Sri Debnath Shaha.”

It is alleged that a pucca building, costing a considerable sum of money, has been erected out of the minor's money on the piece of land. The plaint asks for specific performance of this agreement and to restrain a suit in the Small Cause Court, in which suit the defendant seeks to eject the plaintiff from this piece of land. The plaint also asks for relief in the nature of payment to her for the outlay she has incurred in building the house, if she is not entitled to specific performance of the agreement. The plaint admits that the plaintiff is a minor. Upon these facts Mr. Apcar objects that the suit cannot proceed. His contentions are—

1st.—That the contract of which specific performance is sought to be decreed is a contract entered into by the defendant, not with the plaintiff alone, but with another person of the name of Azizunnissa.

2nd.—That the contract is of so vague a character that no Court could decree a specific performance of it.

3rd.—That a minor cannot enforce specific performance of a contract.

Mr. Mittra, for the plaintiff has referred me to two cases—one that of Mahamed Arif v. Saraswati Debya (1), a decision of Tottenham and Trevelyan, JJ., where it was held that a contract entered into by a minor is only voidable at the option of the minor, and another case, Hanmant Lakshman v. Jayarao Narsinha (2), where it was decided without argument that a money bond taken by a minor was good in law and may be sued upon.

I am bound to say that in my view of the Contract Act a minor in this country cannot contract at all. I cannot understand what other meaning can be put upon s. 11 of the Contract Act, except that a person who is not of age cannot contract. But whether I am right or wrong does not seem to signify as far as [513] this case is concerned, because this is a case of specific performance of a contract, and the case of Flight v. Bolland (3) is applicable. On the authority of that case I am bound

CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Ghose.

DHANPUT SINGH (2nd Party—Petitioner) v. CHATTERPUT SINGH
(1st Party—Opposite Party).^{*} [19th January, 1893.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 145—Breach of the peace—Police report—Duties of Magistrate acting under s. 145—Record of grounds—Notice to parties.

Before instituting proceedings under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate is bound to satisfy himself, on grounds which are reasonable, that a breach of the peace is imminent in regard to properties of the description specified in that section, and that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning them; and the grounds stated by him must be such as to satisfy a Court of Revision before which such case may be brought by any of the parties concerned.

Where a Magistrate, in consequence of the institution of various cases relating to breaches of the peace between the partizans of two rival zemindars, had directed the police to enquire and report whether there were sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and, having received a report which both suggested the necessity for such and set forth substantial reasons in support of the suggestion, made such report the foundation for the proceedings which he instituted, it was contended, among other things, that the Magistrate had not complied [514] with the provisions of the Code in omitting to state the grounds of his being so satisfied of the imminence of a breach of the peace.

Held, that inasmuch as the police report contained abundant evidence of the likelihood of a breach of the peace, it was sufficient, for the purposes of notice to the parties, for the Magistrate to cite it as the ground of his proceeding on which he was satisfied that a dispute within the terms of s. 145 existed, and that it would be open to the parties during the proceedings, if they disputed the necessity for them, to show before the Magistrate that no such dispute existed, or, if so advised, to move the Court of Revision to set aside the proceedings, on the ground that the Magistrate had proceeded on grounds which were not reasonable or which could not be held to be sufficient to satisfy him that such a dispute existed.

THE parties to this proceeding were zemindars possessed of landed property within the jurisdiction of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Arrareah in the district of Purneah. Owing to disputes between them regarding the rights of ownership, which had given rise to various cases of breach of the peace which came before the Sub-divisional Magistrate, he ordered the police to enquire and report whether there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace between the parties such as to necessitate proceedings under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The following report was submitted by the Inspector of Police :—

On the 30th August 1892, in Court before the Bench of the Deputy Magistrate in your subordinate's presence, Baboo Chandra Kant, servant of Baboo Chatterput Singh, stated that estate Purwaha is in my possession; if the servants of Rai Dhanput Singh come to take possession, then he will drive them off; thereafter I received the parwana annexed to this file for making report for instituting a case under s. 145, Act X. Thereupon I took the statements of the Sub-Inspectors of station Arrareah and Metiari and head-constable of the station Ranigunj. From their statements there is a likelihood of rioting and breach of the peace between the servants of Rai Dhanput Singh and Baboo Chatterput Singh as respects the Purwaha estate is apparent. And several cases have been instituted between the said parties in respect to the said estate, but even then there does not appear any means of stopping the same.

The statement of Mr. C. Durand has been taken, and I enquired after Baboo Keshab Ram Bhatt, Manager of Baboo Chatterput Singh, for taking his statement, and I issued summons too, but he did not appear. I have been informed that he has gone to his own house. This fact was brought to the notice of the Deputy Magistrate Bahadur. He verbally ordered that I need not wait for Keshab Ram Bhatt, nor is it necessary to take any statements or hold any local enquiry. From the statements of the police [515] officers, likelihood of breach of peace is apparent, on that report for proceedings under s. 145 to be made, here the parties will adduce evidence of their respective possession, therefore I did not hold any local enquiry. The statements of the police officers and the Manager of Rai Dhanput Singh are submitted along with this report. From enquiry there appears to be likelihood of a dispute occurring in respect to the Purwaha estate between Rai Dhanput Singh and Chatterput Singh, and hence there is likelihood of breach of the peace. Hence I pray through this report that proceedings be instituted under s. 145 in respect to the whole of the Purwaha estate between the said parties, and it be decided by the Court, so that no likelihood of the breach of the peace may occur, and the proceedings be taken as soon as possible. Dated the 9th September 1892.

Thereupon the Sub-divisional Magistrate passed the following order, which was issued in the form of a notice to the representatives of the parties :—

As it appears from the report of the Police Inspector of this sub-division that there have been several disputes between you and Baboo Chatterput Singh through his servants in respect to the Purwaha estate which lies within the local limits of my jurisdiction, from which there is likelihood of breach of the peace being imminent, you are, therefore, ordered to put in written statement of your claims, especially as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject in dispute referred to above in person or by pleader on the 23rd September of the current year before this Court at Arrareah, Bassuntapore, at 10 AM., and if you wish to apply for process against any of your witnesses, such application must be made immediately, otherwise no time will be allowed for this purpose on the date fixed. You must know this order is very peremptory.

Objection having been taken to the form of the notice, fresh notices were issued on the parties themselves.

An application was then made to the High Court by Rai Dhanput Singh, questioning the regularity of these proceedings on among other grounds that the Magistrate had omitted to record a proceeding stating the grounds of his belief that a dispute existed which was likely to occasion a breach of the peace, and the petition asked for the record to be sent for and the proceedings under s. 145 set aside. A rule was issued on this application which now came on to be heard.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and GHOSE, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The matter on which this rule has been granted relates to proceedings taken under s. 145, Code of Criminal Procedure, by the Magistrate of Purneah on notice given to the parties. Written statements have been put in, and the case was transferred by the order of the District Magistrate, under s. 528, from the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Arrareah to a Magistrate holding his Court in Purneah, the head-quarters of the district. The trial of the case has not yet commenced. The rule has been granted on two grounds taken on behalf of Rai Dhanput Singh, one of the parties to the case; first, that the Magistrate does not state the grounds of his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed concerning certain lands within his jurisdiction in setting out the facts, and his belief in them upon which he considers such breach of the peace as imminent; further, that he does not set out that such is imminent in regard to any specified property; and, secondly, that he transferred the case to the Magistrate sitting at Purneah without notice to the parties so as to give them an opportunity of stating their objections to such a transfer.

In regard to the first point, we have heard learned Counsel for both parties to these proceedings at considerable length, and have [517] been referred to numerous cases in the reports expressing the opinions of various Benches in regard to the proper institution of proceedings under s. 145, and similar provisions of the Codes of Criminal Procedure of 1861 and 1872 now repealed. The substance of the decisions cited to us seems to be that the Magistrate is bound to satisfy himself on grounds which are reasonable that a breach of the peace is imminent in regard to properties of the description specified by s. 145, that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning them, and that the grounds stated by him must be such as to satisfy a Court of Revision before which such case may be brought by any of the parties concerned.

In the case before us it is objected in the first instance that no proceeding was drawn up by the Magistrate as contemplated by the law. We find, however, that there was an order passed by the Magistrate which, if not in form, was at least in substance sufficient to comply with the requirements of the law, and that on this, notice was served in the first instance on the agents of the parties now before us, and on their representation, on the principals themselves to appear and put in written statements such as they have now put in; we, therefore, think that the proceedings are valid in respect to the manner of their institution.

It appears that in consequence of several cases before him relating to various acts amounting to breaches of the peace between the partizans of the parties now before us, the Magistrate directed the police to enquire whether there were sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, and that thereupon a report was made suggesting that, for the reasons stated, such proceedings were necessary. If, therefore, the police report which the Magistrate has made the foundation of the proceedings instituted under s. 145 does sufficiently set out substantial reasons for believing that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace between the parties now before us relating to certain lands exists, there are no valid grounds for impugning the regularity of the proceedings under which the matters contemplated by s. 145 are now about to be tried. The report of the police officer sets out a statement made by the agent of Baboo Chatterput Singh that [518] he is prepared to resist any attempt made by Rai Dhanput Singh to obtain possession of certain lands. A statement was also taken by the police officer, and forms portion of the report from the agent of Rai Dhanput Singh, the petitioner before us, which shows good reason to suppose that Rai Dhanput Singh was prepared to assert his possession of certain lands either held by Chatterput Singh or claimed by Chatterput Singh as in his possession. There are also statements of various police officers that disputes are going on between the parties relating to lands within their respective jurisdictions and, amongst these, we may refer to the statement of one police officer who alleges that there has already been a breach of the peace and a case in Court, and that in his opinion there is likely to be a repetition of this disturbance unless the Magistrate should interpose. For the purposes of notice to the parties, we think it sufficient for the Magistrate to cite, as the ground of his proceeding, the police report on which he is satisfied that a dispute within the terms of s. 145 does exist. It is open to the parties if they dispute the necessity for such proceedings either within the terms of the last clause of s. 145 to show before the Magistrate that no such dispute exists or has existed or, if they are so advised, to move the Court of Revision that the Magistrate has proceeded on grounds which are not reasonable or which cannot be held to be sufficient to satisfy him that such a dispute exists. So far as concerns this Court as a Court of Revision, we think that the proceedings of the Magistrate sufficiently fulfil the requirements of the law.

It is next objected that the proceedings of the Magistrate are indefinite so far as describing the particular lands concerning which the dispute between the parties exists. We observe that, in the first instance, the Magistrate specifies this land as estate Purwaha, and that on receipt of the written statement of the parties he has narrowed the subject of his enquiry to the possession of certain specified properties which, it is admitted before us, all form portions of estate Purwaha. There cannot, in our opinion, be any objection to such a proceeding of the Magistrate in thus limiting the subject-matter of his enquiry so as to confine it only to lands which the written statement of the parties have satisfied him were the sole matters in dispute. We think, therefore, [519] that we should not be justified as a Court of Revision in obstructing the course of the proceedings so instituted by the Magistrate, having the object to maintain the peace and to settle the disputes between the parties, rival zemindars, in such a manner as, at least temporarily, to quiet the tenantry of the particular lands. It is open to either of the parties, if so advised, to show to the Magistrate that no dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace exists or has existed regarding any of these lands.

The second point on which the rule was granted relates to the order of the District Magistrate transferring the proceedings from the Sub-divisional Court of Arrareah to that of the Magistrate at Purneah without notice to the petitioner. It has been stated on behalf of Chatterput Singh that the application for transfer was made by consent of the agents of Dhanput Singh or, at least, after notice to them that such application was about to be made, and without any objection. This has been contradicted, and we may take it, therefore, that there has been a misunderstanding, or that any consent that may have been given has been given without proper authority. However that may be, we think it unnecessary to interfere directly with the order passed by the District Magistrate, because it is still open to the District Magistrate to reconsider his order on any objection made by the petitioner, and we have no doubt that on such objection being made the District Magistrate will give due consideration, and will thereupon make such orders as may be best calculated to ensure an early decision of the matters in dispute to the convenience of the parties and in the interests of justice. The law leaves it open to the Magistrate to deal with this matter and to direct the trial to be held either at the Purneah or the Arrareah Court as he may think proper on further consideration of the matter as represented by the parties.

For these reasons, we think that the rule should be discharged.

Rule discharged.

[520] CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali.

THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GOBIND CHANDRA DAS AND OTHERS.*
[3rd February, 1893.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 145—Breach of the peace—Record of grounds for Magistrate taking proceedings under s. 145—Notice to parties—Sessions Judge not empowered to order proceedings under s. 145—Parties claiming to be in possession of land, subject of dispute, rights of, to appear in proceedings.

To justify the initiation of proceedings under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, it is not sufficient that, in the course of a trial, it should appear from the statement of a witness examined that a breach of the peace is likely to ensue in consequence of a dispute regarding land. Before taking action, the Magistrate is bound to be satisfied from a police report or other information on this point, and he is also bound to make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and this must be served on the parties to the dispute, for it is the intention of the law, not only that Magistrates should have sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, but that they should inform the parties concerned of the grounds on which they are proceeding.

A Sessions Judge is not competent to order a Magistrate to take action under s. 145. He should rather draw his attention to the nature of the dispute in the trial before him, so that the Magistrate may exercise his own discretion as to the necessity of proceedings. Proceedings so initiated, when there is nothing in the police report or elsewhere to justify them, would be void, and s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code, would have no application. Gour Mohan Majee v. Doollubh Majee (1) dissented from; Dhanput Singh v. Chatterput Singh (2) followed.

Parties who, though not actually involved in the dispute, claim to be in possession of lands which are the subject of proceedings under s. 145, should not be shut out from giving evidence in support of their claims. To do so would undoubtedly occasion very serious prejudice and interference with any possession which they might be able to establish.

THIS was a reference from the Sessions Judge of Backergunge arising out of an application made before him to review an order [521] passed by the Deputy Magistrate of Barisal under the provisions of s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It appeared that in his judgment in a Sessions trial in which the accused was charged with murder, and where it was alleged that the murder was the result of a dispute concerning the right to possession of certain land, the Sessions Judge directed the District Magistrate to cause proceedings to be taken, under Chap. XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in respect of the land in dispute, so as to put an end to any further breach of the peace between the parties. A police enquiry was ordered, and the result of that was a report that four sets of persons representing various titles and claims to possession were disputing regarding the right to the possession of the lands. These four parties were then cited to put in their claims. The first, third and fourth filed claims and appeared in support of them. The second partly filed a claim, but did not appear at the hearing. The first and second parties each claimed to be in possession of the whole of the land in dispute, and the other two parties each claimed to be in possession of a portion of the land. The order passed by the Deputy Magistrate was as follows:—

"This is a case under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, which originated under the order of the Sessions Judge in his judgment convicting the accused under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, in a Sessions trial. There were made four parties in this case, of whom the second party did not appear to-day and produced no evidence. From the evidence now recorded, it appears that the dispute lies between the first and the second party, and that the third and the fourth parties are in no way connected with it. It was, therefore, unnecessary to make them parties at the first stage or to consider their claim of possession now, as s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, gives jurisdiction to the Magistrate only on those parties between whom a dispute exists likely to end in a breach of the peace.

The evidence shows that in Choitra last a murder was committed by the tenants of the second party when fighting with the tenants of the first party, and that there is still a likelihood of a breach of the peace between the two parties. I shall, therefore, determine in this case which of the two parties (i. e., whether the first or the second party) is in actual possession of the disputed land. The second party produced no evidence, and the evidence of the first party proved the possession of that party (first party).

"I therefore declare the first party to be entitled to retain possession of the disputed land until evicted therefrom in due course of law."

The third party then applied to the Sessions Judge to review that order, and at the first hearing the Sessions Judge, being of [522] opinion that the Deputy Magistrate should have taken the evidence offered by the third and fourth parties, called for an explanation. On receipt of that explanation and on the matter coming on again, he referred the case to the High Court with a letter of reference, of which the material portions were as follows:—

"This is an application for review of an order under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code. It is made under the following circumstances. In consequence of remarks made by this Court in its judgment in the case of Queen-Empress versus Bamcharan Hura and others, a trial for a murder in a dispute about land, proceedings were taken by a Deputy Magistrate of Barisal under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, to determine possession of certain land. Four parties were cited to put in their claims. Of these the first, third, and fourth filed claims: the second did not appear to produce evidence, but all four filed written statements of their claims. The first and second party each claimed to be in possession of the whole of the land in dispute. The third and fourth party each claimed to be in possession of part of the land. The Deputy Magistrate found that there was a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existing only between the first and second party. He therefore, as the second party did not appear, and the first party appeared and gave evidence, declared the first party in possession till evicted in due course of law, and declined to hear evidence on the part of the third and fourth parties." * * *

"The Deputy Magistrate should have taken the evidence offered on behalf of the third and fourth party. Under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, he was bound not only to take evidence offered by the parties disputing with likelihood of a breach of the peace, but, if possible, to decide whether any, and which, of the parties was in possession, and record such further evidence as he might consider necessary. Now, he could not properly decide that the first party was in possession of the whole subject-matter when there was evidence that they were only in possession of part, and the Deputy Magistrate refused to consider such evidence. He has referred to a ruling In the matter of the petition of Kunund Narain Bhoop (1) in support of his order. But that ruling is merely to the effect that an intervenor cannot come in the middle of such proceedings as these, and that the Magistrate's order is to be directed to those persons actually before him, or who having been called upon failed to appear. But the third and fourth parties had been cited and had appeared from the first, and I think they were entitled to have their evidence considered. Otherwise they may be ousted from possession in a proceeding to which they are parties without an opportunity of being heard.

"On the ground of the errors of law pointed out above, I recommend that the order of the Deputy Magistrate declaring the first party to be [523] entitled to retain possession of the disputed land until evicted therefrom in due course of law, be quashed, and that he be directed to take such further evidence as may be produced by the third and fourth parties as may be necessary for a decision whether any, and which, of the parties is in possession of the said subject, and decide accordingly."

On the hearing of the reference.

Mr. J. G. Apcar, Baboo Kissen Doyal Roy, and Baboo Hur Chunder uckerbutty, appeared for the first party.

Baboo Chunder Kant Sen, for the second party.

Mr. M. E. Sandel, for the third and fourth parties.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

PRINSEP, J.— After trying a case of murder, the Sessions Judge of Backergunge passed the following order:—

"The District Magistrate should at once direct proceedings to be taken under Chap. XII, Code of Criminal Procedure, in respect of immovable property, possession of which is disputed between the Bhattacharjees and Summadars of Baghda on the one hand and the Dasses of Goila on the other, to put an end to further breach of the peace between the parties."

What order was thereupon passed by the District Magistrate we have been unable to ascertain from the record or from the learned Counsel or pleaders who have represented the four parties to the proceedings taken. It, however, appears that a police enquiry was ordered, and that thereupon the police represented that four sets of persons representing various titles and claims to possession were in dispute regarding certain lands. The possession of these lands was, we may take it, in some degree the origin of the dispute out of which the trial held by the Sessions Judge arose. There is not a word, however, in that report regarding any breach of the peace being likely to ensue in consequence of any disputes between the four parties mentioned. The Deputy Magistrate, Babu P. K. Dutt, thereupon recorded a proceeding purporting to be under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, stating that, according to the report, dated 6th July, submitted by Raj Manick Dutt, Sub-Inspector, station Gournuddy, he was satisfied that there was likelihood of a breach of the peace being committed by [524] the parties referred to above, regarding the possession of certain lands described, and these parties, we may here mention, are the four parties set out in the police report. After some postponements the matter proceeded to trial on written statements put in by the first, third, and fourth parties and on evidence tendered. On the 4th of November the Deputy Magistrate considered it unnecessary "to hear any evidence which the petitioners (the third and fourth parties) are willing to adduce as it is quite unnecessary to determine their possession." He added:—"This proceeding will not prejudice their interest in future. The dispute being virtually between the second and the first party, I shall only see which of the two parties is in possession of the disputed land." On the evidence so taken the Magistrate found the first party to be in possession.

The matter has been referred to us in revision by the Sessions Judge on the ground that the third and fourth parties should have been allowed to adduce evidence of their respective claims to possession. This reference has been contested at considerable length by Mr. Apcar, who appeared in support of the order of the Magistrate; the other parties were represented by pleaders of this Court.

It has been contended by Mr. Aparcar that inasmuch as the evidence shows that there was probability of a breach of the peace between the first and the second parties alone in respect of the lands, the order of the Magistrate is correct, and he also relies upon the order of the Sessions Judge. Next, that the third and fourth parties, not being concerned in any dispute likely to be attended by such consequences, could not properly be made parties to a proceeding under s. 145, and would not be affected by any order such as that now under consideration as between those parties only. Lastly, that the proceedings were not contrary to law, and, if irregular, should be maintained because it does not appear that any such irregularity has occasioned a failure of justice in the terms of s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In the course of the argument it was pointed out to the learned Counsel that although in the order of the Magistrate purporting to take action under s. 145, he relied on the police report of the 6th of July as satisfying him [526] that a breach of the peace was likely between the parties in consequence of a dispute regarding possession of certain lands, that report is altogether silent on this matter; and we desired to hear him on the whole case, not merely on the grounds raised by the Sessions Judge in his reference, and whether in consequence of this the proceedings were not bad. Mr. Aparcar has relied mainly on the case of Gour Mohun Majee v. Doollubh Majee(1), under which authority he contends that the proceedings should not be set aside.

Sitting with Ghose, J., I had recently to consider all the judgments of this Court, including this case, under the Codes of 1861 and 1872 and the present Code, and we held in Dhanput Singh v. Chatterput Singh (2) that the substance of these cases is that a Magistrate is bound to satisfy himself, on grounds which are reasonable, that a breach of the peace is imminent in regard to a property of the description specified in s. 145, that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning them, and that the grounds stated by him must be such as would satisfy a Court of revision, before which such a case may be brought by any of the parties concerned. In dealing with the case of Dhanput Singh v. Chatterput Singh (2) we had occasion to consider the case cited by Mr. Aparcar. I doubted the correctness of the judgment of the learned Judges, and if that case had stood alone I should have felt obliged to refer the matter to a Full Bench, but I was relieved from this because I found that that case was not in accordance with other cases on the subject.

It is not sufficient that in the course of a trial it should appear from the statement of witnesses examined that a breach of the peace is likely to ensue in consequence of a dispute regarding certain lands. Before taking action, the Magistrate is bound to be satisfied from a police report or other information on this point, and he is also bound to make an order in writing, stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and this must be served on the parties to the dispute. Mr. Aparcar contends that we should assume that the proceedings were instituted on information other than the police report, that is, the order of the Sessions Judge referred to. But although this may have been the real origin of these proceedings, as it led to the police report of the 6th July under some order [526] of the District Magistrate not before us, it was not made the ground on which the Deputy Magistrate instituted proceedings under s. 145. It was not stated as the ground on which that Magistrate satisfied himself that a breach of the peace was likely to ensue between the parties. We may add that the fact that the Magistrate made those who are known as the third and fourth parties, parties to that proceeding, and they were not concerned in the Sessions trial, sufficiently shows this. The intention of the law seems to be not only that Magistrates should have sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, but that they should inform the parties concerned of the grounds on which they are proceeding. We may also observe that the Sessions Judge was not competent to order the Magistrate to take action under s. 145. He should rather have drawn the Magistrate's attention to the nature of the dispute in the trial before him, so that the Magistrate might exercise his own discretion whether proceedings under s. 145 were not necessary to settle matters, until they should have been regularly determined by a competent Civil Court. The record before us certainly does not show that the proceedings in June under s. 145 were based on the order of the Sessions Judge in a trial regarding a murder committed in Cheyt, that is, the previous March. Moreover, it by no means follows that a dispute of so serious a character in March was unabated in July, when the proceedings under s. 145 were initiated. In my opinion, proceedings under s. 145, initiated as the present proceedings have been, fall within the terms of s. 530, which declares that if a Magistrate, not being empowered by law in this behalf, makes an order under Chap. XII, Code of Criminal Procedure, that is, under s. 145, his proceedings shall be void. It seems somewhat anomalous that, as contended before us, although the third and fourth parties should be shut out in this case, because they are not involved in a dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace concerning certain lands, of which they claim to be in possession, they should be made parties right up to the ultimate decision of the matter when the possession of another person should be declared, and that they should be told that this order has been passed without any prejudice to them, that is to say, that the Magistrate should declare that the first party is entitled to be [527] retained in possession, and yet that any possession alleged by the third and fourth parties should not be disturbed. Having made these persons parties to the proceeding, if the Magistrate was satisfied that a breach of the peace was imminent concerning a dispute as to possession of certain lands in which these parties were concerned, though they were not in the actual dispute, it seems to me that it would be impossible to exclude them from the ultimate decision of the case without very serious prejudice and interference with any possession which they might be able to establish. On this ground also—and this is the ground on which the Sessions Judge has referred this matter to us in revision—I should find myself unable to maintain the order of the Magistrate, and if other objections, already stated, had not proved fatal, I should have required evidence to be taken from these persons and proper orders to be passed thereon.

(1) 42 W.R. Cr. 81.

AMEER ALI, J.—I agree in discharging the order of the Deputy Magistrate on both the grounds.

20 C. 527. Set-off—Claims arising out of the same transaction—Presidency Small Cause Court—Jurisdiction—Equitable right of set-off—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 311, 216—Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), ss. 18, Expl. 1, 24.

In a suit in the Calcutta Small Cause Court to recover Rs. 1,197-5-6, the price of goods sold and delivered, the defendants claimed to set off a sum of Rs. 2,738-4, being the loss which they alleged they had sustained by reason of the plaintiff's breach of contract, and claimed judgment for [528] the sum of Rs. 1,540-14-6 after giving the plaintiff credit for the sum claimed by him.

Held that the defendants' claim could be set off if it were one which the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to try; but the claim being to obtain credit for or receive the entire sum of Rs. 2,738-4, the Small Cause Court was without jurisdiction, and no set-off could therefore be allowed.

An equitable right of set-off exists in this country when both the claim of the plaintiff and that of the defendant arise out of the same transaction, although the claim sought to be set off is not within the provisions of s. 111 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Quære—Whether a decree could be passed in favour of the defendant for any balance which might be found due to him.

THE following case was stated for the opinion of the High Court by R. S. T. MacEwen, Esq., Second Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta, under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure and s. 69 of Act XV of 1882:—

"The plaint in this case is as follows:—

"Brojendra Nath Das, the plaintiff abovenamed, states as follows:—

- (1) That on the 23rd day of November 1891 the plaintiff sold and delivered to the defendant Company 256 drums of jute, weighing 248 maunds and 32 seers.
- (2) That the defendant Company promised to pay for the same at the rate of Rs. 4-13 per maund, that is, the sum of Rs. 1,197-5-6.
- (3) That the agreement with the defendant Company was that the plaintiff should be paid cash on delivery.
- (4) That the defendant Company have not paid the said sum of Rs. 1,197-5-6, although demand has been made therefor.
- (5) The plaintiff therefore seeks judgment for the said sum of Rs. 1,197-5-6 with interest and costs.

"The plaint makes no mention of any written contract between the parties, but treats the delivery on the 23rd of November as if it were on a verbal contract for cash at a particular price.

"The defendant Company filed a written statement and pleaded a set-off. They admit receiving the quantity of jute mentioned in the 1st paragraph of the plaint 'pursuant to a contract, dated the 13th October 1891,' for six boat-loads of jute at Rs. 4-13 to Rs. 4-14 per maund, landed at the Budge-Budge Mill Ghat. They admit that the sum claimed in the plaint is the value of the jute delivered to them, but plead that it is not due to the plaintiff as claimed in the suit; that the plaintiff having contracted to deliver 4,200 maunds under the contract, only delivered 1,666 maunds 6 seers and failed to deliver the balance; that in [529] consequence of such failure, they refuse to pay for the quantity delivered, but have given the plaintiff credit in account for the same, and plead to set off a further sum of Rs. 1,540-14-6, being the amount of damages alleged to have been sustained by them in consequence of the plaintiff's breach of contract, and they claim a judgment for that sum if, after investigation, they should be found entitled to the same.

* Small Cause Court Reference, No. 3 of 1892, made by R. S. T. MacEwen, Esq., Second Judge of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes, dated the 17th of June 1892.

"When the case came on for hearing, the contract referred to in the written statement (copy of which is annexed) was admitted, but it was contended that the defendant Company were not entitled to plead a set-off in this action, and I was asked to refer the question for the opinion of the High Court if I should be of opinion that they were so entitled.

"Two points were raised by the plaintiff's attorney, viz.—

(1) That the set-off was time-barred under rule 28 of the Rules of Practice of the Court.

(2) That if not barred under that rule, it would still not lie, as it was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court.

"As to the first point, rule 28 is in these terms:—'When a defendant is desirous of setting off any sum under s. 111 of the Code, he shall file in Court the particulars of such set-off at least two clear days before the returnable date of the summons, unless the Court shall fix some other day for filing the same, and shall furnish the plaintiff with a copy of the same.' The set-off was not filed within the time mentioned in this rule. On the returnable date of the summons no set-off had been filed. On that day the defendant's vakeel applied for time to file a written statement and 10 days was allowed. The written statement containing the set-off was filed within that time.

"On the first point I held that the set-off pleaded in the written statement was not a set-off under s. 111 of the Code, which refers to an 'ascertained' sum of money only, and that rule 28 was inapplicable to the case. The set-off is a claim for damages arising out of the same contract as the plaintiff's claim, and on the authority of Chisholm v. Gopal Chunder Surma (1) I held that it would lie. In that case it was held that the right to plead a set-off exists independently of s. 111 when it is in the nature of a cross claim arising out of the same transaction, and so connected that it would be inequitable to compel the defendant to have recourse to a separate suit. That case follows earlier decisions on the same point. In the present case the cross claim arises out of one and the same contract, and therefore I held the defendant Company were entitled to plead it against the plaintiff's demand.

"With regard to the second point, the facts set out are that there was a contract for six boat-loads of jute at Rs. 4-13 to Rs. 4-14 per maund; that the plaintiff only delivered the quantity for which he seeks to be [530] paid, and failed to deliver 2,434 maunds, which the defendant Company had to purchase in the market at Rs. 5-15, or a difference of Rs. 1-2 per maund; and that in consequence they sustained a loss of Rs. 2,738-4, against which they credit the plaintiff with Rs. 1,197-5-6, the price of the quantity delivered, and claim from him the balance, Rs. 1,540-14-6.

"It was contended that the defendant Company's claim being Rs. 2,738-4 was beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of this Court, and that they were not entitled to reduce it to an amount which would bring it within the jurisdiction by giving credit for the price of the jute delivered without the assent of the plaintiff. The cases of Ewart Latham and Company v. Haji Muhammad Siddik (1) and Avarde v. Rhodes (2) amongst other cases were relied on. The facts in the Bombay case are different. There it was held that the plaintiff had no right to sell the goods, and consequently no right to credit the defendant with the sale-proceeds, and therefore that the claim could not be reduced by an improper credit. In Avarde v. Rhodes (2) it was held there must be a payment or an admitted set-off. In the present case the amount claimed by the plaintiff is admitted by the defendant Company. It is due under one and the same contract, and on the authority of the cases of Hasan Kasam v. Goma Jadavji (3) and Mehervanji Mancharji v. Punja Velji (4), if the defendant Company had brought an action, they would have been bound to have given the plaintiff credit for the value of the goods received. By doing so the claim would have been reduced to a sum for which they could have sued in this Court. In the first of these cases, it was held (following certain English authorities cited) that 'the damages are to be measured by the amount of the loss actually sustained by the plaintiff.' In the second case, where a deposit had been made with the plaintiff for the due fulfilment of the contract and on a breach by the defendant, it was held that the plaintiff was right in giving credit to the defendant for the amount of the deposit-money and suing for the balance only. Applying these decisions to the present case, the defendant Company would be right in giving the plaintiff credit for what he had to receive from them, and they would not be obliged to sue for more than the actual sum which they claimed. A suit for that sum would lie in this Court, and therefore I held the set-off would lie and could be pleaded.

"My judgment is contingent upon the opinion of the High Court on the points submitted by the plaintiff's attorney, viz.—

1. Whether the set-off pleaded by the defendant Company is not barred under rule 28 of the Rules of Practice of the Court.
2. Whether the Court has jurisdiction to try the set-off, inasmuch as the same amounts to Rs. 2,738-4, which is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court."

[531] Sir Griffith Evans, appeared for the plaintiff.

Mr. Dunne, appeared for the defendants.

At the hearing of the reference, the Court observed that the reference was not properly stated under s. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts' Act (XV of 1882), since no final judgment could be entered upon the case as stated. The Court would, however, hear the reference under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The following opinions were delivered by the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and NORRIS and O'KINEALY, JJ.):—

OPINIONS.

PETHERAM, C.J.—I am of opinion that the Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try the set-off, inasmuch as the same amounts to Rs. 2,738-4, which is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court.

A series of cases in all the Courts in India has established that what is called an equitable right of set-off exists in this country when both the claim of the plaintiff and that of the defendant arise out of the same transaction, though the claim sought to be set-off is not within the provisions of s. 111 of the Civil Procedure Code and this being so, this claim for damages could no doubt be set off in the present action, if it were one which the Small Cause [532] Court had jurisdiction to try, but this, I think, it certainly had not. It is a claim to recover Rs. 2,738-4 as damages for the breach of a contract to deliver goods, and the defendants seek in this action to recover the whole of that sum, in the sense that they say that when they have established their right to it, they will pay an admitted debt to the plaintiff, with a part of it, and put the balance in their pockets.

Mr. Dunne contends that this is reducing the claim by an admitted set-off, within the meaning of s. 18, explanation 1, of the Small Cause Courts' Act, but a very little consideration shows that this is not the case. In the first place, the exception applies to a claim made by the plaintiff and not to a set-off at all, and in the second, the claim in the present case is, as I have before shown, a claim to obtain credit for, that is to say, to recover in the suit, the entire sum of Rs. 2,738 and not the smaller one of Rs. 1,600, and it is not contended that the Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to entertain such a claim.

As it is not necessary for us to do so, we express no opinion on the question whether if the defendant's claim were one which the Small Cause Court could entertain, it would have power to make a decree in favour of the defendant for any balance which might be found due to him, after deducting a sufficient sum to satisfy his debt to the plaintiff.

It is not necessary for us to answer the other question, but I think that, as it has been established that other rights of set-off besides those under s. 111 exist, it will be well that rule 28 should be reconsidered by the Small Cause Court Judges.

NORRIS, J.—I am of the same opinion.

O'KINEALY, J.—I concur with the Chief Justice in thinking that the Small Cause Court could not try the question of set-off in this case, the value being above Rs. 2,000, and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court.

HEM CHUNDER GHOSE AND OTHERS (Defendants Nos. 8, 9 and 10) v.
THAKO MONI DEBI (Plaintiff) AND OTHERS (Defendants Nos. 1 to 7)*
[10th February, 1893.]

Partition—Mortgage by one owner of undivided share of estate—Rights of mortgagee on partition, where the undivided share is allotted to a sharer other than the mortgagor.

Where A mortgaged to the plaintiff his undivided share in certain land which he held jointly with B, and subsequently to the mortgage, by a decree in a partition suit to which the plaintiff was not a party, the mortgaged property was allotted to B, other property in substitution being allotted to A, held, in a suit against B, and the representatives of A, to recover the sum due on the mortgage by sale of the mortgaged property, that the plaintiff could not proceed against the mortgaged property, which had been allotted on partition to B, but should be allowed to proceed against that which had been allotted in substitution to A, his mortgagor.

THIS was a suit brought against the sons and heirs of one Ram Gobind Ghose (defendants 1 to 7) for the principal and interest due on bonds, dated 5th Sraban 1285 (30th July 1878) and 6th of Bysack 1292 (18th April 1885), executed by Ram Gobind in favour of the plaintiff, by which he mortgaged a certain plot of land to the plaintiffs as security for a loan of Rs. 1,000. The plaintiffs prayed for a sale of the mortgaged property to satisfy their claim.

The defendants 8, 9 and 10 intervened and were made parties to the suit as claiming a 3-anna 3-gunda share in the mortgaged property, which they stated had been the ijmal property of themselves and the deceased Ram Gobind Ghose, and that in a partition suit instituted by them in 1885, against Ram Gobind, the [534] mortgaged property, with the exception of 5 cottahs which were left joint, had been allotted by the Court to the defendants 8, 9 and 10. These defendants submitted that the plaintiff had no right to proceed against the property which had been allotted to them on partition, and this defence was the only one material to this report.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit against the intervening defendants, and an appeal from his decision by them was dismissed by the Judge, who affirmed the decree of the first Court.

The defendants 8, 9 and 10 appealed to the High Court on the ground (inter alia) that the lower Court were wrong in holding that, the partition having taken place after the mortgage, and the mortgagee not having been a party to the partition suit, the mortgagee was not barred from proceeding against the mortgaged property. They contended that the plaintiff should have been allowed to proceed against the property which on the partition fell to the share of the mortgagor, and not against the property allotted to the defendants 8, 9 and 10.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Baboo Bhuban Mohan Das, for the appellants.

Dr. Troylukho Nath Mitter, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (MACPHERSON and BEVERLEY, J.J.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

The appellants before us are persons who intervened and were made defendants in the Court of first instance. It has been found that the mortgaged property, consisting of 2 bighas of raiyati land within specified boundaries, was the ijmali property of the mortgagor, the father of the first seven defendants, and of the appellants; that the appellants' share of it was 3 annas 3 gundas 1 cowrie 1 kranti, and that subsequent to the execution of the mortgage bonds there was a partition under a decree of Court by which the 2 bighas in question, with the exception of a small portion which was left joint, was allotted to the appellants. The latter were not concerned in the mortgage, and the mortgagee was not a party to the partition suit.

[535] Both the Courts have held on those facts that the mortgagee was not affected by the partition, and that the mortgaged property, with the exception of the appellants' share, should be sold in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt just the same as if no partition had been made. It is contended that this decision is wrong, that the mortgagee has no charge on that portion of the property which was allotted on partition to the appellants, and that the effect of the partition was to transfer the lien to the property which the mortgagor obtained in substitution of that which he had mortgaged. In support of this contention the case of Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdhry (1) has been cited. That case differs from this in these respects, that the partition had there been made by the Collector under Reg. XIX of 1814, and that the mortgagee was seeking to enforce his remedy not against the property which had been actually mortgaged, but against the property which had been allotted to the mortgagor on partition in substitution of the mortgaged property. Their Lordships held not only that he had a right to do this, but that it was in the circumstances of the case his sole right, and that he could not successfully have sought to charge any other parcel of the estate in the hands of any of the former co-sharers.

The principle upon which that case was decided appears to us to apply equally to the present one. The mortgagee was not a party to the partition suit, but he was not a necessary party; he could not have enforced a partition, nor could he have resisted a fair partition at the instance of any of the co-sharers. There is no allegation here that the partition was effected by fraud or collusion between the mortgagor and his co-sharers, and, as pointed out, if there had been fraud with the object of defrauding the mortgagee, the latter would have had a clear remedy against all who were parties to it. If, then, the partition is not challenged on the ground of fraud, the case stands thus :—

could undoubtedly pledge their own undivided shares,—at least it is no part of the appellants' case that they could [536] not to do so, but they could not by such mortgage affect the interest of the other co-sharers. The mortgage was subject to the right of those sharers to enforce a partition and, as their Lordships held in the case referred to, thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion, held in severalty. In the absence therefore of any fraud in effecting the partition, plaintiff has no right to proceed against that portion of the undivided mortgaged property which on partition was allotted to the appellants, but he can proceed against that portion of the undivided property which was allotted to the mortgagor-defendants in substitution of their undivided share in the portion mortgaged. We must set aside the decrees of the lower Courts directing the sale of the mortgaged property, with the exception of the 3-anna odd-gunda share belonging to the appellants, and remand the case in order that it may be determined exactly what portion of the mortgaged property was on partition allotted to the appellants. Against that portion the plaintiffs can have no charge. They will of course be at liberty to bring to sale the share of the mortgagor-defendants in the portion which was left undivided, as well as any property which has been allotted to the latter in substitution of what was mortgaged, and this is a point which the Court will also have to determine, if it can do so. The parties will be at liberty to adduce further evidence on the matters referred to.

Another question raised in the appeal is that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the full amount of the interest decreed, and that this could not in any event be made a charge on the property. By the terms of the bond, dated the 5th Sraban 1285, interest was to run on the principal, Rs. 1,000, at one per cent. per mensem, and the whole amount was to be repaid in Assar 1288. In Bysack 1292 the mortgagor executed another bond in which, after referring to the execution of the first bond and the omission to pay the money due under it, he undertakes to pay off the aforesaid Rs. 1,000 with interest at the same rate in Chait 1294, and as security he hypothecates the same property which was mortgaged in the first bond. Neither bond contains any stipulation for the payment of interest after due date. The effect of the second bond was, we think, to make the interest run continuously [537] up to Chait 1294, and to make it a charge on the property. The first Court allowed interest after due date at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, considering that a reasonable rate. Even if any question had been raised in the lower appellate Court, and no question was raised, there is no ground on which we could hold on second appeal that the interest allowed by the first Court after due date was unreasonable. That interest cannot, however, be made a charge on the property: it is not a charge by the terms of the deed.

The appeal must be decreed and the case remanded as above directed.

The appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court.

Criminal proceedings, irregularity in—Irregularity prejudicing the accused—Rioting, counter-charges of—Cross cases tried together—Evidence in one case considered in the other—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 233, 239, 309, 342, 344, 537—Illegality—Fight between two parties not "transaction."

Where two cross cases of rioting and grievous hurt were committed separately for trial before a Sessions Judge, who, having heard the evidence in the first case, heard the evidence in the second case, examined some of the accused in the one case as witnesses for the prosecution in the other and vice versa, and subsequently heard the arguments in both the cases together, and the opinions of the assessors (who were the same in both the cases) were taken at one time, and both the cases were dealt with in one judgment:

Held, that this mode of trial, although irregular, did not prejudice the accused in their defence, and that under such circumstances a re-trial was not made necessary by reason of such irregularity.

Nor did the examination of the accused who were on their trial in one case as witnesses for the prosecution in the other affect the validity of their conviction.

IN this case one Chandra Bhuiya and twelve other persons were convicted by the Sessions Judge of Mymensingh of rioting armed with deadly weapons, and of causing grievous hurt. Chandra Bhuiya was sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment, under s. 326 of the Penal Code, and the rest to three years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 326 read with s. 149. All the prisoners were further convicted under s. 148, but without additional sentence.

This case was numbered 12 at the Mymensingh Sessions for March 1892, and was a counter case to one numbered 11. In case No. 11, which was the first instituted, the accused persons included four persons who were principal witnesses for the prosecution in case No. 12; and in case No. 12 among the accused were five persons who were principal witnesses for the prosecution in case No. 11. The hearing of case No. 11 began on the 11th April 1892, and the examination of the witnesses both for prosecution and defence was concluded on the 12th April, when it was "postponed for further hearing until after the trial of case No. 12." Case No. 12 was next taken up, and the examination of the witnesses similarly proceeded with and concluded on the 14th April, when both cases were adjourned till the 18th April for "argument." The nature of the proceedings on the 18th April appears from the order sheet of the Judge, which was as follows:—"To-day the Counsel for the defence summed up his case" (i.e., in case No. 11). "Pleader for the defence in case No. 12 then summed up his case. The prosecutor then replied [539] in both cases. The assessors were then required to state their opinions in both cases orally. Their opinions were recorded, and the case was then postponed to the 25th instant for delivery of judgment." On the 25th April, "judgment not being completed," the cases were again postponed, and judgment was finally delivered on the 2nd May 1892.

In case No. 11 the Judge, after stating the various charges against the accused, observed as follows:—"The facts of this case have been fully set out in my judgment in the record of trial No. 12 of this Sessions," and for the reasons therein specified he acquitted all the accused.

In his judgment in case No. 12, after giving a short sketch of each case, the Judge observed as follows:—"Such, briefly, are the facts of the two cases which this Court has had to try. The first case tried was that against the members of Panai's party, and then the other case was tried, with the help of the same assessors. The arguments were heard on the same day, the fifth of the double trial, and the assessors were invited to give their opinions in the two cases at one time, the cases being, as will have been seen from the above brief abstracts of each, inextricably connected." He then proceeded to analyse the evidence in each case, and, after stating his reasons, finally convicted all the accused but one.

Against the conviction and sentence the accused appealed to the High Court.

Mr. W. R. Donogh, Baboo Kali Charn Banerji, and Baboo Hara Prosad Chatterji, for the appellants.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.

Mr. Donogh.—The record of the proceedings shows that a grave irregularity has been committed. There were two cross cases of rioting and grievous hurt tried at the Sessions—one numbered 11 and the other 12. Before No. 11 was finished, No. 12 was taken up, and tried with the aid of the same assessors. The arguments in both cases were heard at the same time, the opinions of the assessors were also taken at the same time, and one judgment was delivered in both cases. This practice of trying cases piecemeal has been condemned as improper in the case of Chakowri Lall v. Moti Kurmi (1). [540] The irregularity is still graver when persons who are accused in the first case are examined as witnesses in the next case for the prosecution, before judgment has been pronounced upon them in their own case. This has been laid down in the case of Bachu Mullah v. Sia Ram Singh (2), which is exactly in point. It is not incumbent on me to show prejudice, for that is a necessary consequence of such a procedure.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer.—It has always been the practice from the earliest times to try cross-cases of rioting together. There is nothing unfair or unjust in doing so. This was held by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of The Queen v. Bazu (3). The rule enunciated in the case of Bachu Mullah v. Sia Ram Singh (2) is known to have greatly embarrassed judicial officers. The question is one which might fitly be referred to a Full Bench.

The cases of Queen v. Durzoolla (4), Queen v. Surroop Chunder Paul (5) Hossein Buksh v. The Empress (6) were also referred to.

The Court (PIGOT and HILL, JJ.) took time to consider whether a reference should be made to a Full Bench. After consideration they decided to hear Counsel further on the case generally without expressing any opinion as to a reference, and the matter came on for hearing again on the 3rd November 1892.

Mr. Donogh, for the appellants. — Where there has been a substantial departure from the procedure laid down by the law, that is not merely an irregularity but an absolute illegality; it is sufficient to vitiate the whole proceedings. Here the Judge in the first place violated the provisions of s. 309 of the Criminal Procedure Code, because instead of summing up the evidence in the first case, which means the evidence heard in that case, and taking and recording the opinions of the assessors thereon, he postponed doing so until he had heard the evidence in the second case; and, in the second case, instead of following the same procedure he also postponed that case, in order that he might have what he considered to be the benefit of considering the [541] evidence taken in the first case. By so doing he imported evidence from the first case into the second, and from the second into the first, and thus decided the cases upon evidence which was improperly admitted in each case, and in fact not upon the record. This is also a violation of the provisions of s. 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which directs that every charge shall be tried separately, whereas the Judge has mixed up the two cases, speaking of them himself as a "double trial." These are absolute illegalities. See the case of Queen-Empress v. Chandi Singh (1), where it is laid down that in such cases s. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code would have no application, and also In the matter of Luchminarain (2), where the same principle has been enunciated.

There has been, moreover, a violation of s. 344 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the law as to adjournment of trials. Here there was no "reasonable cause," for postponing the cases; on the contrary, the cause was improper. See Hossein Buksh v. The Empress (3). Again, if the statement of an accused person, which has been made under cross-examination as a witness in another case, is made use of—say to contradict and discredit what he says as an accused person—the using of it amounts to subjecting him to cross-examination. This has been done in this case, and it is practically a violation of all the rules relating to the examination of an accused person. See s. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code and Hossein Buksh v. The Empress (3).

[PIGOT, J.—Can you point out any instance in which such evidence taken in the other case, or such statements, have been used to your prejudice?]

Yes, the statements made by Hukum, one of the accused in the present case, and also of other accused persons, while under examination as witnesses in the first case, have been compared with their statements made as accused persons in this case, and, by reason of a discrepancy between the two, their defence has been disbelieved upon a very material point, viz., the question of possession, of the land in dispute. The result has been that the opposite party, being held to have been in possession and to have acted in [542] self-defence, have been acquitted, while the accused persons in this case have been convicted.

It is not incumbent on me, however, to show prejudice, although I have been able to do so in this case, for these are not such irregularities

20 C. 537. The examination of accused persons as witnesses for the prosecution in another case before judgment had been passed upon them is a practice which has been condemned in strong terms in Bachu Mullah v. Sia Ram Singh (2). It gives rise to an irresistible presumption of prejudice. The onus is upon the Crown to show that the trial has been fair, and that the appellants have not been prejudiced.

The case of Bacha Mullah v. Sia Ram Singh (2) is exactly in point, and the rule there laid down by his Lordship the Chief Justice is applicable to the present case. The hypothetical case upon which the rule was based is precisely similar to the present one, and, if the latter had been before their Lordships instead of the one which was decided, there can be no doubt as to what would have been the result.

The procedure adopted in this case of trying cross-cases of rioting together has been emphatically condemned as improper in Chakowri Lall v. Moti Kurmi (3), and also in Hossein Buksh v. The Empress (4). The latter case no doubt was tried by a jury, and there might be additional reasons for observing the rule laid down therein in such cases, but the principle is the same in all cases whether tried by Judges or juries. It cannot be predicated of a Judge, any more than of a jury, that he is not likely to be influenced by evidence improperly admitted. See the dictum of Lord Eldon in Walker v. Fobisher (5).

[543] The Queen v. Durzoola (6) and The Queen v. Surroop Chunder Paul (7) are authorities in favour of separate trials, and they were decided on the same principle.

The case of Queen v. Bazu (8) was altogether exceptional, for, as one of the Judges observed, the accused had, it appeared, been rather benefited than otherwise by the mode of trial adopted. Under such circumstances it would have been manifestly absurd to set aside his conviction. But no such exceptional circumstances can be shown in the present case.

Section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code has no application in such a case. Each of the opposing parties has a distinct common object and acts under a distinct set of circumstances, so that the offences committed by each party must constitute separate, not the same, transaction, and therefore must be tried separately.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown—Before the Penal and Procedure Codes were enacted the practice, where there had been a fight between two bodies of men, was to try all the rioters together, treating the riot as a single breach of the peace, as one transaction and one offence. This practice continued, apparently without objection, for several years after the Codes had come into force.

In 1867 in Queen v. Bazu (8) a Full Bench declined to set aside the trial on this ground, though they considered the Magistrate was wrong in sending up joint charges against persons who took part in the riot on opposite sides, because the two parties had not a common object.

In 1870 in Queen v. Surroop Chunder Paul (1) the Court considered it would have been better to try each set of defendants separately, because the witnesses called by each party in defence might seek to exonerate their own party and try to lay the blame on the other, and they could not be cross-examined by any of the accused, as the right of a defendant extends only to cross-examining the witnesses of the Crown called against him. But the Court would not interfere even on this ground.

In 1880 in Hossein Buksh v. The Empress (2), although following the opinions expressed in the two cases above mentioned, [544] the Magistrate had held separate proceedings against each party, keeping the evidence against them separate, and had committed them separately, and the Judge had recorded the evidence in each case separately; it was decided, so far as I can find for the first time by the High Court, that inasmuch as the two cases had been tried by one jury, and the Judge had summed up in both cases simultaneously, and notwithstanding that in his charge he had kept the evidence against each party distinct, the procedure was bad, and that the prisoners must have been prejudiced, and a new trial was ordered.

In 1886 in Bachu Mullah v. Sia Ram Singh (3) the Magistrate tried two cases, countercharges of riot. He first took the evidence in one case, and without giving his decision in that case, proceeded to take the evidence in the other case, in which some of the persons under trial in the first case were examined as witnesses. The Court, though declining to interfere with the order of the lower Court on the ground that the prisoners had not been prejudiced, yet objected to the method of trial, and called upon all Magistrates to discontinue the irregular and highly objectionable practice.

As to the case of Hossein Buksh v. The Empress, I submit it is not shown that the joint trial really prejudiced the accused in any single particular. The parties applied that the two cases might be tried together, thinking it would benefit them. The Full Bench held that such a method was not substantially bad, and therefore the wishes of the parties might fairly be taken into consideration. If a jury which hears all the evidence for and against all the parties in a fight before delivering its verdict is placed in an embarrassing position, if their minds must be influenced by all the evidence in both cases, and to be so influenced is injurious to the interests of justice, no Judge or Bench of Judges ought to be placed in such a position, and cross-cases ought to be tried by separate Judges. But I submit that in such a matter a satisfactory decision can only be come to by the hearing of the whole case by one tribunal, and that the verdict or judgment in either case is more likely to be correct after the whole evidence in both cases has been considered.

[545] The evidence against an accused person is to be found only in the record in which he is charged. If evidence in the other record is referred to, it is his own evidence given in his own favour. He cannot be prejudiced by a reference to the evidence he himself offers.

As to the other case of Bachu Mullah v. Sia Ram Singh. In these cross-cases usually the only persons who can or do give evidence are parties or partisans with the strongest personal interest in the case. It is hopeless to expect impartiality from such witnesses. If one set are to be tried first in the manner suggested in this judgment, the set first tried are placed at a great disadvantage, for their accusers, themselves participators in the fight and whose trial is to follow, are free to give evidence, while the mouths of the accused are shut. In any event one set of witnesses must remain liable to the objection which the judgment supposes separate trials to get rid of. It must further be remembered that the trial is only one of several stages. The case of each party is settled before the police have examined the witnesses. What the witnesses say to the police they repeat to the Magistrate on oath, and they cannot vary those statements at the Sessions trial. The interest of the witnesses does not cease with the result of the Sessions trial, but continues in full force till the final result—the decision of the High Court. Consequently having the trials jointly or separately would not affect the evidence of the witnesses in the least.

Judges and Magistrates in the mofussil, despairing of getting impartial evidence in these cases, or a fairly truthful account of the whole occurrence from any one side or set, are naturally reluctant to pronounce judgment till they have exhausted all the evidence on both sides, and are in a position to weigh one against the other and to test one by the other.

It is submitted that in this case the accused have suffered no prejudice by the method adopted.

The Court (PIGOT and HILL, JJ.), having differed in opinion, the appeal was referred to and re-argued before a Bench consisting of PRINSEP, PIGOT and HILL, JJ.

Mr. W. R. Donogh, for the appellants.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.

[546] The arguments for the appellants were substantially the same as on the previous hearing.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP, PIGOT and HILL, JJ.) was delivered by PRINSEP, J.—This is an appeal from the Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, sitting with assessors. The appellant, Chandra Bhuiya, was convicted of the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt to Panai Sarkar by means of a dangerous weapon, namely, a gun, an offence punishable under s. 326, Penal Code, and was sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment. He was also convicted of the offence of rioting, being armed with a deadly weapon, under s. 148, Penal Code, but no further sentence was passed upon him for this offence.

The other appellants were convicted under s. 326 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code, and each of them was sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. They were also convicted of the offence of rioting, being armed with deadly weapons, under s. 148, Penal Code, but no further sentence was passed for this offence.

The riot arose out of a dispute about some land which was alleged, on the one hand, to be the property of the first appellant, Chandra Bhuiya, and to be in the possession, under him, of the appellant, Hukum Garo; while, on the other, it was alleged that the land was the property of Panai Sarkar (the person mentioned in the charge against the first appellant) and was in the possession, under him, of one Panchu.

It was charged (and found as a fact at the trial) that Chandra Bhuiya and his party went to cut dhan on the land forcibly, and that the party of Panai went to prevent this.

Several persons belonging to the party of Panai were also charged with and tried for the offence of rioting, &c. The cross-cases were tried by the Judge and by the same assessors: and the grounds of appeal urged before us related to the manner in which the trials of the cross-cases were conducted, which it was argued was illegal, was irregular, and was calculated to prejudice the present appellants in their defence to the charges on which they were tried.

[547] The case was set down for hearing just before the vacation. But upon application on behalf of the appellants, it was postponed for the purpose of obtaining the record in the cross case, in order that that record might be referred to, when necessary, in support of the case for the appellants, which involved the contention that the trial of the appellants had been so mixed up with the trial of the cross case as to prejudice them. The hearing of the appeal was postponed for that reason. The appeal was heard in the vacation, but the Judges who sat during the vacation, and who are members of the present Bench, differing somewhat in opinion, the appeal was reheard before us. We intimated at the close of the argument for the appellants that we did not think it necessary to call upon the Deputy Legal Remembrancer to support the conviction, as we were then of opinion that the appeal must fail; but we reserved judgment in order that we should state our decision as to some of the matters discussed before us in a written judgment.

In the arguments for the appellants, no attempt was made to show, upon an examination of the evidence, that the conviction was not justified by the evidence in the present case. We need not, therefore, do more than say that there is no reason to doubt the substantial truth of the evidence in the case, and that there certainly is no doubt, that if true, it fully warrants the conviction.

It was contended, however, that the manner in which this case was tried was not merely irregular, but illegal; and that for this reason the conviction was bad, as being absolutely vitiated by the illegality of the procedure followed.

The Judge states in the following words the manner in which the trials in the two cases were held:—

“The first case tried was that against the members of Panai's party, and then the other case was tried with the help of the same assessors. The arguments were heard on the same day, the fifth of the double trial, and the assessors were invited to give their opinions in the two cases at one time, the cases being inextricably connected.”

There can be no doubt that the procedure thus followed was irregular: the question before us with respect to it is whether it has vitiated the conviction.

[548] The case of Hossein Buksh v. The Empress (1) was relied on by the appellant's Counsel on this point. That decision, however, was in a case in which a procedure of this kind was followed in a jury trial, and the distinction between a jury trial and a trial with assessors, in this respect, is pointed out at p. 102 of the report. It is, we think, an essential distinction, arising from the nature of the two different tribunals, the verdict in a trial by jury being final on the facts, whereas the entire case in a trial with assessors is subject to appeal, the grounds for the conviction are set out, and the question whether any prejudice has been caused to the prisoner can usually, though not, no doubt, in all cases, be satisfactorily determined.

In the present case it can safely be affirmed that the mode of trial, although irregular, did not prejudice the appellants in their defence,

We may observe that in that case it was said by Mr. Justice Phear that, in the peculiar circumstances of the case, the prisoner has perhaps been rather benefited than prejudiced by the particular course in question having been taken in his trial.

20 C. 537.

In the case Queen v. Surroop Chunder Paul (2) in a case in which the opposing parties who had been engaged in a riot were all tried together, although, as pointed out by this Court, the offences committed by the respective parties necessarily differed in respect of the common object to be attributed to each, the Court did not think it necessary to interpose, with respect to the raiyats who had been convicted on the ground of this defect in the trial, although it did set aside the conviction under s. 154, Penal Code, of two of the defendants in the case.

In the face of these decisions, we are unable to accept the conclusion which the learned Counsel for the appellants invited us to adopt. He asked us to presume that by reason of the irregularity of the trial, prejudice must have been caused. That we cannot do. We do not affirm that in a case in which there has [549] been such an irregularity as in the present case, this Court might not interfere, if there seemed reasonable ground to believe that the prisoner had been prejudiced by it; perhaps even the Court might do so, if there was reasonable ground to believe that he might have been prejudiced, but in the present case it may safely be affirmed that the appellants were not prejudiced: and to adopt the presumption urged upon us for the appellants would in effect be to hold that the convictions were absolutely void as having been illegally bad. But the decisions referred to show that this proposition cannot be sustained.

The appellant's Counsel further contended, upon the authority of the case of Bachu Mullah v. Sia Ram Singh (3) that we must make a somewhat similar presumption upon a ground other than that of the irregularity just discussed. In the present case witnesses were examined for the prosecution, who were themselves under trial in the cross case which was also pending, arising out of the riot: and it is argued that the observations made in the case of Bachu Mullah v. Sia Ram Singh (3) show that the reception of such evidence is so irregular as to affect the validity of the conviction obtained on it: in other words, that it must be presumed that the evidence was so affected by the circumstances under which the witnesses gave it, that the conviction must be set aside.

We cannot adopt that argument. It must be observed that the opinions expressed in that judgment, upon which reliance is placed by the appellant's Counsel, were not stated as forming the reasons for the decision of the Court, which in that case affirmed the conviction. If those observations had constituted the reason for the decision, and a conviction obtained on such evidence had been set aside on those grounds, it would have been necessary for us either to set aside the present conviction, or to refer the matter to a Full Bench. We should have felt bound to take the latter course, for we should feel unable to hold that the acceptance of evidence given under such circumstances goes in any degree to the validity of the conviction as a matter of law, although such circumstances constitute fair ground of comment as to the weight which should be given to evidence affected by them. But, as we [550] have said, the decision in that case was not founded on those observations, and as a fact the conviction was in that case affirmed, the evidence objected to on the ground referred to having been evidence given in favour of the persons who objected to it.

We are unable to accept in favour of the appellants the argument founded on the case Bachu Mullah v. Sia Ram Singh (1).

It is right to notice an argument addressed to us by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer to the effect that s. 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code authorizes the trial, at one and the same trial, of the opposing parties in a riot. He argued that, notwithstanding that the common object of the rioters on one side must necessarily differ from that to be imputed to the other, a fight between the two parties must be treated as one transaction within this meaning of that section. We think it enough to say that we are unable to construe the word 'transaction' as susceptible of this meaning. Whether it might or might not be desirable that in such cases the members of both parties should be tried together, as may be done in the case of persons guilty of any affray, is a matter upon which we offer no opinion. It would involve in our judgment a change in the law, and not merely in the law of procedure at trials, but in the law of evidence, as it would hardly be possible to try cases of such a nature in this country satisfactorily without allowing the persons charged to give evidence, inasmuch as the well-known practice is to inculcate, on one side or the other, all the persons who were present, or can be possibly identified as having been present.

On the law, as it stands, contained in s. 239, we do not think that the two parties can regularly be charged in the same trial.

For the reasons we have stated, we dismiss the appeal.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 180—Execution of decree—Order of Her Majesty in Council—Revivor—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 230, 248.

A decree was obtained against the judgment-debtor in the Zillah Court in 1860, which was reversed by the High Court, but was restored on appeal to Her Majesty in Council on the 22nd May 1872. This decree was assigned to the present decree-holders on the 10th April 1873. Between the 27th November 1872 and 10th April 1880 various applications for execution of the Order in Council were made, attachment processes issued, and proceedings struck off. In 1880 the decree-holders brought a suit to establish the right of the judgment-debtor to a bond in favour of the latter for a certain sum of money, and on the 15th March 1881 they obtained a decree which was upheld by the High Court on the 20th March 1882. After this decree, between the 10th February 1883 and the 19th April 1886, a number of applications were made for execution, which were struck off. Another application was made on the 25th July 1887 for execution. On the 28th October 1887 the judgment-debtor filed an objection on the ground that the decree was barred. On the 20th December 1887 the objection was overruled and execution issued, but the proceedings were struck off on the 28th March 1888. Then, after another application was made on the 28th September 1888, the present application was made on the 19th November 1890, when the judgment-debtor filed an objection on the ground that the decree of which execution was sought was barred by the law of limitation. Held, that the decree which was sought to be enforced was an "Order of Her Majesty in Council" within the meaning of art. 180 of the Limitation Act.

Luchmun Persad Singh v. Kishun Persad Singh (1) and Pitts v. La Fontaine (2) approved.

Article 180 is independent of s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 230 has no application to decrees made by the High Court in the [552] exercise of its ordinary Original Civil jurisdiction. In art. 180, Orders in Council stand in the same category as decrees of Courts established by Royal Charter in the exercise of such jurisdiction. Execution of the decree therefore was not barred by s. 230 of the Code.

Mayabhai Prembhai v. Tribhuvandas Jagjivandas (3) and Ganpathi v. Balsundara (4) referred to.

In art. 180 of the Limitation Act the term "revived" must be read in one and the same sense in connection with High Court decrees and Orders in Council, and not distributively. Following the interpretation of "revivor" in Aushootosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (5), there having been in the present case an order for execution of the decree made after notice to the judgment-debtor, there was such a revivor as prevented the execution of the decree from being barred by art. 180.

Held also that the objection of the judgment-debtor was res judicata. The same contention was raised in a former application, and overruled by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 20th December 1887.

THIS was an appeal by the judgment-debtor from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpur, dated the 12th of December 1891, disallowing his objection to the execution of a decree held by the decree-holders.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows:—A decree was obtained against the appellants in the Zillah Court in the year 1860, which was reversed by the High Court, but was ultimately restored on appeal to Her Majesty in Council on the 22nd of May 1872. This decree was assigned to the respondents on the 10th April 1873, and the present appeal relates to its execution. It appears that the first petition for execution of the Order in Council was made on the 27th November 1872. Attachment processes issued, but the proceedings were finally struck off on the 21st March 1873. A second petition was put in on the 5th April 1873, on which fresh attachment issued, but the proceedings were struck off on the 30th July 1873. A third application was made on the 26th January 1874. Some properties were sold thereunder, but the auction sale was set aside on the 30th December 1878. A fourth petition was put in on the 25th September 1879, which also was struck off on the 10th of April 1880 after attachment [553] processes had issued. In 1880 or thereabouts, the decree-holders brought a suit against certain other persons to establish the right of the judgment-debtors to a bond executed in favour of the latter for Rs. 20,000. The decree-holders obtained a decree on the 15th March 1881, which was upheld on appeal by the High Court on the 28th March 1882.

After this decree had been obtained, a fresh petition for execution was made on the 10th of February 1883, which was struck off on the 4th of June 1883. This was followed by another petition on the 29th of June 1883 to the same effect which, after sale proclamation had issued, was struck off on the 17th December 1883. Another petition was filed on the 29th December 1883, in execution of which the bond which was the subject-matter of the suit of 1880 was sold and purchased by the decree-holders, and the execution proceedings were struck off on the 4th of July 1884. On the 14th of December 1886 another application was made, and the usual notice under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code was served upon the judgment-debtors; but the proceedings were struck off on the 19th April 1887. Another application appears to have been made on the 25th July 1887 for execution of the decree in question. On the 28th October 1887 the judgment-debtor filed an objection, contending that the decree was barred. On the 20th December 1887 the objection was overruled and execution was directed to issue; but the proceedings were ultimately struck off on the 29th March 1888. Thereafter another petition seems to have been made, which was struck off on the 20th September 1888. Then followed the present application, which was made on the 19th of November 1890.

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe) and Mr. Twidale, for the appellant.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee and Baboo Umakali Mukerjee, for the respondents.

The Officiating Advocate-General.—The decree in this case is barred under the provisions of art. 179 of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877. Though there was an appeal to the Judicial Committee, the decree-holders cannot get the benefit of art. 180, [554] because the words "Order in Council" contained therein refer to appeals from the decisions, passed by the High Court in the exercise of its Original Civil jurisdiction. The words "Order in Council" were introduced in the Act of 1877. There is always a marked distinction between Courts established and not established by Royal Charter. But even assuming the decree to be within that article, the decree-holders' right accrued in May 1882, when the decree of the Privy Council was passed. There is no revivor at any time within 12 years before the date of this application as required by art. 180; the decree is therefore barred. See Luchmun Persad Singh v. Kishun Persad Singh (1). The decree is also barred under the provisions of s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Bonnerjee, for the respondents.—Article 179 of the Indian Limitation Act has no application to the present case, the decree sought to be executed being an order of Her Majesty in Council. The case is governed by art. 180, which allows 12 years. The interpretation put upon art. 180 by the Advocate General is not warranted by its ordinary grammatical construction. The Full Bench case of Luchmun Persad Singh v. Kishun Persad Singh (1) is conclusive on the point. Section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to an Order of Her Majesty in Council. See Mayabhai Prembhai v. Tribhuvandas Jagjivandas (2) and Ganpathi v. Balsundara (3). As to the meaning of the word "revivor" used in art. 180, the decision of White, J., in Ashootosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (4) is fatal to the contention of the Advocate-General. There it has been distinctly held that an order for execution of a decree made after notice on the Original Side of the High Court creates a revivor. But we further contend that the question is res judicata and the appellant is concluded by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge dated 20th December 1887, in which he held that the execution is not barred.

The Officiating Advocate-General, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

[555] The judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was delivered by

We were at first under the impression that the various applications from the 10th February 1883 to September 1888 were in respect of the decree which was made in the High Court on the 28th March 1882, and this impression arose from the translation of the decree-holders' application of the 19th November 1890, which in some places is no doubt ambiguous; but upon a careful perusal of the petition itself, it is clear that all the applications were in respect of the execution of the Privy Council decree.

The judgment-debtors contend, in the first place, that the decree of which execution is sought is not an Order of Her Majesty in Council within the meaning of art. 180 of the Limitation Act. Mr. Advocate-General, who appeared for the appellants, urged that the orders mentioned in art. 180 refer to orders made in suits going up to the Privy Council on appeal from the High Court in the exercise of its Original Civil jurisdiction. He also urged that the decree was barred under the provisions of s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code. And he further contended that, even if the decree of which execution is sought could be regarded as an Order of Her Majesty in Council, there was no revivor at any time within 12 years before the date of the present application, as required by art. 180, and that consequently the decree was barred.

It appears to us that the first contention is untenable. Whatever may have been the view previously entertained regarding cases going to the Privy Council from the High Court in the exercise of its Appellate jurisdiction, it is now finally settled by a Full Bench in the case of Luchmun Persad Singh v. Kishun Persad Singh (1) that when once an order is made in Council it becomes the paramount decision in the suit. The Full Bench followed the view expressed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Pitts v. La Fontaine (2), where they said that "when a decision of this Board has been reported to Her Majesty, and has been sanctioned and embodied in an Order [556] in Council, it becomes the decree or order of the final Court of appeal." No distinction was made between cases going up to the Privy Council from the High Court in the exercise of its Original Civil jurisdiction and those from its Appellate jurisdiction. We must therefore hold that the decree which is sought to be enforced is the Order in Council.

The next question which arises is whether s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code limits in any way the provisions of art. 180 of the 2nd schedule of the Limitation Act. Section 230 runs thus :—

"When the holder of a decree desires to enforce it, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree, or to the officer, if any, appointed in this behalf, or if the decree has been sent under the provisions hereinbefore contained to another Court, then to such Court, or to the proper officer thereof. The Court may in its discretion refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment-debtor.

(1) 8 C. 218 = 10 C.L.R. 425.

"Where an application to execute a decree for the payment of money, or delivery of other property, has been made under this section, and granted, no subsequent application to execute the same decree shall be granted after the expiration of twelve years from any of the following dates (namely), (a) the date of the decree sought to be enforced or of the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same, or (b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money, or the delivery of any property, to be made at a certain date, the date of the default in making the payment or delivering the property in respect of which the applicant seeks to enforce the decree.

"Nothing in this section shall prevent the Court from granting an application for execution of a decree after the expiration of the said term of twelve years, where the judgment-debtor has, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application."

Article 180 is as follows:—

"When a present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of realizing the right, [557] provided that when the judgment, decree or order has been revived, or some part of the principal money secured thereby, or some interest on such money has been paid or some acknowledgment of the right thereto has been given in writing, signed by the person liable to pay such principal or interest or his agent, to the person entitled thereto or his agent, the twelve years shall be computed from the date of such revivor, payment or acknowledgment or the latest of such revivors, payments or acknowledgments, as the case may be."

Section 230 was introduced for the first time in Act X of 1877, Article 180 is a reproduction of art. 169 of the Limitation Act of 1871, and seems to us to be independent of s. 230. The Bombay and Madras High Courts have, in the cases of Mayabhai Prembhai v. Tribhuvandas Jagjivandas (1), and Ganpathi v. Balsundara (2), expressed the same views, and held that the section in question has no application to decrees made by the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. In art. 180, Orders in Council stand in the same category as decrees of Courts established by Royal Charter in the exercise of such jurisdiction. The reasons upon which the Bombay and Madras High Courts have held s. 230 not to be applicable to the decrees of the High Courts, and with which we have no reason to differ, apply mutatis mutandis to the Orders of Her Majesty in Council. Had the Legislature intended to cut down the effect of art. 180 by s. 230, we would have expected some reference to that section in the article itself, as we find in art. 179, or some other indication of such intention. We think that the objection of the judgment-debtors under s. 230 must also be overruled.

The only other question which requires consideration is, whether there has been such a revivor of the decree in this case as is required by art. 180. The learned Advocate-General contended that the word "revivor" means a revival of the suit or decree against the representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor.

The word has received, however, a judicial interpretation in respect of decrees of the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. In the case of Ashootosh Dutt v. [558] Doorga Churn Chatterjee (1), White, J., held that an order for execution of a decree made after notice to show cause, has the effect of reviving it within the meaning of art. 180. As pointed out in that case, before Act VIII of 1859 was made applicable to the Chartered Courts, judgment would not issue upon a decree more than a year old without suing out a writ of scire facias against the defendant. The rule as to writs of scire facias was applicable to common law judgments. An equity suit was revived by a bill of revivor. Act VI of 1854, s. 31, introduced a simpler method of reviving a suit on the Equity side of the Court; on the Plea side the practice remained unchanged until the application of Act VIII of 1859 to the Chartered Courts. The provisions of this Act did away with the more cumbrous procedure of former times and introduced a simpler method of reviving a decree or suit on the original side of the Court. That method was by proceedings under ss. 215 and 216 of Act VIII of 1859. Section 19 of Act XIV of 1859, the first Limitation Act passed by the Indian Legislature of general application, provides as follows:—

"No proceedings shall be taken to enforce any judgment, decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter, but within twelve years next after a present right to enforce the same shall have accrued to some persons capable of releasing the same, unless in the meantime such judgment, decree, or order shall have been duly revived or some part of the principal money secured by such judgment, decree, order, or some interest thereon shall have been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing signed by the person by whom the same shall be payable or his agent, to the person entitled thereto or his agent, and in any such case no proceeding shall be brought to enforce the said judgment, decree, or order, but within twelve years after such revivor, payment or acknowledgment or the latest of such revivors, payments, or acknowledgments as the case may be; provided that for three years next after the passing of this Act, every judgment, decree, and order which may be in force at the date of the passing of this Act shall be governed by the law now in force, anything therein contained notwithstanding."

[559] There is no definition of the word "revived," anywhere, but, as indicated by White, J., it has to be read in connection with the provisions of Act VIII of 1859. The provisions of s. 19 of Act XIV of 1859 were continued in Act IX of 1871, art. 169, which ran thus:—

"When a present right to enforce the judgment, decree, or order accrued to some person capable of releasing the right, provided that when the judgment, decree, or order has been revived, or some part of the principal money secured thereby, or some interest on such money has been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto has been given in writing, signed by the person liable to pay such principal or interest or his agent, to the person entitled thereto or his agent, the twelve years shall be computed from the date of such revivor, payment, or acknowledgment, or the latest of such revivors, payments, or acknowledgments, as the case may be."

Until 1874 these provisions were confined to decrees of the Chartered High Courts, in the exercise of their ordinary civil jurisdiction. There was no period of limitation prescribed for execution of decrees of the Privy Council [see Wise v. Jugobundhoo Baboo (1)]. By s. 21 of Act VI of 1874 the following words were added to art. 169 of Act IX of 1871: "or any order of Her Majesty in Council." The same words appear in art. 180, only instead of "any order" it is "an order." It is clear to us that the term "revived" must be read in one and the same sense in connection with High Court decrees and Orders in Council, and not distributively as Mr. Woodroffe contends. If we were to confine White, J.'s, interpretation to Orders in Council made in suits going up to the Judicial Committee from the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, this incongruous result would follow, that whereas such decrees would be subject to twelve years' limitation, there would be no limitation in cases going up from the appellate side. Now s. 248 of the present Code is analogous to s. 216 of Act VIII of 1859. And in the present case an order was made, after notice as provided for in that section, for the execution [560] of the decree. We think, therefore, that the present application is not barred under art. 180. Further, it seems to us that the question now raised is res judicata. The very same contentions were raised on the 20th of December 1887 before the Subordinate Judge which were overruled, and the order was that the decree be executed. As there was no appeal preferred against that order, it became conclusive [Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (2)].

On the whole, we are of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed, and we accordingly dismiss it with costs.

TOTTENHAM, J.—I desire to add that, while fully concurring in the opinion expressed in the judgment just delivered, I would dismiss this appeal only for the reason that the objection of the judgment-debtor is res judicata by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 20th December 1887.

ASGHAR REZA (Plaintiff) v. MEHDI HOSSEIN AND OTHERS (Defendants).
[7th, 8th and 16th December, 1892, and 30th January, 1893.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 142—Possession, suit for—General practice of abiding by concurrent decisions on fact—Evidence as to ownership of property held benami,

Two properties bought by a Mahomedan father in his lifetime, but held in the name of members of his family, were the subject of dispute after his death, the question being whether they belonged to his estate, so as to be divisible among the sharers in the inheritance, or had been held so that the beneficial interest in them belonged to those of his children who had been born of one of his two wives, excluding the sons born of his other wife. The Courts below decided in favour of the sons of the wife first married. As to one of the properties they concurred in finding the facts entitling these sons alone, and the Committee preferred not to depart from the general rule as to concurrent decisions on fact. As to the other property [561] both the Courts found that there had been a transfer from the name of the original benamidar into the name of the wife first married; but, whereas the first Court found that this change was intended to give her the beneficial interest, which thenceforth belonged to her, and to her sons after her, the appellate Court found that this transfer was simply from one benamidar to another, although after the death of the mother, the property had been treated as that of her sons. Accordingly, as to this the evidence was considered, and their Lordships inclined to the view taken by the first Court. However, the title not having been clearly proved, they preferred to rest their decision on the possession found. The claimants, and their father before them, having together been out of possession for more than twelve years before action brought, limitation was an absolute bar.

APPEAL from a decree (26th May 1888) of the High Court, affirming a decree (13th September 1880) of the Subordinate Judge of Purnea.

In the suit out of which this appeal arose, Saiyed Asghar and Saiyed Dilawar Reza, the sons of Ahmed Reza by Roushan Bibi, whom he married in 1859, sued their half-brothers Haider and Sufdar, sons of Ahmed Reza by his other wife Afzulun Nissa, whom he married in 1854; and together with them was sued Saiyed Lutf Ali Khan, C.I.E., who alone contested this claim. The object of the suit was to have set aside a sale by the brothers to Lutf Ali of two estates, one being an eleven gandas share of a zamindari named Kishengunge, and the other a putni mahal named Bhata Bhagulpore. The claim, with mesne profits, was valued at Rs. 4,70,811. The plaintiffs sought to establish that, although the eleven gandas share stood in the name of Afzulun Nissa, and the putni stood in the names of Haider and Sufdar, these estates were, in fact, held benami for Ahmed Reza himself till his death in 1870; and therefore formed part of the inheritance left by him and were divisible equally among all his sons, according to the Mahomedan law as applicable to persons of the Shia sect, to which the family belonged. Lutf Ali Khan alone appeared and filed a written answer, maintaining that he had a good title from Haider and Sufdar, who had, on the 25th April 1876, by two separate zurpeshgi ijaras, leased to him the eleven gandas of Surjapur and the putni Bhagulpore, with other transactions, transferring their interests in those estates to him. The title of Haider and Sufdar to make this transfer remained the [562] question raised on this appeal, in which the second plaintiff, Dilawar Reza, took no part, and Lutf Ali having died during the proceedings, the latter was represented by the first five respondents, Haider and Sufdar being only formally in that character. The plaint stated the purchase in 1851, at an execution sale, of the eleven gandas share by Ahmed Reza in the "Ismfarzi" name of Kasim Ali, his mukhtar, who was afterwards, in 1852, caused by Ahmed to execute an ikrarnama acknowledging this property to be transferred to Afzulun Nissa. It stated that Ahmed himself had been, since the purchase, and continued after the ikrarnama had been made, in possession of the eleven gandas share. It alleged that Ahmed purchased on 15th February 1867, at an execution sale, the right, title and interest of the putni Bhata Bhagulpore, in the "Ismfarzi," names of Haider and Sufdar, his minor sons, through Abdul Karim his mukhtar, and had himself become the proprietor.

It was stated in Lutf Ali's written answer that Afzulun Nissa had obtained the eleven gandas share on the 11th February 1851, and had continued in possession down to her death, after which Haider and Sufdar had been in possession, neither the plaintiffs nor Ahmed Reza ever having had possession of any part. That Kasim Ali acted as Ahmed's mukhtar in the matter was denied; and it was alleged that, even if Ahmed had supplied the money for the purchase, it had been made for the benefit of Afzulun Nissa or her sons; and any possession of Ahmed would have been only on her or their account. Lutf Ali also insisted that he had purchased bona fide after all proper inquiries, and he also relied on the suit being barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge fixed issues, including one as to limitation, as to the effect of these transactions, and he found as a fact that the purchases had been made benami by Ahmed out of his own money. The eleven gandas share he found to have been purchased originally in the name of Kasim Ali for Ahmed's own benefit. He found that the ikrarnama in favour of Afzulun Nissa, though dated 21st August 1852, was not registered till 1854, and was probably executed after the marriage of the first wife, who derived benefit from the property, as did her sons also after her death. He found in effect (as the High Court afterwards said [563] in their judgment) that they, mother and sons, were successively in either direct or constructive possession of the eleven gandas share. As regards the putni estate, he found that it was purchased in the names of Haider and Sufdar and for their benefit; that Ahmed Reza intended from the beginning that the property should be theirs, and that they also were directly or constructively in possession. Upon all the evidence, he concluded that the presumption of the property being held benami for the father who found the money did not arise, and that if it did arise it was sufficiently rebutted by the evidence of the property having been beneficially used by Haider and Sufdar, the sons, whom their father intended to be the owners. Upon this finding of fact he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

An appeal by the plaintiffs was dismissed by a Division Bench of the High Court (NORRIS and BEVERLEY, JJ.) The Judges were of opinion that the conclusion arrived at by the Original Court was correct, though they did not agree with the Subordinate Judge upon every one of his findings or in all the reasoning upon which they were based. They found that the eleven gandas share was purchased by Ahmed Reza for himself in the name of his mukhtar, Kasim Ali, not for the benefit of Afzulun Nissa, and that when it was transferred into her name, this act was simply a transfer from one benamidar to the name of another. Haider and Sufdar, as the Judges found, were not recognized as in possession of the eleven gandas share till after the death of Ahmed Reza, whose property was managed as a whole; but they found as a fact that, at latest, on his marriage with Roushan Jehan in 1859, Ahmed Reza made a gift of the eleven gandas share to the sons of Afzulun Nissa, Haider and Sufdar. They did not agree with the first Court as to the effect of the ikrarnama registered in 1854 operating as a transfer to Afzulun Nissa, in whose favour, however, they found that Ahmed Reza made a gift of the property to which it related, in 1859, some years after the date of the document. Entering then into the matter of the acquisition of the putni, they found that the document of 1st November 1869 was executed by Ahmed Reza with full knowledge of its contents; they referred to revenue papers, rent suits, amulnamas, and other documentary evidence, and they arrived at the conclusion that [564] the putni Bhata Bhagulpore was acquired by Ahmed Reza for the benefit of Haider and Sufdar, was always treated as their property exclusively, and was dealt with separately from Ahmed Reza's own share. The above findings as to the two properties disposed, in the Court's opinion, of the claim. The Judges declined to allow the contention to prevail that on their finding that the eleven gandas share was given to Afzulun Nissa in 1859 or 1860, the plaintiff should be declared entitled to two-thirds of the share (admittedly a one-fourth share), which would have devolved upon Afzulun Nissa's husband at the time of her death. They declined to allow this, because the plaintiffs had come into Court alleging that the properties claimed were exclusively the properties of their father Ahmed at the time of his death, and distinctly denying that Afzulun Nissa or her sons had any beneficial interest in them during Ahmed's lifetime. This title they failed to prove. They could not, having failed, be allowed to set up a new case. Also there was another reason in this, that the plaintiffs having put forward the case that the eleven gandas share never belonged to Afzulun Nissa, the question whether Ahmed had ever succeeded to any portion of it, as her heir, had never been put in issue, nor had it been tried. They referred to what was laid down in Eshan Chunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto (1).

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, contended that, in the conflict of evidence, the fact that Ahmed Reza found the purchase-money, was the only guide for determining the question for whose benefit both the estates, the eleven gandas zemindari and the putni, had been held by the nominal holders. From the use of a benami-dar's name, no presumption arose in favour of any one other than the purchaser, who had found the money for the estate bought—a proposition which this Committee had more than once affirmed on the subject of benami holdings. There was in this case no presumption that the estates were to be held for the benefit of two of Ahmed's sons only, and no sufficient evidence to prove that state of things. The source of the money that bought the property was the only criterion of ownership. The burden of proof rested altogether on [565] him who claimed that the minor sons were to benefit, or that the beneficial owners was to be any one except Ahmed himself; and this burden had not been discharged by the evidence. The documents tended to show that Ahmed dealt with the eleven gandas share as his own; no one else was recorded proprietor, and dakhil kharij was not given to Haider and Sufdar, who were not entered in the Collectorate books till after Ahmed's death, nor was the name of Afzulun Nissa; nor was her name used in the management. The burden of proof was on the respondents, who would intercept the property devolving by law on the heirs. A gift, if followed by possession, might have resulted from an intention to pass the property from the father to the two sons; but an attempt to show that his property held benami for him, passed by a benami transfer, in name only, to some of his children and not to others, and that this arrangement operated not until after his death, would be ineffectual according to Mahomedan law. As to interference with concurrent findings below, reference was made to Uzhur Ali v. Ultaf Fatima (2); the Court of ultimate appeal would, where wrong inferences were drawn from the evidence, disregard the concurrence below. That case related to the evidence in benami purchases, as to which the principles were equally applicable to Hindus and Mahomedans. There was no presumption of an advancement by reason of the name of a son being used, other than applied where a stranger's name was used. Also were referred to Gopee Krist Gosain v. Gunga Persaud Gosain (3), Dhurm Das Pandey v. Shama Soondery

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., Mr. J. Graham, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the first five respondents, representatives of [566] Lutf Ali Khan, relied on there having been concurrent findings of fact; as a general result, that neither of the properties in dispute formed at the death of Ahmed Reza a portion of his estate so as to be divisible among his heirs. Both the Courts below had found, in effect, that he intended that his purchase, though made benami, was to be held as a provision for his two sons by his wife Afzulun Nissa, and not to form part of his inheritance generally. As to the eleven gandas share the case for the respondents was that the finding of the first Court, though in detail not identical with that of the High Court, was right upon the evidence; that the transfer to Afzulun Nissa had been of a beneficial interest from the beginning, and had been continued, on her death, to her sons. The High Court's finding had only altered this as to the time when the interest passed, but in effect had confirmed the finding of the lower Court. Independently of the reasons of the Courts below, and their views as to the proof of title, limitation was a defence to this suit, there not having been any possession by the plaintiffs, or by their father, through whom they claimed, within twelve years preceding the date of suit brought. In regard to the subject of delivery of possession, reference was made to Umjad Ali Khan v. Mohumdee Begum (5), and Ameer-oon-Nissa Khatoon v. Abadoon Nissa Khatoon (6).

Mr. R. V. Doyne replied.

On a subsequent day (January 30th, 1893) their Lordships' judgment was delivered by:—

JUDGMENT.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—This suit relates to certain interests in the pergunnah of Surjapore, which appears to be an estate of great value. It was formerly in the sole ownership of a Mahomedan gentleman named Raja Fakruddin. After his death, and after much litigation, it became divided into moieties, one known as Kishengunge and the other as Khagra. These moieties have in their turn been the subject of numerous lawsuits and arrangements, and have been split up into a great variety of interests. The history of the property is very complicated, and it has taken [567] up a great deal of attention in the Courts below, and swells the bulk of the record. But for the present purpose it is not necessary to go further back than the purchase by one Ahmed Reza of the interests now in dispute. They are called the eleven gandas and the putni mahal, and each of them is a part of the Kishengunge moiety.

Ahmed Reza had two wives. In the year 1854 he married Afzulun Nissa, then a very young girl, though capable of bearing children. She brought him two sons named Haider and Sufdar, and one daughter Munni Bibi. All are living, and are defendants in this suit. In the year 1859 Ahmed married Roushan Jehan, a lady who was entitled to valuable interests in the Khagra division of pergunnah Surjapore. She brought him four sons, of whom two are dead; the other two are plaintiffs in the suit, and the eldest, Asghar, is the present appellant.

Afzulun Nissa died in April 1360, Ahmed in April 1870, and Roushan in the year 1874. The suit was brought in April 1885. In it the sons of Roushan claim that the properties in dispute were part of the inheritance of Ahmed, in which they are entitled to share. The children of Afzulun Nissa are defendants on the record; but the person who is really resisting the claim is the defendant Lutf Ali Khan. He states that in or about the year 1883 he purchased the properties of Haider and Sufdar, who were then recorded as proprietors in the Collector's books, and were in possession. And he maintains that they were the true and lawful, as well as the ostensible, owners thereof; and that the plaintiffs have no title. The plaint charges collusion between Lutf Ali and the sons of Afzulun Nissa, but the view of both Courts is that the whole family are in combination against Lutf Ali.

On the 11th February 1851 one Kassim Ali was declared the purchaser of the eleven gandas at an execution sale. On the 8th April 1854 Kasim Ali effected the registration of an ikrarnama, executed by himself under date the 21st August 1852, in which he declared that the purchase-money was provided by Afzulun Nissa, and that she was the real owner of the property. It has been found that the date assigned to the deed is false, and that the true date is that of the registration. This was about the time of [568] Ahmed's marriage with Afzulun Nissa; whether before or after is not clearly shown, nor does it seem to be important. The statement as to the source of the money is also false. Kasim was the agent of Ahmed, who found the money. Afzulun Nissa was very young—"a mere child" the High Court says,—and wholly without property. Lutf Ali naturally enough has striven to support the statements of the ikrarnama, but both Courts have found that issue against him. It must be taken that Kasim was benamidar and Ahmed the real owner of the property before the 8th April 1854. On that day the formal and ostensible ownership was transferred by Ahmed's orders from Kasim to Afzulun Nissa. Whether that transfer merely changed one benamidar for another, or gave a beneficial title to the property, is the first question on this part of the case.

It does not appear that Afzulun Nissa ever had any separate possession or enjoyment of this property, which was managed by Ahmed along with his own larger shares till long after his wife's death. She died in 1860, being still quite a young woman. Her heirs were her mother, her husband and her children. If the dispute had arisen then, and if it had appeared that Ahmed's intention in effecting the transfer to her was to benefit her, the Court would have had to consider the question discussed at the bar, viz., how far the Mahomedan law requires change of possession to perfect a gift by a husband to a wife of very tender years. But the dispute did not arise till after Ahmed's death and the Courts have been guided to their conclusions mainly by the events which took place between the death of Afzulun Nissa and that of Ahmed.

In May 1860 a suit was instituted in the name of Ahmed's second wife, Roushan "to recover interests claimed by her in pergunnah Surjapore. This suit was really promoted by Ahmed himself, and conducted at his cost. It related to the Khagra division of the pergunnah. But the amount and details of the plaintiff's share are described by way of subtracting other shares and interests from the 16 annas of the pergunnah. In this way there is deducted "Share of Raja Syed Ahmed Reza, 6 annas 1 ganda, and the "right purchased by Syed Haider Reza and Sufdar Reza, minor sons of "Afzulun Nissa deceased purchaser of 11 gandas,—[569] in all 6 annas "12 gandas." The 6 annas 1 ganda belonged to Ahmed prior to 1851. To speak of Afzulun Nissa and her sons as both being purchasers of the eleven gandas was inaccurate, but that does not affect the value, whatever it may be, of the recognition of their title. On this and other documents, the High Court observe that there was no reason why on Afzulun Nissa's death her name should not have been dropped altogether, if the property really belonged to Ahmed, and if he wished to treat it as his own. The property he held in his own name was many times larger than the largest amount of the claims against him.

On the 10th January 1863, Lala Kali Sahai, another agent of Ahmed, executed a deed purporting to sell to Haider and Sufdar a share of the eleven gandas, and of other interests in pergunnah Surjapore, acquired and left by Afzulun Nissa. The share is described as "the entire share of Bibi Mehrun Nissa, mother of the late Rani Afzulun Nissa aforesaid, as "mother's share." This share, it is stated, was purchased by Lala Kali Sahai, at an execution sale, in pursuance of a decree passed against Mehrun Nissa. How the money was provided does not appear. Nobody doubts that the whole transaction, whether substantial or only formal, proceeded from Ahmed. But the High Court decided that the proceedings recited in the deed were real proceedings, there being no evidence to the contrary. If so, Ahmed recognized title in Mehrun Nissa, as heir of Afzulun Nissa, and, if money was paid, it was paid for getting that title in.

In the year 1876 came the transaction of that putni. That estate had been granted by Ahmed and his brother Mahomed to two persons, against whose representatives decrees were executed, one in February and one in June 1867. The purchases were made ostensibly in the name of Mehrun Nissa, guardian and executrix of Haider and Sufdar, minor sons of Ahmed, and the sale deed was in favour of Haider and Sufdar. With respect to this purchase also it has been disputed who found the purchase money, and the dispute has been decided the same way as in the case of the eleven gandas. It must be taken that Ahmed found it. Still remains the question whether he intended his sons to be benamidars or beneficial owners. If the latter possession is not as between father and infant son necessary to perfect the gift. [570] But the possession of the property is important as evidence, and is one of the points much disputed in the case.

On the 1st November 1869, Ahmed being ill, but quite competent for business, handed to Mr. Campbell, who is termed by the Subordinate Judge, Joint-Magistrate and Divisional Officer of the place, a petition relating to his property. Mr. Campbell received it, signed it, and had it recorded in the Collector's office. He commences thus:—

"This is a petition filed in person by Raja Syed Ahmed Reza, zemindar of pergunnah Surjapore.

"Sir,—For more than a month I have been suffering from a sore in the mouth. Every one living is subject to death, and hence it is proper to make the under-mentioned representations to the Collector of Bheriadangi.

"The facts are as follows: That farsightedness and prudence require that the paternal and ancestral property should be looked after, and the name and prestige of the family should be preserved during my lifetime. Whereas in pergunnah Surjapore a 6 annas 1 ganda share of the zemindari, besides resumed and unresumed milik lands, exclusively belongs to me, and an eleven gandas share of the zemindari of pergunnah Surjapore and the putni mahals, and the resumed and unresumed milik lands is the purchased right of the minor sons, Syed Haider Reza and Syed Sufdar Reza, and [out of] a 1 anna 13 gandas 3 cowris 1 krants 2½ dunts share of the zemindari out of 16 annas 8 gandas have been decreed to Rani Roushan Jehan, it seems proper that proper management and settlement of those properties should be made in the manner following."

He then goes on to give directions for management after his death by the Court of Wards through a surburakar or manager. As regards the properties "exclusively belonging to me," his design is that each of his six minor sons shall have an equal share with the others, and that his daughter shall have an allowance. As regards the properties now in dispute, his directions are that the services of Kishen Chunder Chowdhry and another shall be retained, and that the profits shall be remitted to Mehrun Nissa, the guardian and executrix of the minors Haider and Sufdar, and applied for their benefit.

It is not contended that this document was intended to operate, or can operate, as a gift, inter vivos or as a will. But the Court received it as a declaration by Ahmed against his own interest, and used it as throwing a strong light on his intentions in his prior dealings with the properties.

[571] Ahmed made no further disposition of his property, but died intestate, leaving his widow Roushan and his seven children surviving him. Soon after his death disputes arose between the two branches of the family, and Roushan and her sons left the family-house at Kishengunge to reside elsewhere in the neighbourhood. The plaintiffs allege that they were dispossessed of the properties in dispute by their elder brothers in July or August 1870, but the Courts have concurred in rejecting that allegation as unproved. There were disputes between Mehrun Nissa on one side and Roushan on the other as to the true ownership, but they were not brought into litigation. It is common ground that Haider and Sufdar, or Mehrun Nissa on their behalf, were in possession as early as August 1870, and that they or their vendee have ever since remained in possession.

The plaint was filed on the 6th April 1885. The main defences set up were that the plaintiffs had no title and that the suit was barred by time. Both depend on the views taken of Ahmed's intentions and of his actual dealings with the properties. If it were clearly established that his wife and sons were merely benamidars and he the true owner up to his death, the time since elapsed would, owing to the minority of the plaintiffs, not be sufficient to bar the suit. Accordingly, the Subordinate Judge addressed himself to the questions of title and possession, and the High Court took the same course; and as both Courts, upon those issues, came to a conclusion adverse to the plaintiffs, they rested their decrees on that ground, and gave no formal decision upon the point of limitation. They did, however, elaborately discuss the question of fact, whether or no Afzulun Nissa's sons were put into possession in Ahmed's lifetime, and found that they were. That fact, when found, was used by the Courts as evidence of the defendant's title. But it is obvious that it might have been used in a more direct way to support the defence of limitation. If during Ahmed's lifetime he was out of possession and his sons in, time began to run in their favour against him, and the minority of his heirs will not give them further time to sue.

It was earnestly contended by Mr. Cowie that the whole decision turns upon questions of fact, and that there are concurrent findings in favour of the defendants which ought not to be [572] disturbed, or indeed examined into any further. Their Lordships agree that there is no substantial question of law in the case, but in order to see how far the Courts have concurred in their view of the facts, it is necessary to examine precisely what their findings are, and to distinguish between the two properties in dispute. It will be convenient to take the putni first.

The Subordinate Judge, commenting on a number of facts, finds that the purchase of the putni in the names of the sons was for their benefit; that Ahmed Reza intended at the time of the purchase, and thenceforward till his death, that the putni should be theirs; that Haider and Sufdar have derived benefit therefrom for about 20 years; and that their beneficial enjoyment destroys the presumption of benami. He states the duration of enjoyment loosely, and exaggerates it somewhat; but the former part of his judgment shows an accurate perception of the actual dates. The main facts on which he relies are, Ahmed's petition of 1869, Roushan's or rather Ahmed's plaint of 1860, and a number of zemindari papers showing that separate accounts were kept of the putni and of Ahmed's own 6 annas 1 ganda. He also states that the plaintiff's witnesses are not truthful; and he comments adversely on the fact that Kishen Chand Chowdhry, who is mentioned in Ahmed's petition as an important servant of the estate, and who is in the service of the plaintiffs, was not called by them, though the defendants frequently requested them to call him.

The High Court find in terms "that the putni was acquired. . . . " by Haider and Sufdar, and was always treated as their exclusive property." They rest their judgment mainly on the documents relied on by the Subordinate Judge and on the sale deed of 1863.

Their Lordships have then the first Court and the appellate Court concurring in their conclusion as to a question of fact, and upon nearly the same considerations. The question, moreover, is one for the decision of which familiarity with native families and estates, and with the practice of benami purchases, confers great advantages. Of all classes of questions this would be one of the last in which this Committee could be induced to depart from the wholesome general practice of abiding by concurrent decisions of the Courts below.

[573] The case of the eleven gandas is not so simple. The Subordinate Judge finds that Ahmed intended the transfer to Afzulun Nissa to be for her benefit, and that she and her sons afterwards derived benefit from it for about 30 years prior to the suit. He considers that Afzulun Nissa became owner at the date of the ikrarnama, and he connects it, but only by conjecture and by proximity of time, with her marriage.

The High Court, on the other hand, think that the transfer to Afzulun Nissa was simply a transfer from one benamidar to another. But they are so pressed with the evidence of title and of possession furnished by the plaint of 1860, the deed of sale of 1863, the petition of 1869, and the zemindari accounts, which have been mentioned before, aided, in their opinion, by the form of a rent suit of September 1869, in which Mehrun Nissa and her two grandchildren are joined with Ahmed as zemindars, and by the long undisturbed enjoyment after Ahmed's death, that they cannot resist the conclusion that in some way the property was transferred before his death. They connect the transfer with Ahmed's second marriage; and their finding is that in or about the year 1859 the property was given by Ahmed to Afzulun Nissa or her sons, and was thenceforward acknowledged and dealt with by him as their property.

Their Lordships cannot find here any such concurrence as would justify them in abiding by the ultimate decision in favour of the defendants as something which ought not to be inquired into, and they have accordingly heard the case fully argued as to the eleven gandas. They are bound to say that they cannot find sufficient evidence of any gift to Afzulun Nissa in the year 1859, when no overt act was performed. For a gift in the year 1854, when the ikrarnama was executed, there is to say the least a very plausible case. To the considerations relied on by the Subordinate Judge two may be added, which assumed some prominence during the argument here. One is that no explanation can be given why the ikrarnama should have been executed at all, unless there was to be a change of ownership. Mr. Doyne frankly stated that he could not think of any, and their Lordships do not find any suggested in the lower Courts. Mr. Doyne thought it sufficient to argue that, as the purchase-money came from Ahmed, the law would presume that he was the true owner. So it would [574] as between him and Kasim. But as between him and Afzulun Nissa the case is quite different. Ahmed was the absolute owner of an estate held for him by a benamidar. In that state of things he marries, and, somewhere about the same time, directs his benamidar, to effect a transfer of the formal and ostensible title to the lady. Why should he change his benamidar? Why should he take as benamidar his very young wife instead of his professional agent? The Subordinate Judge says that to make benami in the names of wife or sons is never considered to be safe. Whether safe or not, nobody suggests that it was a probable or desirable change to make. The transaction is quite intelligible on the theory of a gift, but otherwise it remains an enigma.

Again, Mr. Doyne urged very strongly that Ahmed was alarmed at the claims which were being pressed against him, and therefore had a strong motive for setting up a benamidar. The High Court as above mentioned, have been at the pains to show that there could be no such alarm in 1860 or afterwards. But supposing that it existed in 1854, what is the inference? That Ahmed would be content to interpose a sham title of a flimsy description between himself and his creditors? Or that he would make a real provision which would save his wife in case his own fortunes were wrecked? To their Lordships it seems that the second alternative is the more probable. They do not place much reliance on these conjectures, which are very speculative, but it seems to them that, however the case is presented, the theory of gift in 1854 affords a more probable explanation of the facts than the theory of a change of benamidar.

From the above observations it will appear that their Lordships incline to the view taken by the Subordinate Judge of the true intention of Ahmed in causing Kasim Ali to execute the ikrarnama of 1854. And then the possession by Afzulun Nissa's sons, which is clearly found by both Courts to have existed some time, though the precise beginning of it is uncertain, prior to the death of Ahmed, may be sufficient to satisfy the rules of Mahomedan law.

But after all, there remains a good deal of obscurity on the question of title. Their Lordships prefer to rest their decision on the conclusions of the Courts with respect to possession, as to which [575] they had reasonable evidence. Ahmed, being out of possession, might have brought a suit to recover it, and to have it declared that the formal title vested in Afzulun Nissa and her successors was only benami for himself. From such evidence as their Lordships have of his wishes, he never would have done so, but, however that may be, the time for bringing a suit began to run in his life, and after twelve years became an absolute bar to him and his heirs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree appealed from and to dismiss the appeal with costs.

REFERENCE UNDER COURT FEES ACT.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice.

IN THE GOODS OF J. T. FROESCHMAN (DECEASED).
[22nd May, 1893.]

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), sch. I, art. 11—Ad valorem duty on Probate—Parties married and holding property under the Code Napoleon—Law of France—Trust property.

The deceased F was a European subject of the German Empire. He married a lady of Solingen in Rhenish Prussia, where the Code Napoleon is in force. There, in contemplation of the marriage, the parties entered into a contract whereby it was provided that "there should be and rule, universal community of his and her present and future moveable and immoveable property," which contract placed the parties under the law of France respecting community of property between husband and wife. Under that law, a husband and wife have an equal interest in the property comprised in the community; on the death of either, the property is divided into two parts, of which one part goes to the survivor, and the other to the heirs, or to donees under a testamentary disposition. Held, that on the death of F only one half of the property was chargeable with the ad-valorem duty payable under art. 11 of sch. I of the Court Fees Act: the other half being trust property, which should, under the provisions of s. 19 D of that Act, be exempted from payment of such duty.

[576] THIS was an application for probate, the facts of which are stated as follows in the reference of the case by the Taxing officer to the Chief Justice:—

"The deceased was a European subject of the German Empire. He married a lady of Solingen in Rhenish Prussia, where the Code Napoleon is in force. There, in contemplation of the marriage, the parties entered into a contract, whereby it is provided that 'there should be, and rule, universal community of her and his present and future moveable and immoveable property.' This contract, which is confirmed by the will of the deceased, placed the parties under the law of France respecting community of property between husband and wife.

"As the result, only half the property left by the deceased belonged to him, the other half belonged to his wife, and is trust property, which should, under the provisions of s. 19 D of the Court Fees Act, 1870, be exempted from the payment of the ad-valorem fee prescribed by art. 11 in sch. [577] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Banerjee.

PADMANAND SINGH (Plaintiff) v. BAJO AND ANOTHER (Defendants).
[6th May, 1892.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 101-115—Power of Settlement Officer to resume and assess lakhiraj land.

In proceedings under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) the Settlement Officer has no power to resume and assess with rent land which has been held as lakhiraj.

IN this case, in the course of proceedings under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), the plaintiffs alleged that 7 bighas of land in village Chainpur, pergunnah Uttarkhand, zillah Bhaugulpore, their mal lands, had been wrongly recorded as the brohmutter land of the defendants, whereas the proper amount should be 4 bighas. They prayed that the record should be corrected, and that the 3 bighas of excess land should be assessed with rent at the rate prevailing in the district, viz., Rs. 1.5-6 per bigha.

The defendants stated that no mal land of the plaintiff had been recorded as the defendants' brohmutter land; and that the whole of the 7 bighas of land referred to was their brohmutter land of which they had been in possession for a long time.

It was admitted at the hearing that the defendants had never paid rent in respect of the lands in dispute.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 771 of 1891, against the decree of Baboo Poresh Nath Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore, dated the 14th of January 1891, reversing the decree of Baboo Joga Dass Bhuttacharjee, Assistant Settlement Officer of Raj Beneli and Srinagar estates, dated the 8th of January 1890.

The Settlement Officer held that of the land 4 bighas were the brohmutter land of the defendants, and were lakhiraj lands; the remaining 3 bighas he held to be mal lands, and assessed them with rent.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the whole of the 7 bighas were lakhiraj lands of the defendants, and dismissed the plaintiffs' claim.

[578] The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. R. E. Twidale, for the appellant.

Baboo Kali Kissen Sen, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

It was found by the Settlement Officer in this case, which has been dealt with under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that 4 out of the 7 bighas of lakhiraj land was held by the defendant under that title, and although it was admitted on behalf of the zemindar that at no time has he been in receipt of rent of any of those lands, either of the larger tenure of 7 bighas, or of the smaller exempted as rent-free, or of the 3 bighas, the difference between the two, the Settlement Officer has recorded the 3 bighas as rent-paying land and made it liable to the payment of certain rent settled by him. There is certainly no authority for the assumption of such power on the part of the Settlement Officer. The only provision of the law under which he could make a settlement of rent in respect of excess land is s. 104, and that does not apply to lands held by one who is not a tenant in respect of other lands to which they have become attached. It seems to us rather that the Settlement Officer was assuming to himself the functions of the Civil Court to resume lands hitherto held rent-free, but in his opinion as a trespasser.

The District Judge, however, very properly modified the decree of the first Court. He held that inasmuch as the plaintiff had never realized rent from the defendant in respect of the lands in dispute, and admittedly some lands were lakhiraj, there was no reason to suppose that the remaining land was not also lakhiraj. However that may be, in the view that we take, it was not competent to the Settlement Officer to assess those lands with rent. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

GOURI PATTRA (Defendant No. 156) v. H. R. REILY, AND IN HIS PLACE LALA BUN BEHARY KAPUR, MANAGER, BURDWAN RAJ ESTATE (Plaintiff).^{*} [30th May, 1892.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 38, 52, sub s. 2, cl. (c), Chap. X, s. 101, sub-s. 2, cl. (a), s. 104, sub-s. 2—Ancient holdings—Additional rent for excess lands—Onus of proving lands in excess of area originally let—Permanent deterioration—Liability to additional rent—Duty of settlement officer.

Section 104, sub-s. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is subject to the provisions of s. 52 of the Act.

The mere fact that on a measurement made by a zemindar under the authority of Government given under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is found that the tenants generally are in possession of lands in excess of the areas entered in his zemindari papers and their rent receipts, does not necessarily prove that he is entitled to additional rent for the excess areas.

Where settlements, or holdings are of very old date and lands are let out by areas ascertained without any accurate survey, but as contained within certain recognised boundaries, for instance, by reference to other holdings, it is incumbent upon the zemindar seeking enhancement of rent very many years after the original settlement, to show that the lands held by the ryots are in excess of the lands originally let to them in consequence of some encroachment or some alluvial increment, or that the settlement was made on the basis of measurement and the rates of rent as applied to the area then determined, while on a fresh measurement made by the same length of measure it has been found that he is entitled to receive additional rent which by carelessness or neglect or some other cause he had hitherto lost.

A liberal interpretation should be put upon the word "permanently" in s. 38, sub-s. 1, cl. (a), and the word construed with reference to existing conditions. It cannot be said that a deterioration is not permanent, only because by the application of capital and skill it might be removed.

In determining the liability to additional rent, the settlement officer is by s. 52, sub-s. 2, cl. (c) bound to consider the length of [580] time during which the tenancy has lasted without dispute as to rent or area.

Although only an occupancy ryot can bring a suit under s. 38, the principles laid down in that section ought to be taken into consideration in all proceedings for settlement of rent, whatever be the status of the ryot.

THIS appeal arose out of an application under s. 104, cl. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885.

The Court of Wards under s. 101, sub-s. 2, cl. (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act obtained an order from Government directing proceedings under chap. X of that Act in respect of an estate in the southern part of the district of Midnapore appertaining to the Burdwan Raj estate. As the result of these proceedings it prima facie appeared that the lands held by the ryots were in excess of the areas specified in their rent receipts and in the zemindari papers. Accordingly an application was made under s. 104, sub-s. 2, to the Settlement Officer to settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of such lands as were in excess of those for which the ryots were paying rent. The ryots in their petition stated that their lands had been held in jote since the time of their respective ancestors, that they had always been in possession and enjoyment of the lands within their present boundaries, that they had never cultivated any land in excess thereof, and that they had never exceeded those boundaries. They further stated that recently the quality of the lands had seriously deteriorated, and contended that on a fresh settlement they were entitled to a reduction of rent. They also prayed for exclusion of abwabs from their rents. The Settlement Officer dealt with the cases of all the ryots in one judgment. He found that there was a custom prevalent under which, according to a certain scale, remissions had invariably been granted on account of fallow land, and that the rents were variable according to this scale both by the custom and as part of the contract between the landlord and the tenants, that the holdings of the ryots had never actually been measured, and that the areas had been entered in the zemindari papers not according to any actual measurement, but by guess work. With regard to the question whether the land had permanently deteriorated within the meaning of s. 38, sub-s. 1, cl. (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the tenants were in consequence [581] entitled to a reduction of rent, the Settlement Officer found that deterioration in the quality of the soil of the holdings had been admitted by the landlord's witnesses, and the causes were "stated to be the silting up of the draining khal and the Kalinga river, and the bad state of the protective ridges which " were "by custom or contract repaired at the cost of the landlord:" that the deterioration had lasted for seven years, had been uniform and was likely to continue unless the drainage khals were "thoroughly cleansed of the silt of years at a vast expense," and he came to the conclusion that the deterioration was permanent within the meaning of the section. Accordingly the Settlement Officer fixed certain rates of rent to be paid by the ryots.

On appeal the Special Judge held that no custom of remission of rent on account of fallow land had been proved. He held the tenants were liable to pay increased rent for the excess lands found by measurement to be in their possession. He disallowed their claim for reduction of rent on account of deterioration of the soil, on the ground that only occupancy ryots could put forward a claim under s. 38, and the deterioration could not be said to be permanent, as it could be removed. Accordingly the Judge directed the Settlement Officer "to revise the jamabandi record of rights and all other papers" in accordance with his directions. One of the tenants, Gouri Pattra, appealed to the High Court.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

The minor Maharaja of Burdwan, whose estates are under the Court of Wards, has, under s. 101, sub-s. 2 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, obtained an order from Government directing proceedings under chap. X of that Act in respect of an estate in the southern part of the district of Midnapore.

The result of this measurement having prima facie shown that the lands held by the ryots are in excess of the areas specified in their rent receipts and the zemindari papers, an application was made under s. 104 sub-s. 2, to the Settlement Officer to [582] settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of such lands as are in excess of those for which they were paying rent.

The tenants—and there are 159 of them in the case now in appeal before us—represented that their lands had been held in jote since the time of their respective ancestors, that they had always been in possession and enjoyment of the lands within their present boundaries, that they had never cultivated any land in excess thereof, and that they had never exceeded those boundaries. They also represented that recently the quality of those lands had seriously deteriorated, so that in a fresh settlement they were entitled to an abatement of rent.

The Settlement Officer dealt with the cases of all these ryots in one judgment. He found, first of all, that there was a custom prevalent under which remissions had invariably been granted on account of fallow lands. In the next place he found that it had not been shown that the holdings of these tenants had ever been measured. In fact, so far as we can learn from his judgment, he seems to have found that there was nothing to show the circumstances, under which the holdings or tenures were originally created. He found on the landlord's collection papers and on the ryots' rent receipts that it did not appear that the areas of the several holdings were ever actually measured, and he consequently held that these areas were entered in these papers by "guess work," that the zemindar did not prove what the holdings originally were, or that they contained only the areas entered in his collection papers and in the ryots' rent receipts. The Settlement Officer next proceeded to consider the plea for abatement urged by the tenants, that is, whether the quality of the lands had deteriorated. He found that the deterioration had been practically admitted by the landlord. He says :—" He (the landlord) could not deny that. In sheer despair he files a petition to say that this Court has no power to reduce rents under s. 38," and he disallowed this objection. The Settlement Officer accordingly fixed certain rates of rent to be paid by the tenants.

On appeal, the Special Judge has held that no custom of remission of rent on account of fallow lands was proved. As this matter has not been discussed before us in appeal, it is unnecessary for us to express any opinion on the ground on which the Judge [583] has arrived at this conclusion. The Judge has next found that the tenants were liable to pay increased rent on the excess lands found by measurement to be in their possession, and he has also found that the rent is payable at Rs. 2-4 a bigha. He disallowed the claim made by the tenants on account of deterioration of the quality of the lands held by them. He has apparently admitted that the fertility of the lands has been considerably impaired by deposits of sand and inundations, in consequence on the one hand of silting up of tidal khas which have not been excavated for some years past, and on the other from defective protection by embankments. But he considers that these evils are not irremediable, and that consequently any deterioration resulting therefrom cannot be regarded as permanent. The Judge has also commented on the fact that one of the witnesses says that in years of deficient rain there are bumper crops, and he says that he has ascertained from the Civil Court ameen that this was what happened in the past year. He has accordingly rejected the claim for abatement of rent. He has given certain other directions on minor points, and directed the Settlement Officer to revise the jamabandi in accordance with the instructions contained in his judgment.

Two points have been raised before us in second appeal ; first, whether the plaintiff, zemindar, is entitled to any enhancement of rent from the tenants on account of an increase in the areas of the lands held by them ; and, next, whether the tenants are entitled to claim abatement of rent in consequence of deterioration in the fertility of their lands from causes already stated.

Now, a tenant is by the Bengal Tenancy Act, s. 52, sub-s. 1, cl. (a), declared to be liable to pay additional rent for all land proved by measurement to be in excess of the area for which rent has been previously paid by him, unless it is proved that the excess is due to the addition to the tenure or holding of land which, having previously belonged to the tenure or holding, was lost by diluvion or otherwise without any reduction of the rent being made. (This exception does not apply to the present case.) In order, therefore, to establish the liability of the tenants, it is necessary for the zemindar to prove that the lands held by them are in excess of the areas for which rent has been previously paid. [584] Sub-s. 2 declares that in determining this area, the Court shall, if so required by any party to the suit (and this, we understand, has been required by the ryot defendants in the present case), have regard to the origin and conditions of the tenancy, for instance, whether the rent was a consolidated rent for the entire tenure or holding ; next, the length of time during which the tenancy has lasted without dispute as to rent or area ; and, lastly, the length of the measure used or in local use at the time of the origin of the tenancy as compared with that used or in local use at the time of the institution of the suit. Section 104, sub-s. 2, under which the zemindar in this case claims the settlement of a fair and equitable rent in respect of lands held by the tenants in excess of those for which they now pay rent, is, in our opinion, subject to s. 52 and its provisions just described. The question would therefore be, what are the lands for which the tenants are now paying rent ? and next, are their lands held by them in excess of such lands ? To determine the first point, it would become necessary to have regard to the circumstances set out in s. 52, sub-s. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The mere fact that on a measurement made by a zemindar under the authority of Government given under chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is found that the tenants generally are in possession of lands in excess of the areas entered in his zemindari papers and their rent receipts, would not necessarily prove that he is entitled to additional rent for the excess areas. There is no evidence that at any previous time there has been a measurement of any of these lands, and it is admitted that all the holdings are of very old date. In our experience, too, in such instances lands were let out by areas ascertained as the Settlement Officer has found by "guess work" ; that is to say without any accurate survey but as contained within certain recognized boundaries, either by reference to other holdings, and it constantly happens in the case of lands such as those in this case that even this description is wanting. Settlements made in such a manner would seem to show that the object of the zemindars was to settle ryots on the lands and to have them brought under cultivation rather than to be particular in the description of the lands let. In such a case it would be incumbent upon the zemindar who [585] seeks an enhancement of rent, or, as he would term it, a settlement of rent, on excess lands very many years after the original settlement of the ryots to show that the lands held by the tenants fall within that description ; that is to say, that they are in excess of the lands originally let to them in consequence of some encroachment or some alluvial increment, or that the previous settlement was made on the basis of a measurement and the rates of rent as applied to the area then determined, while on a fresh measurement made by the same length of measure, it has been found that he is entitled to receive additional rent which by carelessness or neglect or some other reason he had hitherto lost. On the finding of the Settlement Officer that it is not proved that the areas of the several holdings were ever measured according to any actual measurement, but that they were entered in the zemindari papers by guess work, it would be impossible merely on those entries to find that the areas were accurately stated, so as to define the exact extent of each holding, and render the tenants liable to additional rent for any lands in excess of those areas. The Judge has disposed of this part of the case by stating that the supposition that the measurements were originally made by guess is prima facie unreasonable. We cannot accept this opinion. It is for the zemindar who seeks for a settlement of these lands to show that they are in excess of those for which rents are being paid, and to do this, it is for him to show what those lands are, what were the terms of the original settlement, and whether it was by any, and if so, by what, process of measurement. At the highest, he would be entitled to additional rents only by an application of the same process. As we understand the object of chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is to enable landlords and tenants to know exactly their relative positions towards one another, and not to disturb previously existing relations, unless it can be shown that they have terminated. The zemindar in this case is bound to show how the areas in the last settlement with the ryots were ascertained, and that the ryots are now in possession of excess lands and consequently liable to pay additional rent therefor.

Other points have been overlooked ; for instance, in determining the liability to additional rent, the Settlement Officer, is by s. 52, bound to consider the length of time during which the tenancy [586] has lasted without dispute as to rent or area [s. 52, sub-s. 2, cl. (c)]. None of these important conditions seem to have been present to the mind of the Judge, while many of them were overlooked by the Settlement Officer. We cannot therefore think that the rights of the parties in this important matter have been properly determined.

Next, as to the objection in regard to the deterioration of the fertility of lands.

We are of opinion that the Judge has fallen into several errors of law. No doubt it is only an occupancy ryot who is authorized by the Act to bring a suit under s. 38, but the principles laid down in that section ought clearly to be taken into consideration in all proceedings for the settlement of rent, whatever the status of the ryots. Again, we think the Judge is wrong in the interpretation he has put on the word "permanent." He seems to think that a deterioration ought not to be held to be permanent if by the application of capital and skill the cause of deterioration might be removed. We are of opinion that a more liberal interpretation must be put on the word, and that it must be construed with reference to existing conditions.

No doubt there may not be any deterioration of so serious a character as to permanently affect the land irrespective of any outlay of capital ; but the facts admitted by the plaintiff in this case show clearly that under existing conditions the deterioration must form a serious element of consideration in properly determining any rates of rent to be payable by the tenants. And it is for the Settlement Officer to consider, as regards the old rent payable, whether the tenants are entitled to claim any abatement on this ground. It will be for the Settlement Officer first of all to find whether the zemindar has proved his right under s. 52, to obtain additional rent on the excess areas, and if this be found in favour of the zemindar, it will then be for the Settlement Officer to determine what are fair and equitable rates of rent on such lands. The case must be returned to the Settlement Officer in order that he may proceed in accordance with the instructions and frame a record of rights; a settlement should be made accordingly.

Before Mr. Justice Norris.

JADUB LOLL SHAW v. KANAI LOLL SHAW AND OTHERS.*
[8th June, 1893.]

Practice—Affidavit of documents—Sealing up immaterial parts—Sufficiency of affidavit.

A plaintiff in his affidavit of documents objected to allowing inspection of such portions of certain account books as he stated did not contain entries relating to the matters in question in the suit, and claimed the right to seal up such portions. Upon that affidavit being filed, the defendant took out a summons to consider the sufficiency thereof. It was objected that this was not the proper mode of procedure, and that the defendant should take steps when inspection was refused.

Held, that though technically the better way of raising the question would have been to take out a summons for production, the course taken by the defendant might, if preferred, be adopted, and that he was entitled to an order that the plaintiff should make a better and further affidavit showing what parts of the documents he claimed to seal up, and the grounds upon which the claim was based.

THIS was a suit to recover the sum of Rs. 39,598-12 and enforce certain personal covenants contained in an indenture of mortgage, and the present application related to the sufficiency of an affidavit of documents filed by the plaintiff on the 4th January 1893.

That affidavit was as follows:—

"I, Jadub Loll Shaw, at present residing at No. 1, Brojo Gobind Shaw's Lane in the town of Calcutta, the plaintiff above named, solemnly affirm and say as follows:—

1. That I have in my possession or power the documents relating to the matters in question in this suit set forth in Parts I and II of the schedule hereto annexed and marked A.
2. That I object to produce the documents set forth in Part II of the said schedule hereto annexed, as they are the cause papers in this suit.
3. That I object to allow inspection of such portions of the account books, being items 2, 3, and 4 in Part I of the said schedule, as do not contain entries relating to the matters in question in this suit, and I claim the right to seal up such portions.

[588] 4. That according to the best of my knowledge, information and belief I have not now, and never have had, in my possession or power, or in the possession or power of my attorneys or agents or attorney or agent, or in the possession or power of any other person or persons on my behalf, any account, book of account, voucher, receipt, letter, memorandum, paper or writing, or any copy of or extract from any such documents whatsoever relating to the matters in question in this suit, or any of them or wherein any entry has been made relative to such matters or any of them other than and except the documents set forth in the said schedule hereto annexed."

Part I of the schedule contained four items, namely, the mortgage referred to in the plaint and three books of account, viz., a rokar, a pucca jama kharcha, and a khatiyān, and Part II only contained the cause papers in the suit.

On the 21st March 1893 the defendants took out a summons calling on all parties concerned to attend before the Judge in chambers on a day fixed therein "on the hearing of an application on the part of the defendants to consider the sufficiency of the affidavit of the plaintiff" set out above.

The application was adjourned with consent from chambers, and came on to be heard this day.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, for the defendants in support of the application.
Sir G. H. P. Evans, for the plaintiff contra.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee.—The affidavit is insufficient, inasmuch as it does not specify what the plaintiff wants to seal up, and it is not, in the prescribed form; see Daniell's Chancery Forms and Precedents, 3rd ed., No. 1733, p. 929. [Mr. Bonnerjee was here stopped by the Court.]

Sir G. H. P. Evans.—The complaint is not that the affidavit is not a full and sufficient one, but that we have inserted in it a claim to seal up certain portions of the books. That is mere surplusage, and the question as to our right to do so would arise on their applying for inspection, which they have not done. The application is therefore misconceived, as no question has yet arisen. We have set out all the documents we have, and have made a vague claim that we have a right to seal up a portion of the books, but we have not refused to produce them at the [589] attorney's office, and it does not follow that when they come to inspect that we shall even insist on sealing up. The practice to be followed in sealing up immaterial parts of documents is laid down in Heeralall Rukhit v. Ram Surun Loll (1). Rule No. 259 of Belchambers' Rules and Orders provides that the objection must be taken in the affidavit, and rule 268 provides for a special application being made if the right be not so claimed. The portion of the affidavit complained of is mere superfluity, and the defendants have misconceived their remedy.

Mr. Bonnerjee in reply.—This is the proper way of bringing the matter to the notice of the Court: see Nicholi v. Jones (2). The point was also raised and decided in the case of Uma Churn Khan v. Kanney Lall Khan on the 22nd August 1892. The case is unreported, but the facts of that case, as appears from the original record, were precisely similar to the present case. That case was argued by Counsel and judgment was reserved. The note of the judgment in the Court minute book is as follows:—"The third paragraph of the plaintiff's affidavit is not in my opinion sufficient. Technically the better way of raising this question would have been to take out a summons for production; see Bray on Discovery, p. 232. But the case of Gardner v. Irvin (3), within the principles of which the present matter falls, shows that the course taken by the defendant here may, if preferred, be adopted. The plaintiff must make a better and further affidavit showing what parts of the documents referred to in the 3rd paragraph of his affidavit he claims to seal up, and the grounds upon which the claim is based. He must also pay the costs of this application."

KABIL SARDAR AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. CHUNDER NATH NAG CHOWDHRY, EXECUTOR TO THE ESTATE OF RAJ MOHUN NAG CHOWDHRY (Plaintiff).* [7th December, 1892.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885)—Occupancy ryot transferring part of his holding without notice to the landlord—Forfeiture, ground of.

D was an occupancy ryot of the plaintiff, a 14 annas shareholder in a zemindari, and unknown to the plaintiff sold half of his holding to the sons of his brother. The plaintiff then sued D for arrears of rent. D pleaded that he could not be sued for the whole amount, as he was only in possession of half of the holding. Subsequently to that the rent was paid into the Collectorate by D and by his brother's sons. In a suit by the plaintiff to eject D and his transferees on the ground that D had forfeited his rights by transferring half of his holding.

Held, that under the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) the sale or parting with the whole or part of a holding is not a ground of forfeiture.

THE facts in this case were as follows:—

The plaintiff was a 14 annas shareholder in the zemindari in which, prior to the year 1884, one Delu had a right of occupancy in about 26 bighas 16 cottahs at a rental of Rs. 30. Some time before the year 1884, Delu sold half of his holding to the first four defendants, sons of his deceased brother Kalu. In 1884 the zemindar brought a suit against Delu for arrears of rent of the land, and Delu met that suit by the plea that half the land had been sold by him to the first four defendants, but since that date the rent had been paid by all the defendants into the Collectorate to the credit of the plaintiff. On the 19th of March 1889, a suit was instituted by the executor of the zemindar against the sons of Delu and Kalu to recover khas possession of the whole of the 26 bighas 16 cottahs, on the ground that the sale and transfer by [591] Delu to his brother's sons of the possession of half of the land comprised in the holding worked a forfeiture of the entire tenancy. The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for so much of the land as was sold by Delu to defendants one to four, but dismissed the suit as to the rest of the land. The District Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for possession of the whole of the land, on the ground that a sale of a moiety of a tenure worked a forfeiture of the entire holding. From this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Bhowani Charan Dutt, for the appellants.

Baboo Nilmadhub Bose, for the respondent.

Baboo Bhowani Charan Dutt, for the appellants.—The plaintiff should never have got a decree either for a part or for the whole of the holding. There is nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act which says that the transfer of a holding by an occupancy ryot shall work a forfeiture of his holding. Section 25 gives two instances where an occupancy ryot may be ejected by his landlord, but this case does not come under that section. This is not a case of abandonment under s. 87. The mere transfer of a tenure not transferable by the custom of the country does not give the zemindar a right to actual possession of it so long as the rent is paid by the recorded tenant. The case of Narendra Narayan Roy v. Ishan Chandra Sen (1) does not govern this case, for that case was decided on Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 6, which Act has been repealed, and in that case the sale was to a stranger of the whole holding, and there the ryot abandoned his holding and his interest had ceased—Debiruddi v. Abdur Rahim (2); but in this case there has been no abandonment, and the interest still exists. The Bengal Tenancy Act is the Act by which cases of this nature are now governed, and had the Legislature intended that a transfer of an occupancy holding should work a forfeiture of the holding, they would have expressly said so in the Act.

Baboo Nilmadhub Bose, for the respondent.—This case is governed by the case of Narendra Narayan Roy v. Ishan Chandra Sen (1) for there it is distinctly laid down that "a right of [592] occupancy which a ryot has under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 6, is not transferable." Though that Act has been repealed by the Bengal Tenancy Act, still the latter Act is based on the former, and the decision under the former Act is still good law.

The original holder was Delu and he sold to Kalu's sons. They certainly should be treated as trespassers, for Delu, in selling to his nephews without the consent of his landlord, abandoned his rights as regards their shares, and clearly comes under s. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff being a fractional co-sharer can certainly eject a trespasser in respect of his own share—Hulodhur Sen v. Gooroo Dass Roy (3), Radha Prasad Wasti v. Esuf (4), Harendra Narain Sing Chowdry v. Moran (5). The right to eject a tenant who transfers his holding without the landlord's consent is a right which the landlord enjoys not under the Rent Act, but under, so to speak, the common equitable law of the country. The Tenancy Act is only a consolidation of the former rent Acts, and this transfer was made before the Tenancy Act came into force, and if it worked a forfeiture, that forfeiture was complete before the Tenancy Act came into force. In the case of Debiruddi v. Abdur Rahim (1), Wilson, J., held that when under the old law a denial of a landlord's title worked a forfeiture, and such denial took place before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the case was not affected by the Act, but must be governed by the old law. So also in this case the Tenancy Act does not affect it, as the sale took place before the Act was passed in 1885. It is clear as regards the moiety sold to the sons of Kalu that Delu entirely severed his connection with that moiety, and the landlord had every right to enter on that moiety. The sale of the moiety works a forfeiture of the whole tenure, for, if not, the tenant could by simply selling a part of his tenure force on the landlord a partition of the holding, which it is settled he is not entitled to do. If occupancy ryots are permitted to sell and transfer their holdings or parts of them without notice to the landlord, the result must be endless confusion and hardship to the landlord.

[593] The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and NORRIS, J.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiff is the owner of 14 annas of a zemindari in which, prior to the year 1884, a person named Delu had a right of occupancy in about 26 bighas 16 cottahs, at a rental of Rs. 30, and before that year Delu sold half of his holding to the defendants one to four, the sons of his deceased brother Kalu. In 1884 the plaintiff brought a suit against Delu for arrears of rent of the land, and in answer to that suit Delu pleaded that half the land had been sold by him to the defendants one to four, and that they were in possession of it. What the result of that action was does not appear, but we are told by the plaintiff's pleader—and I understand that the statement is not disputed by the defendant—that since that time no rent in respect of this holding has been accepted by the plaintiff from any one, but that as it has become due, the rent of the entire 26 bighas 16 cottahs has been paid into the Collectorate to the credit of the plaintiff in the name of Delu or of the defendants Kafiludhi and Kasimudi, who are his sons and now represent him, as he has died since 1884.

It is found that there is no local custom by which this holding is transferable.

The present suit was brought on the 19th of March 1889 to recover khas possession of the whole of the land by the zemindar, on the ground that the sale and transfer of the possession of half of the land comprised in the holding by Delu to his brother's children worked a forfeiture of the entire tenancy.

The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for so much of the land as was sold by Delu to the defendants one to four, but dismissed the suit as to the rest of the land. The District Judge has decreed the suit as to the whole of the land, on the ground that the sale of the moiety worked a forfeiture of the entire holding.

The defendants have appealed and contended that the entire suit must fail, as neither Delu nor his representatives have abandoned the holding, and that the zemindar can only obtain khas possession of the land for one of the causes mentioned in the Bengal Tenancy Act, of which parting with possession of the land is not one. In my opinion this contention must prevail.

[594] The reason why the zemindar is entitled to obtain khas possession of the land of a holding which has been sold, and of which possession has been given to the purchaser, is fully explained in the judgment of the Full Bench in the case of Narendra Narayan Roy v. Ishan Chundra Sen (1), and is that the sale and transfer of possession to the purchaser conveys no title to him, and as the ryot has left the holding and disclaims any interest in it, he must be held to have abandoned it, and the land remains a piece of land within the zemindari, to which the person in possession has no title, and which has been abandoned by the owner. It is evident that it is essential to such a case that the owner of the land, i.e., the ryot, must have abandoned it altogether, as, if he has not, he is the person entitled to possession of it, and it is of course not sufficient to enable him to succeed for the zemindar to prove that the person who is cultivating land has no title to it; he must show that the ryot's interest has ceased, or that he is entitled to eject the ryot for one of the reasons mentioned in the Bengal Tenancy Act. This was clearly decided in the case of Debiruddi v. Abdur Rahim (2).

In the present case, so far from having abandoned the holding, the ryot and his sons since his death have paid the rent of the whole into the Collectorate, and they have themselves always cultivated a portion of it, and the sale or parting with possession of the whole or part of the holding is not made a ground of forfeiture by the Tenancy Act.

For these reasons I think that the Courts below were wrong in decreeing the suit or any portion of it, and I think that the appeal must be decreed, and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

[595] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Norris.

ALI AHAMMAD SIRDAR (Defendant No. 1) v. BEPIN BEHARI BOSE AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).^{*} [22nd December, 1892.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 150—Admission of rent due to landlord.

Section 150 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is highly penal in its character and cannot be put in force against a defendant, unless he has intentionally admitted money to be due and has not paid it; and such admission must be in the action.

Under the circumstances of this case it was held that the defendant had made no such admission.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—Bepin Behari Bose and others sued Munshi Ali Ahammad Sirdar to recover the sum of Rs. 402 for arrears of rent of a holding with cesses and interest. The plaintiff stated that the rent, together with cesses and interest for the years 1292, 1293, 1294, and 1295 (1885—88), had not been paid, that the rent was payable by certain instalments, and that the cause of action arose at the expiration of each year and at the lapse of each instalment. The plaintiff was verified on the last day but one of the year 1295 (11th April 1889), and filed on 2nd Bysakh 1296 (11th April 1889). The defendant filed his written statement on 11th Assar 1296 (24th June 1889), in which he denied that the rent was payable by instalments as stated by the plaintiffs, and submitted that the rent for 1295 could not be sued for before the year had expired. The defendant also stated that the rent for the years 1292, 1293, 1294 and part of 1295 had already been collected by the agents of the plaintiffs, and filed dakhilas given to him by the agents. The case came on for hearing before the Munsif of Khulna, and he refused, under s. 150 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to hear evidence adduced by the defendant to support his plea of payment, as he had not paid the rent admitted by him into Court. The defendant then put in a petition asking for one day's time in order to [596] pay in the admitted amount. The Munsif refused to allow time, and gave the plaintiffs a decree for the full four years' rent without hearing any evidence on behalf of the defendant in support of his assertion, that the whole of the rent for the first three years had been satisfied by payment. On appeal the Subordinate Judge supported the Munsif's decision. The defendant then appealed to the High Court.

The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and NORRIS, J.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit to recover a sum of Rs. 402 as being due from the defendant to the plaintiffs for rent of a holding with cesses and interest.

Paragraphs 3 and 4 of the plaint state the claim as follows :—

3. "That the rent of the said jama from the year 1292 to 1295, together with interest and cesses, amount, as per account given below, to total of Rs. 402, and is justly due to the plaintiffs, and that the defendants have not paid the same even on repeated demands.

4. "In the disputed mehal it is the practice to pay the rent according to the following instalments, viz., half-anna share of the entire rent in the month of Bysakh, half-anna in Jeit, one anna in Assar, 2 annas 6 gundas in Srabun, 4 annas in Bhadro, half-anna in Assin, half-anna in Kartik, 3 annas 6 gundas in Aughran, 2 annas in Pous, half anna in Magh, half-anna in Falgun, and the rent is paid accordingly. The cause of action arose at the expiration of each year and at the lapse of each instalment."

The schedule of accounts is as follows :—

last day but one of the year. The plaint was filed on the 2nd of Bysakh 1296, the second day of the year.

The defendant, on the 24th of June 1889, equivalent to the 11th Assar 1296, filed his written statement, paragraphs 4, 6 and 7 of which are as follows:—

4. "In the mehal connected with the suit, it is not the practice to pay the rent according to instalments stated by the plaintiffs, or by any system of instalments. Under such circumstances, the suit for recovery of rent for the entire year 1295, before the expiration of the said year, cannot proceed.

6. "The practice being to realize the rent of the mehal connected with the suit through agents, the said agents have collected the entire rent for the years 1292, 1293, 1294, and a portion of the rent of the year 1295. I file herewith the dakhilas granted to us by the said agents. The other dakhilas will be filed through agents.

7. "The plaintiffs' claim for cesses and interest is excessive."

The cause appears to have been tried before the Munsif of Khulna on the 10th May 1890, and from the judgment I gather that the defendant offered evidence in support of his plea of payment, but that it was rejected by the Munsif, who says: "As to the first point, the defendant has not paid his admitted rent into Court: he is not entitled to be heard as to his plea of payment therefore under s. 150 of the new Rent Law:" and that upon that the defendant put in the following petition:—

"I, defendant Munshi Ali Ahammad Sirdar, beg to state that in the suit brought by the plaintiff, Baboo Bepin Behari Bose, he having sued for rent for the year 1295, which has become due, I want one day's time for payment of the said amount of rent. It is therefore prayed that the Court may be pleased to grant me one day's time for payment of the said rent.

Dated the 10th May 1890.

Munshi Ali Ahammad Sirdar."

This was refused, and judgment given for the plaintiffs for the rent of all the four years without hearing the defendant's evidence [598] in support of his assertion, that the whole of the rent for the three years had been satisfied by payment. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge supported the Munsif's view, and the question we have to consider is whether, on these facts, the defendant admitted that he owed the plaintiff the rent for 1295 when the action was brought, and by not paying that into Court has forfeited his right to show, if he can, that he has satisfied the claim for the whole of the years 1292, 1293, and 1294 and part of 1295 by payment.

Section 150 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that when a defendant admits that rent is due, but pleads that the amount claimed is in excess of the amount due, his plea shall not be heard, unless he pays into Court the amount which he admits to be due. There can be no doubt that the admission intended by the section must be an admission in the action,—in the present case an admission in the written statement, as that was the only admission in the action which was before the Munsif when he refused to allow the defendant to give evidence in support of his plea of payment, and when he commenced to write his judgment on the 10th of May 1890; and the only question is whether the written statement contains an admission that a portion of the rent for 1295 was due at the commencement of the suit, and that the defendant had then no answer to the plaintiff's claim for that money. It is clear that the defendant had no intention of making any such admission; but it is said that, as the year 1295 had expired when the plaint was filed, the statement in paragraph 4 of the written statement, that the rent was not payable by instalments, and that no part of the rent of 1295 was payable until the expiration of the year, does not show that the rent for that year had not become due; and that the statement in the plaint that the rent for 1295 was due when the suit was brought, is not denied, and so must be taken to be admitted; and, if so, the defendant has admitted that the rent for 1295 was due when the plaint was filed, and is liable to the penalty imposed by s. 150. I do not think so. For the purpose of ascertaining whether anything is admitted to be due and payable by this written statement, the whole of it must be taken into consideration, and, further, must be assumed to be true. The claim is for a sum of Rs. 402 made up of four yearly balances, particulars of which are given in the schedule to the plaint. The defendant in [599] his written statement says that the whole of the rents for the first three years and for a portion of the fourth, 1295, have been paid, that the account is not correct as the claim for cesses and interest is excessive, and that the rent of 1295 was not due when the suit was brought. How this can be said to be an admission that anything was payable at the time the action was brought I quite fail to understand, or even if the statement that the rent of 1295 was not due be struck out, there is still a statement that the whole of the rent for 1292, 1293 and 1294, and part of 1295, has been paid, and that the amount claimed is not due, as the interest and cesses are excessive. Section 150 is highly penal in its character, and I do not think can be put in force against a defendant unless he has intentionally admitted money to be due and has not paid it.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that defendant has not in this case admitted that any money is due from him to the plaintiff within the meaning of s. 150, and I think that the judgment must be set aside and the case sent back to the Munsif, who will replace it upon his file and try the issues according to law, taking such evidence upon them as the parties may think fit to produce.

I think that all the costs in all Courts up to this time should abide the ultimate event of the litigation.

THIS appeal arose out of an application by the judgment-debtors to set aside a sale in execution of a decree on the ground of material irregularity in the publication and conduct of the sale, and of their having sustained material injury by reason of such irregularity.

The properties forming the subject-matter of the execution sale complained of had been mortgaged by the judgment-debtors in favour of Jawahir Singh and others, the present decree-holders, and also in favour of Kerat Singh and others. These mortgagees brought suits upon their respective mortgages, and the suits were decreed on one and the same day, and the decree now under execution, amongst other things, directed that in the event of the monies due to the two mortgagees not being paid, the said mortgaged properties should be sold, and the sale proceeds, after deducting the costs of sale, should first of all be paid to the plaintiffs in the two suits. At the time of the sale, however, the Nazir recorded, in the heading of the memorandum of sale bids, the following note:—"Be it known that the property is mortgaged in the case of Kerat Singh, decree-holder," and there was evidence on the record, which the Court below did not disbelieve, that at the time of the sale the Nazir verbally notified the existence of the above-mentioned mortgage.

The Court below held that there was no material irregularity in the publication and conduct of the sale, and that the judgment-debtors had failed to show that they had sustained any injury by the sale, and it, accordingly, rejected their application.

From this decision the judgment-debtors appealed.

Baboo Saligram Singh and Baboo Mahabir Sahai, for the appellants.

Mr. C. Gregory, Moulvi Mahomed Yusuff, Baboo Umakali Mukerji, and Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mookerji, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

[601] The arguments are sufficiently set out in the judgment of the Court (PIGOT and BANERJEE, JJ.) which, after stating the nature of the appeal and the decision of the Court below, continued—

Against the order rejecting their application, the judgment-debtors have preferred this appeal, and it is contended on their behalf—

First, that the sale having been held, with notice of Kerat Singh's mortgage, when it was clearly intended by the decree under execution that it should be held free of that mortgage, the Court below ought to have set aside the sale as illegal and invalid;

Secondly, that at any rate the Court below ought to have held that the circumstance, set out above, constituted a material irregularity in the conduct of the sale;

Thirdly, that the Court below ought to have held upon the evidence, that the judgment-debtors had sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity.

(1) 9 C. 656.

(2) 11 C. 200.

The first contention is based upon the following facts:—

Now it is clear from the terms of the decree that the sale directed by it was intended to be free of the mortgage to Kerat Singh, and it is equally clear that the effect, if not the intention of the notification of Kerat Singh's mortgage at the time of the sale, must have been to lead intending purchasers to think that the sale was subject to that mortgage. And if that was so, the sale took place in a manner which was contrary to the obvious intention of the decree.

It was argued for the respondents that it was not shown that the Nazir read out at the time of the sale what was written in the heading of the memorandum of sale bids. But there is evidence on the judgment-debtors' side, which has not been disbelieved by the Court below, and which we see no reason for disbelieving, showing that the mortgage of Kerat Singh was notified at the time of sale. Then, again, it was argued that even if it be held that the Nazir proclaimed what was written in his proceeding, it was, as the Court below has observed, only the statement of a fact, and was not calculated to lead any one to suppose that the sale was subject to [602] Kerat Singh's mortgage; and that if the statement had not been of a harmless character, two of the judgment-debtors, who are shown to have been present at the time of the sale, would never have allowed it to go unchallenged. But we are unable to accept this argument as valid. What was proclaimed by the Nazir was, it is true, the statement of a fact; but it gave only half the fact, and not the whole of it; which was, that the properties were mortgaged to Kerat Singh, but were put up to sale free of his mortgage; and the proclaiming of the former part of the full statement without the latter was evidently calculated to mislead. Then, as to the inference to be drawn from the presence of two of the judgment-debtors, the evidence is not precise as to whether they were present when the sale commenced and the Nazir notified the existence of Kerat Singh's mortgage, and there is nothing to show that they had any reason to suspect or anticipate any misdescription by the Nazir which would render their presence at the very commencement of the sale probable.

The sale then with notification of Kerat Singh's mortgage was, in our opinion, held contrary to the obvious intention of the decree; and the question is whether it was for that reason absolutely illegal and invalid. We are inclined to think it was. When a decree orders sale of property and directs, either expressly or by necessary implication, that the sale should be held in a certain way, non-compliance with such direction is something more than an irregularity, and would, in our opinion, render the sale absolutely illegal and invalid by reason of its being held contrary to the only warrant for it.

But even if it was not so, still, as urged by the appellants in their second contention, the facts noticed above would certainly constitute a material irregularity in the conduct of the sale.

It remains, then, to consider the question raised in the third contention of the appellants, namely, whether it has been shown that they have sustained substantial injury by reason of the abovementioned irregularity.

Now, though the appellants have not given any sufficient and satisfactory evidence of the value of the property sold, that adduced for the respondents, namely, the evidence given by their witness, Sheo Sahay, who bid at the sale for his uncle, the auction-purchaser, [603] clearly goes to show that the properties, taken in the aggregate, sold for a very inadequate price. The documentary evidence adduced for the respondents goes to show that the different portions of the mehal in question (Dariapur) sold at the rate of Rs. 250 per dam. According to the last-named witness, though that was the former rate of value, there has been a deterioration of the property since the last three years owing to deposit of sand, and the rate now ranges between Rs. 175 and Rs. 225 a dam; accepting the witnesses' statement as to deterioration of the property, but taking, as we think we may fairly do, the higher of the two reduced rates given by him for the correct rate, the value of the shares sold, that is—

17 kauris 15 bauris kacha,	or	about $\frac{17}{80}$ dams	pucca.
5 annas 4 pie	do.	or	26 $\frac{3}{4}$ „
1 anna 18 dams	do.	or	9 $\frac{1}{2}$ „ and 1 anna 9 dams	do.	or	7 $\frac{1}{4}$ „

would be about Rs. 9,815, and the total price fetched at the sale is only Rs. 6,055, which is certainly inadequate.

With reference to this evidence the Court below in its judgment observes:—"But it will be seen that all the taktas of Dariapur are not equal, and presumably, therefore, the witness in making that statement was referring to some of them." The witness, however, does not offer any such explanation, and the observation of the Court below does not appear to be sufficiently warranted by the evidence.

Then there arises the question whether there is anything to show that the inadequacy of price was occasioned by the irregularity complained of. The appellants have adduced some evidence to show that it was; but we are not prepared to accept that evidence as sufficiently reliable, especially when the Court below has disbelieved it. That being so, the case of Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Sing (1) might be relied upon by the respondents as showing that the appellant's case under s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure must fail. But though at first sight that case might seem to lend some support to such a contention, yet, as [604] pointed out by the majority of the Full Bench in Lala Mobaruk Lal v. The Secretary of State in Council (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council did not, in that case, intend to lay down any positive rule applicable to all cases. All that was held in that case was that the mere fact of inadequacy of price and the existence of an irregularity being shown would not be sufficient in every case to warrant the inference that the one was the cause of the other, and that in the case before their Lordships there was nothing to justify the conclusion that the inadequacy of price was occasioned by the non-statement of the revenue in the sale proclamation. The relation of cause and effect between a proved material irregularity and inadequacy of price may either be established by direct evidence or be inferred, where such inference is reasonable, from the nature of the irregularity and the extent of the inadequacy of price. In the present case, seeing that the irregularity complained of was the notifying of an incumbrance which did not really exist, and seeing that such a notice must, in the ordinary course of things, lower the value of the property sold, and observing that the property really worth Rs. 9,800 was sold for only Rs. 6,055, we think we may fairly infer that the irregularity in the conduct of the sale was the cause of the inadequacy of the price.

(1) 9 C. 656.

(2) 11 C. 200.

For the foregoing reason, we think that the order of the Court below should be reversed, and the sale complained of set aside. The purchaser is entitled to receive back his purchase-money.

The appellants are to have the costs of this appeal, the Court below, and of the hearing fee in this Court. The costs of this Court to be payable in equal proportion by the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser.

[605] CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Hill.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA v. JADUB DOOLEY.*
[12th December, 1892.]

The Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (Bengal Act II of 1888), ss. 412, 417, 419—Bye-laws (C) 4, 6, 7—Permit for removal of offensive matter or rubbish—Failure to take out permit—Continuation of offence.

Where a milkman who had been convicted for not taking out before the 1st December 1891 a half-yearly permit for the half-year ending the 31st March 1892, in accordance with bye-laws (C) 4, 6, made by the Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta under the provisions of s. 412 of Bengal Act II of 1888, and was charged with continuing his offence by failing for the space of seven days subsequent to the said conviction to take out the permit whilst still carrying on his business of a milkman, Held, that the offence of which he had been convicted of not taking out a permit on or before 1st December 1891, which was complete when that day had passed could not be continued by his omission to take out a permit.

Quare.—Whether it is competent for the Municipal Commissioners, by the bye-laws made under s. 412 to create the duty or obligation of taking out a permit, and whether under s. 417 disobedience to such bye-laws constitutes a punishable offence.

THIS was a reference made under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta.

The defendant, a milkman, having been convicted under s. 417 of the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act, 1888, for not taking out before 1st December 1891 a half-yearly permit for the half-year ending 31st March 1892, was again charged with continuing his offence by failing for the period of seven days subsequent to the said conviction to take out such permit. The material portion of the letter of reference was in the following terms:—

"What I am called upon to decide in this case is whether the failure on the part of the defendant to take out a permit for the half-year ending 31st March 1892 is a continuation of the offence he was convicted of on the 22nd March last.

"I am inclined to think that not taking out a permit for a particular half-year subsequent to the date of a conviction for the same half-year is not [606] a continuation of that offence, inasmuch as that conviction and fine cover the offence for the entire half-year, the offence being a single act of not taking out a permit for the removal of the offensive matters during the whole half-year before the 1st December in that half-year. It must be borne in mind that it is incumbent on the defendant to take out the permit once for all before the 1st December 1891, for the half-year ending the 31st March 1892, and the offence was complete on the expiration of the 30th November and was neither continued nor repeated, and could not be so within the half-year to which the conviction applied.

"By s. 419 of Bengal Act II of 1888, it is provided that failure to take out a license under the Act shall be deemed to be a continuing offence until the expiration of the period for which such license is required to be taken out. The introduction of the word 'permit' in the bye-law leads me to think that a distinction has been drawn between a license and a permit, and the omission in the bye-law to make a provision similar to that applicable to a license emphasizes my views.

"As, however, the question has been raised before me by the pleader for the Municipal Corporation that a defendant can be prosecuted repeatedly, and even daily, and convicted over and over again for not taking out a permit after conviction, therefore, on the ground that the conviction applied only to the portion of the half-year which preceded it, and that a subsequent prosecution and conviction would apply to the period intervening between the earlier and later convictions, it seems to me that the point is of some importance as well to the Corporation as to the class of tradesmen affected by it. I beg under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to submit the following points for the opinion of the High Court:—

1. Whether a failure to take out a permit as and when directed by s. C, sub-ss. 4, 6, and 7 of the bye-laws, made and confirmed under s. 412 of Bengal Act II of 1888, constitutes a complete offence covering the entire half year in respect of which such failure was committed.

2. Whether, after conviction for failure to take out such permit, a person can again be prosecuted or convicted for omitting to take out a permit for and during the same half-year in respect of which he has been convicted."

No one appeared on the reference.

The order of the Court (PIGOT and HILL, JJ.) was as follows:—

ORDER.

The defendant in this case having been convicted on March 22nd, 1892, for not taking out before 1st December 1891 a half-yearly permit in accordance with bye-laws (C) 4, 6, made under the provisions of s. 412 of Bengal Act II of 1888, by the Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta (and which are in force), was charged with continuing his offence by failing for the space of seven days subsequent to the said conviction to take out the permit [607] for the half-year ending 31st March 1892, whilst still carrying on his business as a milkman.

The questions referred by the Magistrate are as follows:—

1. "Whether a failure to take out a permit as and when directed by s. C, sub-s. 4, 6 and 7 of the bye-laws, made and confirmed under s. 412 of Bengal Act II of 1888, constitutes a complete offence covering the entire half-year in respect of which such failure was committed."

2. "Whether, after conviction for failure to take out such permit, a person can again be prosecuted or convicted for omitting to take out a permit for and during the same half-year in respect of which he has been convicted."

The bye-laws (C) 4, 6, under which the taking out the permit is prescribed, are as follows:—

DEC. 12.
CRIMINAL REFER-ENCE.
20 C. 605.

"4. Every person who shall exercise in Calcutta any of the professions, trades or callings prescribed in the following schedule (Rule 7) shall take out a half-yearly permit and pay to the Commissioners such sum as may be due by him according to the rates mentioned in the said schedule for the removal and carrying away of offensive matter or rubbish resulting from such business, trade, profession or calling.

"6. Such permit shall be for a period of six months commencing in April and October in each year, and shall be taken out not later than the 1st of June and the 1st of December in that year."

Section 417 of the Act provides that—

"Whoever infringes any bye-law made and confirmed, or any rule made and sanctioned under this Act, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 20 and to a further fine not exceeding Rs 10 for each day during which the offence is continued after he has been convicted of such offence."

The question is whether this section applies to the present case.

It is to be observed that the bye-laws (C) 4, 6, prescribe the taking out of a permit; they do not prohibit the carrying on of the trade without such permit. Whether such a bye-law could be made under the Act by the Commissioners need not be considered here.

[608] The violation of the bye-laws consists in the not taking out the permit on or before the 1st December 1891 whilst still carrying on his business as a milkman. For this offence of not taking out a permit for the half-year the defendant has been already convicted, and we agree with the Magistrate in thinking, as we gather that he does, that the offence of not taking out a permit on or before December 1st, 1891, which was complete when that day had passed and for which he has been so punished, cannot be continued by his omission to take out a permit.

We do not think that the first question put by the Magistrate need be answered; it is not so expressed as to admit of a satisfactory answer. The second question put disposes of such matter as arises in this case.

We answer the second question in the negative.

We have answered the second question submitted to us upon the assumption made in the reference to us that it was competent for the Municipal Commissioners by the bye-laws made under s. 412 to create the duty or obligation of taking out a permit, and that under s. 417 disobedience to such bye-law would constitute a punishable offence. We regret that counsel did not appear for the defendant, so that we had not the advantage of hearing arguments in the case; we shall therefore limit ourselves to intimating the doubt which seems to us to exist on this point.

Under s. 412 (C) the Commissioners may make bye-laws with regard to—

"(C) the deposit, whether in the public streets or otherwise, of rubbish and offensive matter, the removing and carrying away of the same and charging the person responsible for such deposit with the expenses of removing it."

It may be assumed that under the provision a bye-law making due regulations with respect to the recovery of expenses incurred in removing any rubbish and offensive matter deposited by the defendant in the carrying on of his trade might well be made.

There is a long way, however, between a bye-law such as this and one which creates the obligation of taking out a permit, and paying a sum fixed beforehand, on taking out the permit. The Act does not itself provide for this, and it is, we think, open to [609] serious question whether the not taking out such a permit is within s. 417 at all.

As to s. 419, it is enough to say that we are clearly of opinion that the permit required by these bye-laws is not such a license as is contemplated by that section.

KAMESHAR PRASAD (Plaintiff) v. BHIKHAN NARAIN
SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants).^{*}
BHIKHAN NARAIN SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v.
KAMESHAR PRASAD (Plaintiff).^{*}
[8th March, 1893.]

Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Acts (VI of 1876), ss. 3-7 and (V of 1884)—Deo Estate Act (IX of 1886), s. 1, cl. 4—“Debts and liabilities,” meaning of—Process including summons—Marginal notes to Acts—Interpretation of Acts.

The Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876), as amended by Act V of 1884 (which by Act IX of 1886 is applied to the Deo estate in the district of Gaya, subject to certain modifications), is intended to afford relief to holders of land in Chota Nagpur (and in the Deo estate) in respect of all debts and liabilities to which they were (immediately before the publication of the vesting order) subject, or with which their property was (at the time of the publication of the vesting order) charged, other than debts due or liabilities incurred to Government.

The effect of the second portion of s. 3 is to bar all suits instituted after the vesting order is made and whilst it is in force.

Section 7 of the Act applies mutatis mutandis to create a bar in respect of the debts dealt with in s. 1, cl. 4 of the Deo Estates Act, 1886.

The result of ss. 3 and 7 of Act VI of 1876, when read with regard to the whole scope of the Act, is that suits or proceedings to enforce such debts or liabilities as are contemplated by the Act, that is, other than debts due or liabilities incurred to Government, are, if pending [610] at the time of the vesting order, barred; if instituted after it, in respect of such debts and liabilities, null and void in their inception.

The State publication of the Indian Acts being framed with marginal notes, such notes may be used for the purpose of interpreting an Act.

THESE were two suits, Nos. 25 and 88 of 1889, brought by one Kameshar Prasad to enforce claims arising out of stipulations contained in a bharnanama or deed of usufructuary mortgage, dated the 10th Assin 1288 (29th September 1880), entered into between Kameshar and the Maharajah of Deo and his son, Rajah Bhikhan Narain Singh, under the following circumstances:—

The defendant No. 1, Rajah Bhikhan Narain Singh, and his father, Maharajah Jai Prakash Singh, being indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of three lakhs and thirty-five thousand rupees, the defendant No. 1 and his father executed a bharnanama or usufructuary mortgage on the 29th September 1880 in favour of the plaintiff, under which 83 villages in the district of Gaya were placed in the possession of the plaintiff for a period of 22 years, commencing from 1288 (1881) and terminating in 1309 (1902); and in such bharnanama it was, amongst other things, stipulated that the principal and interest at six per cent. per annum should be discharged from the rents payable by the thikadars or mokurraridars of these villages, and that as at the time of execution of this document 23 of the villages comprised in mouzahs Dugal, Bedhui, Dadhwa, Charkawan, Chuk Belhar, and mouzah Kheroperoza were held in thika under unregistered leases, and it being apprehended that suits brought on such leases would be infructuous, it was further stipulated that the defendant No. 1 and his father would cause registered kabuliats to be executed within four months' time by the holders of the thikas, and that if this should not be done, or if the plaintiff should bring suits against the tenants which should be dismissed owing to such non-registration, then the defendant No. 1 and his father would be liable to make good to the plaintiff any loss sustained with all interest and costs.

On the death of his father the defendant No. 1 became the sole owner of these villages, which were comprised in the Deo estate.

The defendant No. 1 personally, and his estate, being heavily indebted, the Legislature, with the object of providing for his relief, on the 10th March 1886 passed Act IX of 1886, by which the [611] provisions of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876) as amended by Act V of 1884, were applied, with certain modifications, to his case: and on the 11th March 1886 the Commissioner of the Patna Division under cl. 2, s. 2 of the Act, appointed the defendant No. 2 manager of the whole of the immoveable property of which the defendant No. 1 was then possessed.

In contravention of the terms of the bharnanama, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 collected rents from the thikadars of Dugal, Bedhui, and from certain other mouzahs in respect of the years 1290 (1883) to 1293 (1886), and in a suit for enhanced rent brought by the plaintiff against the thikadar of Charkawan Kasha Haji, in respect of the years 1288 and 1289 (1881 and 1882), his claim was disallowed by the Court, to the extent of the thikadar's denial of the claim, on the ground that the lease was unregistered.

The defendant No. 2, however, on the 4th June 1886, on representation being made to him by the plaintiff, made up an account of the amounts due to the plaintiff from the tenants holding under such unregistered lease up to the year 1289 Fasli (1882), and drew up a wasilbaki (which was executed by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2), which after giving credit to the plaintiff for collections on account of mouzah Charkawan up to the year 1293 (1886), and for two loans made by the plaintiff to the defendant No. 1 in 1293, and debiting the plaintiff with rents due to the defendant on account of certain tenures as to which he was a tenant of the Deo estates, showed a total of Rs. 22,570-2-9 as due to the plaintiff. This wasilbaki also bore an endorsement admitting that a further sum of Rs. 1,095-5-9 was due to the plaintiff, being the amount of enhanced rent for Charkawan, as to which the plaintiff had unsuccessfully sued the lessee.

The plaintiff being unable to obtain payment of this amount again applied to the manager for further adjustment and for payment in 1888; and being unsuccessful, he in 1889 applied to the Collector for payment, asking

The Collector on such application passed an order, which, while granting no actual relief to the plaintiff, contained a statement to the effect that no payments in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim could be made (save by enjoyment of his usufructuary mortgage) until the debts due to the Maharajah of Durbhungah were reduced to the amount stated in the Deo Estates Act.

The plaintiff after certain further unsuccessful attempts to obtain payment, brought these two suits in June 1889 against the defendants, praying in suit No. 88 for a decree for the amount due under the wasilbaki with interest, and for the sum of Rs. 1,095-5-9 referred to by endorsement thereon, making in all the sum of Rs. 32,106-3-9, and for declaration that his mortgage might be established for that amount against the mortgaged properties; and in suit No. 25 praying for a decree for Rs. 11,412-11-9, being the amount of rent due to him in respect of three mouzahs (Dugal, Bedhui and Dadhwa) for the years 1294, 1295, and 1296 (1887, 1888 and 1889), after giving credit to the defendants for certain sums due as rent from him to them, and asking for a similar declaration to that prayed for in suit No. 88.

The defence raised on points of law was similar in both suits, viz.:—
(1) That the suit could not be maintained against defendant No. 9 without the notice required under s. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code (at the hearing the claim against defendant No. 2 personally was, however, abandoned). (2) That the suit was barred by the provisions of the Deo Estates Act. (3) That read with the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act of 1886 the wasilbaki was executed subsequently to the publication of the order vesting the management of the defendant No. 1's immoveable properties in defendant No. 2, and being a contract "involving pecuniary liability," could not be enforced under s. 3 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act; and even assuming it to be valid, it was the subject of a claim under investigation of the defendant No. 2 in his capacity as manager, and the Civil Court had no power to make any enquiry into it.

It is unnecessary for the purposes of the report to enter into any of the defences on the merits.

The Subordinate Judge, by consent of parties, heard the two suits together, and held that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court had not been ousted by the Deo Estates Act read with the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act; that the wasilbaki amounted to a contract; but that the last paragraph of s. 3 of the [613] Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act did not contemplate the case of any pecuniary liability arising from the acknowledgment of an existing debt; and that in this case the pecuniary liability was in existence before the acknowledgment, and the acknowledgment did not create any fresh pecuniary liability; that in this view of the case the wasilbaki, so far as it operated as an acknowledgment of an existing debt, did not amount to a contract involving the defendant No. 1 in any pecuniary liability, and therefore that the defendant No. 1 was capable of entering into the transaction; and that there was nothing in either the Deo Estates Act or the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act which barred an enquiry and decision by a Civil Court by reason of the claim having been the subject of an investigation by the manager.

The Subordinate Judge, therefore, in suit No. 88 of 1889 gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 23,665-8-6, with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the wasilbaki, subject to all the rules of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act and the Deo Estates Act of 1886. In suit No. 25 of 1889 he came to the same findings on the points of law, but dismissed the suit with costs on the merits.

The plaintiff in suit No. 25 of 1889, and the defendant in suit No. 88 of 1889, both appealed to the High Court, the appeals being numbered, respectively, 244 and 300 of 1891.

Moulvi Mahomed Yusuf and Baboo Saligram Singh, for Bhikhan Narain Singh.

The arguments (which were on the effect of the sections of the various Acts above referred to) are sufficiently set out in the judgment of the Court (PIGOT and BANERJEE, JJ.) which was delivered by

JUDGMENT.

PIGOT, J.—These appeals are from the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya in each of two cases heard before him. Appeal 300 is brought in suit 88 of 1889, appeal 244 in suit 25 of 1889 in the Sub-Judge's Court.

The suits are brought to enforce claims said to arise in virtue of a stipulation contained in a bharnanama or deed of usufructuary mortgage, dated the 10th Assin 1288 (29th September 1880), [614] between Sir Jai Prakash Singh, K.C.S.I., then Raja of Deo, and his son, defendant No. 1, who is the present Raja, on the one part, and the plaintiff on the other. By that deed 83 mouzahs were given in bharna for nine years, up to Jeth 1296 (May 1889), to the plaintiff to secure the sum of Rs. 3,35,000, with interest at eight annas per centum per mensem.

The mouzahs mortgaged, which are set out in the schedule to the deed, are described in the instrument as held in mokurrari and lease on annual uniform and varied rentals. The deed provides that the mortgagee shall remain in possession of the entire mouzahs from 1288 in continuance of the lease of the old lessees up to the term of the mortgage deed, collect the rents from the lessees and mokurraridars (subject to any zarpeshgis existing), pay the Government revenue and road and public works cesses, and take the balance on account of principal and interest due to him.

A few provisions in the deed must be referred to:—

In paragraph 2, the mortgagee is given power to make new settlements after the expiration of any lease of any of the mouzahs or to retain the mouzahs in his direct possession. In case of any increase of rental by the new lease or by direct possession, whatever increase there may be in the rental of the lease or in the usufruct in case of direct possession, is to be enjoyed as profit by him; all profit and loss on account of increase and decrease of rental and usufruct to be enjoyed and sustained by him exclusively. It is provided that within the term fixed in the deed, the mortgagors shall repay the whole principal after deducting the realizations, that is in Jeth 1296, and possession is then to be relinquished by the mortgagee.

Paragraph 4 specifies the amount of the balance which will be due in Jeth 1296 (after deducting the realizations upon the footing of the yearly values set out in the schedule in the meantime), namely, Rs. 2,48,043-4-7, when the mortgagee is to be entitled to bring a suit if the balance be not repaid.

Paragraph 12 provides that in case of non-payment of the balance of Rs. 2,48,043-4-7 on the expiration of the stipulated time, the mortgagee may realize the principal and interest through lessees or by sir settlement up to 1309 Fasli, that the conditions [615] of the deed shall remain intact until realization of the said money, and that he will in 1309 Fasli give up possession after realizing the whole of the principal money and interest. This provision is based like that just referred to in paragraph 4 of the deed, upon computation of the realizations from the mortgaged property upon the footing that the annual values set out in the schedule to the deed will be recoverable by the mortgagee during the period specified, so that by the year 1309 at the outside the debt will have been paid off.

The 10th paragraph is that which relates to the matters out of which these suits chiefly arise :—

"With regard to ikrarnamas of mouzahs, i.e., twenty-three in number, for the sum of Company's Rs. 12,712-11-6 executed by lessees, being unregistered deeds, which are being made over to the said mahajan, we do declare that within four months we will have either kabuliats or ikrarnamas executed by the living lessees or by the heirs of deceased lessees, and after having them registered we will deliver them to the said mahajan. If we do not deliver deeds duly registered, and on suit being brought under unregistered deeds, the mahajan's claim be dismissed, then owing to the dismissal of claim on the ground of the deed being an unregistered one, whatever amount of claim of the said mahajan be dismissed or reduced, we, the declarants, shall be liable for the principal with interest and costs of the same; and in respect of all such mouzahs as to which the said mahajan's claim will be dismissed on the ground of the deeds being unregistered, we will grant leases in respect of the said mouzahs on the same rental, and make over registered kabuliats to the said mahajan. In the event of non-performance of the above condition, we, declarants, will pay yearly from our own pockets the rents of the mouzahs for which claim will be dismissed; and in case we fail to pay, to said mahajan is and will be competent to recover by institution of suit in Court the rents of the mouzahs claim for which will be dismissed, with costs aforesaid and interest thereon, from the mortgaged and hypothecated properties, and other mortgaged and unmortgaged properties belonging to us, declarants, whereto we, the declarants, will have no objection. When we will give duly registered deeds to the mahajan, then this condition will be annulled and abrogated; and after delivery of the registered kabuliats and ikrarnamas it will be proper and incumbent on the mahajan to recover whatever balance may be due from the lessees, wherewith we, declarants, have and will have no concern whatever."

The mortgagors did not carry out the undertaking contained in the 10th paragraph; they did not cause registered kabuliats to be [616] executed by the holders of the ticca leases. It is with respect to the rents of some of these mouzahs that these suits are brought.

It does not appear on the record in these cases what took place after the execution of the mortgage with respect to the others of the 23 mortgaged mouzahs which are referred to in para. 10 as being held under unregistered deeds, except that it is stated in the 4th paragraph of the plaint in suit 25 (Appeal No. 244) that the conditions in para. 10 of the deed were not complied with, which would seem to apply to all of the 23 mouzahs.

Of the suits, the first, 88 of 1891 (Appeal No. 300), relates to the realizations from the years 1290 to 1293 from five mouzahs, namely, mouzahs Dugal, Bedhui, Dadhwa, Charkawan Kasba Haji and Chuk Belhar or Bahura, and mouzah, Kheraperoza; the second, 25 of 1889 (Appeal No. 244), relates to realizations (at a later period) from three of those mouzahs.

namely, Dugal, Bedhui and Dadwa, for 1294, 1295 and 1296. Of none of these mouzahs did the plaintiff obtain possession after the execution of the deed in full accordance with its provisions. Whether or not the mortgagors continued to collect the rents from them from the date of the mortgage in 1288 was not in issue in these suits. As to Charkawan Kasba Haji, it appears that the plaintiff did bring a suit against the thikadar of that mouzah for the rents for the years 1288 and 1289; and that his claim was disallowed to the extent to which the thikadar disputed it, that is to say, in respect of an enhanced rent stated in the schedule to the deed, but found not to be recoverable in that suit by reason of the ikrarnama under which it was claimed not having been registered.

As to Dugal, Bedhui, Dadwa and Chuk Belhar, we think it must be taken as clear, from the evidence of defendant No. 2, and of Mukbui Ali, and from the wasilbaki to be presently mentioned, that the collections from these mouzahs, whether from the thikadars or from the katkinadars, were made, at first by the defendant No. 1, or the defendant No. 2 as his agent, and afterwards by defendant No. 2 as manager under the Deo Estates Act.

The Deo Estates Act received the assent of the Governor-General on the 10th March 1886, and on the 11th, as we have said, defendant No. 2 was appointed manager under it. He had been previously, from about January 1885, in the management of the [617] estate, according to his evidence; it appears that his services were transferred, as from that date, from the Education Department to the Board of Revenue, for employment as such manager.

In June 1886 accounts were made up between the defendant No. 2 and the plaintiff, who was represented on the occasion by two of the witnesses in the case, Mukbul Ali and Fakir Chand, who are in his employment as tahsildars of villages held by him under the mortgage or bharnanama. A wasilbaki was then made up on both sides, showing a balance in favour of the plaintiff of Rs. 22,570-2-8. This was signed by the Raja, defendant No. 1. This wasilbaki purported to be made between the plaintiff and the Rajah, but was also signed by defendant No. 2. It gave plaintiff credit for collections from 1290 to 1293 from Dugal, Bedhui, and Dadhwa, for the enhanced rent of Charkawan from 1288 to 1293, for collections from Kheraperoza from 1292 to 1293, from Chuk Belhar from 1292 only, and a small item of surplus of 1290: for a loan of the Rajah in 1291 (the Deo Act was passed in 1292) amounting, with interest up to 1293, to Rs. 4,249-10-0, and another made in 1293, amounting with interest to Rs. 1,032-9-0. On the other side of the account the plaintiff was debited with sums due by him on account of rent to the Rajah. The balance was Rs. 23,665-8-6. From this was deducted Rs. 1,095-5-9, being the amount of enhanced rent in respect of Charkawan which the plaintiff had failed to recover in the suit already mentioned. It would appear from the note on the document to have been deducted as having accrued due from the Rajah alone. We shall refer to this afterwards. Making this deduction, the amount found due was Rs. 22,570-2-9.

In 1898 applications appear to have been made to defendant No. 2 (whom we shall call by his name, Bhoobun Lal) on behalf of plaintiff for payment of the amount due. There appears on the record an exhibit, No. 3, entitled a "proceeding" of the manager's office, signed by Bhoobun Lal, in which, styling himself a "Court," the manager passes an order "that the kothi" (meaning the plaintiff) "do appoint a person to adjust accounts." This is done apparently upon an application for adjustment of accounts and for possession of the mouzahs of which plaintiff was entitled to possession under his deed, the right to which possession is admitted in the "proceeding."

[618] Then followed a letter from plaintiff's agent to Bhoobun Lal dated November 22nd, 1888 (Ex. 12), complaining of non-payment of the amount due, and also that possession had not yet been given, while the rent of Dugal and Bedhui is being realised by the tehsildar of the manager: stating that the plaintiff's claim in respect of such collection continues as before; offering to pay any rent coming due on lease from him, or else that the manager should deduct any such rent due from the realization of the aforesaid mouzahs, paying the residue to the plaintiffs; and asking that an account of the amount then due to plaintiff be taken.

Nothing having been done in compliance with this letter, the plaintiff presented a petition to the Collector of Gaya, dated January 20th, 1889, stating his grievances, and asking (1) for payment of the amount found due to him by the wasilbaki of June 1886; (2) asking for an adjustment of the accounts as to the collections of the villages of which possession had hitherto been withheld from him, for the years 1294, 1295, and part of 1296; and (3) that possession of them be made over to him, and his servants allowed to collect the rents. The villages mentioned in this petition are Dugal, Bedhui, Kudoba Khurd, and Bahuara.

Upon this an order was passed by the Collector on March 23rd, 1889.

ORDER.

"I have this day seen Baboo Harihar Nath first, the pleader for the petitioner.

"I have explained to him —

(1) That no debt can be paid off, except by enjoyment of the usufructuary mortgage, till the debt due to the Maharajah of Durbhungah has been reduced to the amount stated by the Act. This is admitted in principle.

(2) He claims the rents collected from us for two villages (Dugal and Bedhui), which fall within the usufructuary mortgage. I explain that I do not, as at present advised, dispute his claim to this money, provided he admits the money due by him to the estate on account of certain thika rights which he has purchased. I have no objection to his drawing up a wasilbaki on these grounds, provided that if the balance turns out to be due from him, he will pay it promptly. More I cannot say. Regarding the two other villages mentioned in the petition, we are not in possession of them and do not claim possession of them. The [619] petitioner can collect the rents himself without interference from us.

(Sd.) GEORGE A. GRIERSON,
Offg. Collector."

23-3-89.

The plaintiff then, on April 2nd, 1889, petitioned the Collector, stating that Bhoobun Lal was then at Gaya: that his report as to the wasilbaki had already been received by the Collector: and asking that his petition of January 20th, 1889, should be referred to Baboo Raj Kishor Narain, Deputy Collector of the Deo Raj Estate, and an adjustment be taken in the presence of plaintiff's pleader and of Baboo Bhoobun Lal, and that whatever amount might be found due to the plaintiff should be awarded to him.

Upon this petition an order was made on the 24th April 1889:—
“Inform the petitioner that I cannot spare Baboo Raj Kishor Narain Singh for the purpose.”

The plaintiff then in the following June brought these suits.

In suit 88 of 1889 the plaintiff claims the Rs. 23,665-8-6 found due by the wasilbaki of June 1886, including, therefore, the Rs. 1,095-0-9 (in the plaint as printed, 1,095-5-0), on the ground that his right to this sum had been admitted. He also claims interest, making in all Rs. 32,106-3-9. He asks for a decree for the money; and also that his mortgage right be established for this sum against the properties mentioned, that is, all the mortgaged property, and for other relief.

In suit 25 of 1889 the plaintiff sues for Rs. 11,412-11-9, being the amount of rents claimed by him in respect of the mouzahs Dugal, Bedhui, and Dadhwa for the years 1294, 1295, and 1296, after giving credit for the rents due by him in respect of leases held by him of land appertaining to the Deo Estate.

In suit 88 of 1889 the lower Court made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the capital sum claimed, that is, Rs. 23,665-8-6, with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the wasilbaki; that is, June 4th, 1886, subject to all rules of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act and the Deo Act. It dismissed the suit 25 of 1889.

The defendants appeal in the one case, and the plaintiff in the other.

[620] In the argument before us the effect of the Deo Estate Act formed the principal subject of debate, but connected with this the nature of the plaintiff's claim in each suit was minutely discussed.

If the cases were to be considered apart from the effect of that Act, the second defendant being treated as manager and agent of the first defendant, the Rajah, there would be little doubt, we think, that plaintiff would be entitled to succeed, subject to any set-off established in suit 25 of 1889.

It was contended by the defendants in the case that the provision in paragraph 10 of the deed could only create a liability on the part of the mortgagors in case a suit or suits brought by the mortgagee to recover rents of mouzahs at the rates specified in the schedule, should be dismissed on the ground of want of registration of the instrument or instruments under which rent might be claimed. The only case in which a suit was brought, and was in part unsuccessful, on this ground, was that of Charkawan in respect of the enhanced rent specified in the schedule in respect of that mouzah.

But the case made by the plaintiff is not one such as is contemplated by this provision of the deed, save as to Charkawan, to which that provision exactly applies. As to the rest, plaintiff's claim is not based merely on his failure to recover rents by reason of the neglect or omission of the mortgagors to cause registered deeds to be executed. It is not necessary to determine what the exact nature of the mortgagee's remedies under paragraph 10 of the deed might have been in respect of such mere neglect or omission, but we may say that it would not seem very reasonable that the mortgagee should, in every case, be compelled to bring a suit certain to be defeated as a condition precedent to any remedy, with the consequence that, as a matter of course, in each case the mortgagor must pay the cost of such hopeless and merely formal suit. That question does not, however, arise in the state of circumstances now under consideration. There was not a mere neglect to carry out the terms of paragraph 10, but an actual collection of rents and profits in direct infraction of the essential provisions of the deed by which such collections became as between the owner of the estate and the plaintiff, the property of the [621] latter. The evidence shows by the admissions of the Rajah defendant, that the collections were made by him or on his behalf, which are entered in the wasilbaki. Thus, not only was the engagement in paragraph 10 of the deed not observed by his father or, after his father's death, by himself, but advantage was taken of this for the collection of those rents and profits which had been given to the mortgagee under the deed. It seems to us immaterial whether the collections so made were taken from thikadars or from katkinadars. The Raja had no right whatever to make any collections of rents and profits of mouzahs assigned under the deed. He was, and continued to be, bound, so far as he could do so, to put the plaintiff in possession of these rents and profits. So far from doing this, he took them himself. He took from the persons who held the mouzahs, whether thikadars or katkinadars, (plaintiff being entitled to sir possession if there were no thikadars), money claimed by him and received by him as rent. Whether his receipts could or could not be a good discharge to those tenants as between them and the plaintiffs, the Rajah could not be heard to say that, as he had no right to receive the rents, he cannot be treated as having, when these payments were made to him, received them as rents at all. He took them as such, and the plaintiff would be entitled to treat them, in the Rajah's hands, as rents for which the Raja was bound to account to him, and which he was bound to pay over to him,—at any rate on demand made. As to whatever was received by the Rajah before the Deo Estate Act came into operation, these observations apply to the present case, as to the Rajah's liability apart from the protection given him by that Act. They would equally, we think, apply to the subsequent period, had Bhoobun Lal made collections as the Rajah's agent of the sums claimed in suit 25 of 1889, and not, as he did, in the capacity of manager under the Act. The Rajah would, in that case, have been liable for them under the ordinary law; and the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree in suit 25 of 1889, save so far as a set-off was admitted or was proved by the defendant.

In the point of view to which we have just adverted, the wasilbaki in suit 88 of 1889 would be, of course, both evidence of the receipt of money for which the Rajah would be bound to account, [622] and also an agreement to pay the balance therein found due upon settlement of account.

We have now to consider the effect of the Deo Estate Act, 1886, upon the rights of the parties to these suits in respect of the subject-matter of each suit.

This Act is entitled "an Act to apply the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876, to the Deo Estate in the Gaya District;" and by s. 2 it is enacted that the provisions of that Act as amended by Act V of 1884 may be applied in the case of Rajah Bhikhan Narain Singh Bahadur (described in the preamble as of Deo in the District of Gaya), subject to certain modifications provided in the Act.

The Chota Nagpur Act is passed, as stated in the preamble, to provide for the relief of holders of lands in Chota Nagpur, who may be in debt and whose immoveable property may be subject to mortgages, charges, and liens. It provides a machinery for the management and administration of the estates of persons such as are described in the preamble, and to whom the provisions of the Act are, with the consent of the Lieutenant-Governor, applied, for the investigation and ascertainment of their debts.

and liabilities, and for the discharge of them in the manner provided by the Act. For these purposes a manager is appointed by the Commissioner, in whom by the terms of his appointment may be vested the management of the whole or any portion of the immoveable property of or to which the said holder is then possessed or entitled in his own right, or which he is entitled to redeem, or which may be acquired by, or devolve on him or his heir during the continuance of such management. The manager during his management of the immoveable property is to receive and recover all rents and profits in respect thereof, to pay certain necessary outgoings, and an annual sum for the maintenance of the holder, his heirs and their families, and apply the residue in settlement of such debts and liabilities of the holder and his heir as may be established under the Act. Part IV provides for the ascertainment of the debts and liabilities by the manager, who is, when they are finally determined, to prepare a schedule of them, and a scheme for the settlement thereof, which, when approved by the Commissioner, is to be carried into effect. The manager under the Act [623] has the fullest powers to receive and recover rents and profits, to enquire into and settle the debts and liabilities, to cancel existing leases, to remove a mortgagee or conditional vendee in possession, to grant leases, to mortgage with the consent of the Commissioner, and to sell—but this last only with the consent of the holder and his next heirs. When the debts and liabilities are discharged, or when the Commissioner, in exercise of powers given him by the Act, thinks that the provisions of the Act should not continue to apply, the holder or his heir shall be restored to the possession and enjoyment of the property subject to leases, mortgages, or sales made by the manager during his term of management.

The Act therefore creates a sort of administration of the immoveable estate of a debtor, in some respects resembling that pursued in an administration suit, but with some material differences. It primarily aims at the preservation of the estate, which cannot be sold without the consent of the holder and his heir. The Act obviously aims at the complete protection of the estate from litigation, by barring the remedies creditors would otherwise have in the Civil Courts. To what extent and whether in respect of all, or only of some proceedings and claims, the provisions of the Act do operate as a bar, is one of the questions to be determined in these appeals.

The Act is so framed as to render it not easy to construe.

The first question is, what are the debts and liabilities, the existence of which is made an occasion for conferring the special privileges created by the Act for the benefit of holders of land in Chota Nagpur? Are they limited to debts and liabilities actually charged upon the lands of the holders, or do they include any debts whether secured by charge on immoveable property or not? The scheme of administration set up by the Act relates to immoveable property alone, and is directed towards the preservation of it from the creditors of the holder. But does the Act intend to give relief to holders of land who may be subject to debts not charged on land, in respect of such debts?

The preamble refers to the persons whose relief is contemplated as “holders, &c.,” who may be in debt and whose immoveable property may be subject to mortgages, charges, and liens. That would prima facie seem to restrict the class to be relieved to [624] holders whose immoveable property was subject to mortgage, and by implication, to limit the relief to be afforded to them, to matters arising in respect of debts of that nature.

But in s. 2 the preliminary condition to the grant of the vesting order is thus described :—

“ Whenever any holder of immoveable property ” (then passing over the next four, only alternative clauses) “ applies in writing to the Commissioner, stating that the holder of the said property is subject to, or that his said property is charged with debts or liabilities other than debts due or liabilities incurred to Government, and requesting that the provisions of the Act be applied to his case.”

And in Act V of 1884, amending the Chota Nagpur Act, the following cl. (a) is added to s. 2 :—“ Every application under this section must state the particulars of the debts and liabilities as aforesaid to which the said holder is subject or with which his immoveable property is charged.” Further, s. 3 protects the moveable property of the holders for whose relief the Act is framed from attachment or sale under process of any Civil Court in British India in respect of such debts and liabilities other than as aforesaid.

Of course it is possible, strictly speaking, that the provision is only intended to prevent mortgagees who might obtain money-decrees on mortgage debts from enforcing such decrees against moveable property of the “ holder ” to be relieved under the Act. But this would be to impute an intention not accounted for elsewhere in the Act, and not explained by its professed purpose which chiefly, at least, is the protection of immoveable property—a purpose not helped by visiting mortgagees with a special disability in so far as their claims are mere money-debts ; and besides, this view seems somewhat inconsistent with the express reference to process of any Civil Court in British India, which Courts could not ordinarily make decrees on mortgages of land in Chota Nagpur so that money-decrees of such Courts would be aimed at.

Upon the whole, therefore, it seems clear to us, that the Act is not intended to afford relief to holders of land in Chota Nagpur only in respect of debts secured by mortgages, charges, and liens upon immoveable property. We think the relief, if Government [625] should see fit to grant it, was intended to apply to debts and liabilities to which the holder was subject or with which his property was charged. We think the phrase “ such debts and liabilities ” which occurs several times in the Act, and which was dwelt on in argument, means debts and liabilities other than debts due, or liabilities incurred, to Government, and includes every other debt or liability.

It is no doubt singular that a law providing a special mode of administering the estates of a particular class of debtors, and suspending the operation of the ordinary law for that purpose, should exempt the moveable property of the debtors as well as the debtors themselves from liability to process, and yet omit to place the moveable property in the hands of the person who is charged with the administration of the estate and the settlement of creditors' claims. But this law itself is anomalous. It is a law of privilege designed for the protection of the “ holders of land in Chota Nagpur ” enacted perhaps for reasons of State, applying to that non-regulation district, the state of society in which differs a good deal from that in Bengal.

We now have to consider the effect of the vesting order upon the rights of third persons, that is, of persons other than Government or the “ holder.” Section 3 is as follows :—

“ 3. On such publication the following consequences shall ensue :—

"First.—All proceedings which may then be pending in any Civil Court in British India in respect to such debts or liabilities, shall be barred, and all processes, executions and attachments for or in respect of such debts and liabilities shall become null and void.

"Secondly.—So long as such management continues, the holder of the said property and his heir shall not be liable to arrest for or in respect of the debts and liabilities to which the said holder was immediately before the said publication subject, or with which the property so vested as aforesaid or any part thereof was at the time of the said application charged, other than debts due or liabilities incurred to Government.

"Nor shall their moveable property be liable to attachment or sale, under process of any Civil Court in British India, or in respect of such debts and liabilities other than as aforesaid; and [626] "Thirdly.—So long as such management continues—

"(a) The holder of the said immoveable property and his heir shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate their immoveable property, or any part thereof, or to grant valid receipts for the rents and profits arising or accruing therefrom.

"(b) Such property shall be exempt from attachment or sale under such process as aforesaid, except for or in respect of debts due or liabilities incurred to Government, and

"(c) The holder of the same property and his heir shall be incapable of entering into any contract which may involve them or either of them in pecuniary liability."

Section 7 is as follows:—

"7. Every debt or liability other than debts due or liabilities incurred to Government or (in the case of under-tenures) the rent due to the superior landlord, to which the holder of the property is subject, or with which the property is charged, and which is not duly notified to the manager within the time and in manner hereinbefore mentioned, shall be barred:

"Provided that when proof is made to the manager that the claimant was unable to comply with the provisions of ss. 5 and 6, the manager may admit his claim within the further period of nine months from the expiration of the said period of three months."

The first clause of s. 3 is no doubt obscurely worded. Does it mean, as argued, that only proceedings pending when the vesting order is published, shall be barred? Or does it go further and bar all suits instituted after the vesting order is made, and while it is in force?

If the first meaning be that which is to be attributed to it, then the latter half of the clause is mere surplusage, for it cannot possibly, so far as pending proceedings go, add to the force of the first half, which declares all such proceedings barred. If the process, executions, and attachments referred to in the second half be processes, &c., in pending proceedings, and this no doubt would be the appropriate meaning of the second and third of such words, they would necessarily be null and void, if had in proceedings themselves expressly barred.

[627] Now "process" includes writs of summons, and without a writ of summons, or in our phraseology here, a summons, a suit cannot be validly instituted at all. Therefore, when the Legislature declares that in respect of particular matters all processes shall be null and void, it absolutely bars all suits respecting them. If processes had stood alone in the second half of this clause, there could be little doubt; the addition of the words "execution and attachments" is no doubt embarrassing, because obviously in themselves they can have no possible force at all: they are mere repetition unless their effect be, indirectly, to qualify the word "process." But we do not think that they can be used to cut down the meaning of the word "processes" which precedes them so as to limit it to processes ejusdem generis, that is, processes in execution; if we gave them that effect, the result would be to render the whole of the second half of the clause wholly futile, being all of it mere repetition. We think we must give the word "processes" its full meaning, and must hold that it includes summons, and in doing so, bars all suits to which the clause applies.

No doubt it may be said that one reason we have assigned for attributing to the second part of the clause of s. 3 the effect which we hold that it has, namely, that otherwise it would be mere surplusage, applies with equal force to the provisions secondly contained in s. 3, as to freedom from arrest, and freedom of moveable property from attachments; since arrest or attachment of moveable property could only take place under "proceedings" of which process of arrest or of attachment would be part, or under processes, &c., made void already. All that can be said as to this is, that these provisions do seem superfluous, except so far as they may apply to process actually complete and in course of execution at the time of the vesting order.

There is a suggestion, as to the scope of the second half of the first clause, which we think could not be adopted; namely, that processes, &c., therein referred to relate to proceedings pending in respect of such debts and liabilities, in the first part of the clause. This would be to give a special meaning to "such debts and liabilities" when it occurs in the second half, and make that description mean such debts and liabilities in respect of which proceedings are pending at the time of the publication of the vesting [628] order. We think we cannot attribute to these words in this place that special meaning. We think they mean here, as they do elsewhere, debts and liabilities other than debts due or liabilities incurred to Government.

The view of the section taken by us seems perhaps to some extent confirmed by (1) the marginal note of the clause, viz, "Bar of suits." We are disposed to think we may look at the marginal note for assistance, for with reference to Indian Acts, we should probably rather apply the dictum of Jessel, M. R., In re Venours Settled Estates (1), than his correction of it, in Sutton v. Sutton (2). Indian Acts, we believe, are always framed with the marginal notes which appear in the State publications of them.

Further, s. 7 expressly declares that every debt or liability other than debts due, &c., to Government or rent due to the superior landlord, which is not duly notified to the manager, shall be barred. It is true that this section is in Part IV relating to the settlements of debts by the manager, and it might be argued that the bar only relates to the proceedings before him. Still this is not expressly said, while the bar of such debts or liabilities is express. We think it must be read in connection with s. 3, and indeed in the light of the whole scope of the Act. The only remedy enjoyed by creditors is by claim before the manager and by payment, if he does pay, under the powers given to him.

Section 12 provides, amongst other things, that if within six months after the publication of the order the Commissioner thinks the provisions of the Act should not continue to apply, the holder or his heir shall be restored to possession and enjoyment of the property, such restoration shall be notified in the Calcutta Gazette, and thereupon the proceedings, processes, executions, and attachments mentioned in s. 3 (so far as they relate to debts and liabilities, which the manager has not paid off or compromised) and the debts and liabilities barred by s. 7, shall be revived.

No doubt part of these provisions is a little mysterious: how it can be, for instance, that processes, &c., themselves declared null and void can be "revived" is rather beyond our comprehension: but this provision seems to be the only one which exists [629] in the Act for allowing creditors a resort to the Civil Courts, once the vesting order has been made.

Section 7 of the principal Act is one of those sections which deal with the investigation and settlements of debts by the manager; by cl. (4), s. 1 of the Deo Act, the debts in the schedule of the Act, in which the plaintiff's debt is included, are, save so far as any error may be proved (and there is none in this case), to be deemed justly due, and s. 7 of the Chota Nagpur Act applies, we think, mutatis mutandis, to create a bar in respect of the debts dealt with in s. 1, cl. (4) of the Deo Act.

The result of an examination of s. 3, and of s. 7 read with regard to the whole scope of the Act is, that suits or proceedings to enforce such debts or liabilities as are contemplated by the Act, that is, other than debts due or liabilities incurred to Government are, if pending at the time of the vesting order, barred: if instituted after it, in respect of such debts and liabilities, null and void in their inception.

So far as in suit 88 of 1889 the amount claimed is in respect of rents improperly taken from the tenants before the Deo Estate Act was in operation, that amount was a debt or liability within the meaning of s. 3, Part the first, and no suit will lie for it. The only remedy is under the Act before the manager. So far as it is in respect of a loan made to the Rajah and due at the time of the vesting order, it is within s. 3, Part the first, and no suit will lie, the remedy is before the manager. So far as it is in respect of a loan made to the Rajah after the vesting order, the Rajah was by s. 3, Part the third (C), incapable of entering into a contract of loan, and no suit will lie: there is no remedy at all.

So far as the claim made in suit 88 of 1889 relates to money received by the manager in violation of the plaintiff's rights under the deed, such receipt, being of the rents of property of which the Rajah was in possession at the time of the vesting order, would be, prima facie at any rate, in strict accordance with the manager's duties, and the second defendant Bhoobun Lal would not be liable in any case. If the moneys were received by him [630] wrongfully, as, for instance, (it was suggested) as a trespasser upon plaintiff's possession, he might no doubt be liable. Such a contention might involve questions of difficulty as to the defence under s. 22 of the Chota Nagpur Act applicable here.

But all claim against the defendant Bhoobun Lal personally was abandoned in the Court below, as appears from the judgment where reference is made to the defence under s. 424, Civil Procedure Code.

These observations as to any liability arising from the receipt of moneys by the defendant Bhoobun Lal, apply equally to suit 25 of 1859. It was argued that Bhoobun Lal's acts might constitute ground for a decree against the Rajah, that is the estate, for the money received by him. We do not see how from any point of view such a liability could be made out. The Rajah has ceased to have any control over the property, which is, with its income, absolutely in the hands of the manager. If the manager takes possession of property or of income not properly part of the estate, there may be a remedy against him personally, if he is not protected under s. 22. But he cannot be said in doing this to have acted on behalf of the Rajah, even were it the case that he had the power to bind the Rajah by any act, as representing him: and there is nothing in the Act to countenance such a contention.

Having regard to s. 2, cl. (7) of the Deo Act—whether a suit to compel the defendant No. 2 to put plaintiff in possession of such of the mouzahs mortgaged to him as that defendant had possession of, in such a manner as to allow him the full benefit of the deed to which he is entitled, would lie, we need not here consider. These are not such suits.

We think both suits ought to have been dismissed for the reason here assigned. We need not therefore discuss the character of the decree in suit 88 of 1889, as being made subject to the Deo Estate Act, which we presume means that the decree cannot be executed by reason of the provisions of that Act.

The case is one of very great hardship, no doubt. The plaintiff's right, we think, is clear. As to parts it has been established [631] by the adjustment of accounts of June 4th, 1886, which was of course simply a proceeding in the course of administration by the manager, Bhoobun Lal, defendant No. 2. That claim being fully established, the plaintiff expected naturally enough to be paid: and failing to obtain either from the manager or the Collector payment of his admitted debt, he applies to the Civil Courts for redress. The Courts can give him no redress. Their jurisdiction is ousted by the provisions of the Act; they have no power to compel the officers appointed under the Act to pay the plaintiff his claim, supposing it to be in the power of those officers to do so, a matter on which we have no means of forming a judgment.

We allow the appeal in 300 of 1891 (88 of 1889) and dismiss the suit. We dismiss the appeal in 244 of 1891 (25 of 1889).

As to costs, we have said that this appears to us to be a case of very great hardship. Our attention has been drawn to the recital in the preamble of the Act—a most unusual recital. It is: "whereas the persons to whom the debts are due and the liabilities have been incurred have assented to the application of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876, to the case, on the condition that their title to receive the principal and interest due to them be in no way impaired thereby." Now, whatever may have been the meaning of the draftsman or composer of this enactment, it is not unreasonable to suppose that, assuming that recital to be strictly accurate in every respect, the creditors mentioned in the schedule gave their assent on the supposition that something more than a mere recognition of their rights without any means of enforcing them being allowed them was intended by the Act. They might not unnaturally suppose that when the Imperial Legislature stepped in with a law of privilege in favour of this nobleman, and created a machinery under which their claims were to be dealt with, and in doing so solemnly recited the preservation of their title to receive the principal and interest due to them, the measure passed by the Legislature with that recital did confer upon them the right to have recourse to the Courts of Justice, when the officers appointed under the Act treated them as the plaintiff has been treated in this case; and there is a further consideration as to this, and that is, that both the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act and the Deo Estate Act are themselves [632] so framed that not merely a respectable banker such as the plaintiff, but even a lawyer, might well find a difficulty in assigning to many of the provisions of either enactment any certain meaning. In considering, therefore, what course we should take with regard to costs in this matter, we should consider, first, the extreme hardship of the case; secondly, this passage in the preamble which apparently promises a security which the body of the Act takes away; and thirdly, the obscurity of the Act itself which does, if our construction is right, take away their right, but as we say, in highly obscure language. We have to consider under these circumstances whether we ought to visit the plaintiff with any costs at all, and we think that having regard to the circumstances of the case, and the difficulties surrounding the interpretation of the Act under which his legal rights have been superseded, it would not be just if we were to compel him to pay any part of the costs which the defendants have incurred in these proceedings either in this appeal or in the Courts below. Unfortunately, as the jurisdiction of the Courts is ousted, we cannot approach the question of awarding his costs out of the estate. We will not say what we would do if we had the power to deal with them. We have the power to abstain from ordering him to pay the costs of the other side, and we do so. We allow the appeal in 300 of 1891 (suit 88 of 1889), we dismiss the appeal in 244 of 1891 (suit No. 25 of 1889), and we order that the parties respectively do bear their own costs both in the Court below and in this Court.

[633] CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali.

BAIJANATH PANDEY (Petitioner) v. GAURI KANTA MANDAL
(Opposite Party).^{*} [3rd February, 1893.]

Sessions Judge, power of, in Revision—Further inquiry, power of Sessions Judge to direct—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 423, 435, 436 and 439.

A complaint was made before a Magistrate, which involved a charge of dacoity against the accused person and others. The Magistrate in dealing with the case proceeded under s. 209 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and finding no case of dacoity prima facie established, proceeded to frame charges under s. 254 of the Code charging the accused with offences under ss. 380 and 448 of the Penal Code, viz., theft in a building and criminal trespass. Having heard the whole of the evidence, he then acquitted the accused under s. 258 of the Code, and gave him sanction under s. 195 to prosecute the complainant under s. 211 of the Penal Code. The complainant then applied to the Sessions Judge to revoke that sanction. The Sessions Judge proceeded to consider the whole case, and finding that a proper inquiry had not been made and all evidence available not taken and that had this been otherwise, a sessions case might have been established, directed the Magistrate to hold a further inquiry, and to proceed in accordance with the result of such inquiry, either to commit the accused to the sessions, or grant the sanction, as the case might be.

Held, that the Sessions Judge had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law. Acting as a Revision Court he could send for the record for any purpose mentioned in s. 436, but he was not competent under s. 436 to direct a fresh inquiry, inasmuch as the accused had not been improperly discharged of an offence triable exclusively by a Court of Sessions, but had been acquitted of an offence within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The Sessions Judge had, in fact, exercised the jurisdiction vested in him as an appellate Court under s. 423, as if an appeal had been presented to him from an order of acquittal; such powers in revision cases are only conferred on the High Court.

[634] The circumstances which gave rise to this application to the High Court were as follows:—

The complainant was one Gauri Kanta Mandal or chief tenant of Gauri Kanta tola, the property of Chutterput Singh a zemindar, who it appeared was on bad terms with a neighbouring zemindar, named Hari Mohan Missir, and the accused (petitioner before the High Court), Baijanath Pandey, was a barkandaz of the latter.

Gauri Kanta tola, the scene of the occurrence which gave rise to the case, was bounded by either properties also belonging to Chutterput Singh, or those of Hari Mohan Missir. Some time before the occurrence in question, some of the ryots of Hari Mohan Missir left his tola and went and settled in Gauri Kanta tola. On the 8th August 1892, Gauri Kanta Mandal presented a petition to the Magistrate complaining that some of Hari Mohan Missir's people had asked him to leave the estate of Chutterput Singh and settle himself on their master's estate, but that he had declined, and that on the morning of the 4th August, one Rubi Singh, a constable, and another constable, had come to his house and informed him that he was wanted by the Sub-Inspector in connection with an assault on another constable, into which case the Sub-Inspector was making an inquiry at a place not very far from his house; that he promised to go to the Sub-Inspector but did not go: that on the same afternoon at about 3 P.M., Baijanath Pandey and two other barkandazes of Hari Mohan Missir, along with some 12 or 13 coolies, came variously armed, entered his house and plundered it; that the Sub-Inspector, named Fakir, who was near to his house at the time, took no notice of the outrage, and that, when he complained to him, he would not listen to his complaint. On their allegation, Gauri Kanta Mandal charged Baijanath Pandey and the other men whom he could not name, with having committed dacoity, and the Sub-Inspector with having committed an offence under s. 217 of the Penal Code, and asked the District Magistrate himself to hold an inquiry or to depute some other officer to do so. Their complaint was made over to a Deputy Magistrate, Baboo Khagendro Nath Mitter, who recorded the statement of Gauri Kanta Mandal on the back of it, but did not apparently ask him any questions [635] relating to the refusal of the Sub-Inspector to listen to his complaint. On the statements being taken down, the Inspector of Police was directed to investigate the matter. It also appeared that eight other ryots living in Gauri Kanta tola presented similar complaints, and they stated that all the houses of the ryots had been plundered. There were some thirty families living in that tola, and, on the Inspector going to make his investigation, the remaining 21 ryots also made similar complaints to him.

The Inspector after holding his inquiry, reported that the facts had been so much exaggerated that it was impossible to ascertain what had actually taken place, and he reported the case as false.

On this report being submitted to the District Magistrate, an order was passed on the 6th September stating "that the view expressed by the Inspector that only some dhan claimed by one side had been cut in the field by the men of the other side with the assistance of the zamindar's nagdis is probable, but the charge of plundering houses is apparently a false one," and the complainants were called upon to show cause on the 14th September why they should not be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code.

On the 16th September the Magistrate recorded the following order:—
"Among the complainants Gauri Kanta Mandal is the headman. I select his case for a judicial inquiry. Summon Baijanath Pandey, s. 380 and 147, Penal Code. Summon the witnesses named by Gauri Kanta. The case is made over to Baboo Khagendro Nath Mitter for early trial."

The case was then taken up by Baboo Khagendro Nath Mitter, who, after recording certain evidence, considered he was justified in framing charges under ss. 380 and 448. He then proceeded to hear the evidence for the defence and acquitted the accused under s. 258 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and directed that the complainant (Gauri Kanta Mandal) should be prosecuted under s. 211.

Gauri Kanta Mandal then applied to the Sessions Judge to send for the record and revoke the sanction, on the ground that it was bad in law and not justified by the facts of the case.

"Now it does not appear that the complaint made against the Sub-Inspector, of his having refused to hear the complainant when he went to complain to him soon after the occurrence, has been inquired into at all. The Sub-Inspector, who was within half a mile of the scene of occurrence at the time, has not been examined; the Inspector who held the inquiry has not been examined. The complaint that was made was of a very serious nature. It was stated that the whole village was plundered, and when complaint was made to the Sub-Inspector, he refused to take cognizance of the offence. The complainant broadly charged the Sub-Inspector with an offence under s. 217. That the Sub-Inspector was engaged at the time inquiring into the case of the assault on a constable said to have been committed on the 2nd August by the servants of Chutterput Singh is certain. That the said constable was attacked and severely beaten is also certain. He had nine marks of injuries on different parts of his body, one of which was severe, and the others slight. That case came on for trial before the Deputy Magistrate, Baboo Sitakanta Ghose, who on a careful consideration of the evidence came to the following conclusion: "I cannot hold that the complainant was beaten by the accused persons. I am rather inclined to believe that he was most probably beaten while assisting the men of Hari Mohan and Gopimohan Baboos in looting paddy of the ryots of Katabu Deara, as alleged by the accused."

Thus we have the following facts:—(1) A constable was severely assaulted by Chutterput's men on the 2nd August at a place near to Gauri Kanta tola, when he assisted Hari Mohan's men in looting the dhan belonging to the ryots of Chutterput. (2) That some of the ryots of Hari Mohan had left his estate and settled in Gauri Kanta tola, the property of Chutterput, and that Chutterput and Hari Mohan were at open war with one another. (3) That the Sub-Inspector, Fakir Chand, was engaged at a place not very far from Gauri Kanta tola to inquire into the said assault case. (4) That when he was so engaged the whole village is said to have been plundered by Hari Mohan's men. (5) It is certain that if the house of a single ryot was plundered in the way it is said to have been done, it was dacoity. (6) The evidence is that when the Sub-Inspector did not hear the complainants they went to the Naib of Chutterput, the next day, and he brought them to Malda on the day following, Sunday intervened, and the petitions of complaint were filed before the Magistrate on the 8th August. The Magistrate made the order for the inquiry on the 8th August, and we find that the Inspector did not go to the scene of occurrence before the 14th August. In a case like this no time should have been lost in holding a strict inquiry.

[637] It is no argument to say that the witnesses are not disinterested men. The witnesses must be either Chutterput's or Hari Mohan's tenants. Hari Mohan's tenants could not be expected to give evidence in favour of the prosecution, and all the ryots living in Gauri Kanta tola were complainants. It is quite possible that matters have been exaggerated and not all, but only the houses of those tenants who had left Hari Mohan's estate and Gauri Kanta's, the head ryots, had been looted, but on examining the papers in connection with the enquiry held by the Inspector, and the evidence, I am satisfied that there is a substratum of the truth.

Of the five Mahanandatola men examined by the Inspector, all appeared to have proved the occurrence, and one of them has been examined in Court, of them one is a school pandit having some position. His statement, as recorded by the Inspector, appears to have a ring of truth in it. Then the Jitutola men have not been examined.

The Inspector went to the place 10 days after the occurrence, and his report shows that he saw that the grain lay scattered about in several houses.

If the facts stated by the complainant be true, it is a case of dacoity, and as such triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions.

I would ask the Magistrate to cause further inquiry to be made by examining the Sub-Inspector, the Inspector and Mahanandatola men who had been examined by the Inspector. It is also desirable to examine some of the respectable residents of Jitutola.

If after making the enquiry the inquiring officer is satisfied that a prima facie case of dacoity has been made out, he should commit the case to the Sessions for trial. If after inquiry he is satisfied that a prima facie case has not been established, he should discharge the accused, and if after the thorough inquiry he is satisfied that the case is false, he should, as he has done, direct the prosecution of the complainant on a charge under s. 211. I direct that further inquiry be made accordingly.

Baijanath Pandey then applied to the High Court to set aside the order on the ground that it was illegal and made without jurisdiction. In his petition he contended, inter alia, that, as he had been acquitted under s. 258 after the charge had been framed, and witnesses on both sides examined, the Sessions Judge was wrong in directing a further trial; that the Sessions Judge had erred in directing the examination of the Sub-Inspector and the other persons ordered to be examined by him, the complainant never having sought to examine them; that the Sessions Judge was not competent to open up the whole matter when the only complaint before him was that the sanction under s. 195 [638] should not have been given; that the Sessions Judge had no power to order the inquiring officer to commit the petitioner to the Sessions, if a prima facie case be made out; and that the Sessions Judge's action in the matter was wholly irregular, illegal, and unwarranted by the facts of the case.

On this application, a rule was issued which now came on for argument.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips) and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey, for the petitioner.

Mr. Pugh, Baboo Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, and Baboo Digambur Chatterjee, for the opposite party.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips).—Upon a full consideration of the facts of this case, the Magistrate has acquitted Baijanath of the charges brought against him, viz., theft and house-trespass, ss. 380 and 448 of the Penal Code, and has given him sanction to prosecute the complaint under s. 211. Against this order, the complainant moved the Sessions Judge in order to get the sanction revoked, and the Sessions Judge instead of confining himself to the matter legally before him, has ordered a further inquiry against Baijanath under s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the ground that the greater offence of dacoity had been committed. The Sessions Judge has no power, under that section, to re-open a case like this, in which the accused had been acquitted. [PRINSEP, J., referred to paragraph 2 of s. 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.] That section has no application to the present case. Here the Magistrate had all the facts before him, and upon these facts he did not even believe the smaller offence of theft to have been committed. Paragraph 2 of that section does not apply to a case in which all the facts of a case are before the Court, and nothing new in the shape of evidence is forthcoming.

Mr. Pugh, contra.—The Judge believes that a most serious offence has been committed, and he is of opinion that there should be a further inquiry. He is clearly within his jurisdiction in directing a further inquiry. The last paragraph of s. 403 immediately before the explanation, applies to this case. [PRINSEP, J.—Suppose in this case Baijanath had not been acquitted, [639] but convicted of theft, and the matter had come before the District Judge, not in appeal, but in revision under s. 437, could he have ordered a fresh inquiry on the higher charge of dacoity? The High Court would have the power to do so; but not the Sessions Judge.] The High Court has the power, and this is enough for me, as the whole case is now before your Lordships, and you should, I submit, in the interests of justice, order a fresh inquiry. [AMEER ALI, J.—The illustrations to s. 403 do not help you.] In the present case the Magistrate did not try the accused for the higher offence of dacoity; there was no such charge against him: the illustrations to s. 403 are all with reference to cases where an accused person has been tried for the higher offence and acquitted. I do not, however, wish to argue that the Sessions Judge had the power to order a further inquiry in a case like this; the objection, however, is only technical. It is clear that this Court has all the power of a Court of appeal in revision, and that further inquiry should be directed by this Court in order that justice should be done.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips) in reply, was pointing out that the Sessions Judge had exercised the power of an appellate Court under s. 423 (a), which he clearly had no right to do, as the matter was before him in revision, when he was stopped by the Court.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The complaint originally made before the Magistrate indicated the commission of what is known as a sessions case, probably dacoity. The Magistrate, in dealing with the case, proceeded under s. 209 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which declares that if the Magistrate should find that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, he should discharge him, unless it appears to the Magistrate that such persons should be tried before himself or some other Magistrate, in which case he shall proceed accordingly. The Magistrate found that no sessions offence was prima facie established, and he, accordingly, proceeded to hold the trial himself, that is to say, he proceeded under s. 254 of the Code, and he framed a charge in writing against [640] the accused, of the offence of theft in a building under s. 380, and criminal trespass under s. 448, Indian Penal Code. Finally, the Magistrate acquitted the accused, and, under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he gave sanction to prosecute the complainant under s. 211 of the Penal Code for making a false complaint. The complainant then went to the Sessions Judge and asked to have this order revoked. The Sessions Judge proceeded to consider the entire case, not merely whether sanction to prosecute should or should not be given, and finding that proper inquiry had not been made, as all the evidence available had not been taken, and that, if such inquiries were held, a sessions offence might be established, he directed that further inquiry should be held, and that the Magistrate should proceed in accordance with the result of such inquiry, leaving it still open to him, if he should find that the complaint was false, to give sanction to prosecute the complainant under s. 211, Penal Code. On an application made on behalf of the accused persons in that case to set aside this order as without jurisdiction, a rule was granted, which has now come on for hearing.

On full consideration of the arguments of the learned Counsel, who appeared on both sides, we have no doubt that the Sessions Judge in this matter has exercised a jurisdiction which was not vested in him by law. If he proceeded to exercise the powers of revision as he seems to have done, he was competent to send for the record for any of the purposes mentioned in s. 435. But he was not competent under s. 436 to direct a fresh inquiry to be made, inasmuch as the accused had not been improperly discharged of an offence triable exclusively by a Court of Sessions, but had been acquitted of an offence within the Magistrate's jurisdiction, in proceedings, as already pointed out, under ss. 209, 234 and 258. The Sessions Judge, as a matter of fact, has exercised a jurisdiction vested in him as an appellate Court under s. 423, as if an appeal had been presented to him from the order of acquittal passed by the Magistrate. Such powers are in Revision conferred under s. 439 only on the High Court. In the present rule, we desire to express no opinion on the merits of the case, but merely to hold that the order of the Sessions Judge directing further inquiry is bad, and must therefore be set aside.

[641] As we have been pressed to express some opinion regarding the effect of the Sessions Judge's order on the sanction given by the Magistrate to prosecute under s. 211, Penal Code, we would merely say that as we understand the effect of the order of the Sessions Judge, it is to revoke the sanction given. The propriety of the order sanctioning the prosecution or revoking it is not before us.

Appeal—Appeal from order—Order to person holding certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 to furnish security where portion of the property held as security has been sold—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

An order by which a person who had obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 was directed to furnish security to the extent to which the security originally furnished had been diminished by the sale of a portion of the property is not an order from which an appeal lies either under Act XXVII of 1860 or Act VII of 1889.

IN this case a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 was granted to the petitioner, as the widow of one Radha Nath Shaha, on 23rd of August 1889, on her furnishing security to the extent of Rs. 5,000, the grant being opposed by Srinath Saha. She furnished two sureties, who gave security to the extent of Rs. 2,500 each. Some of the property given by the sureties as security having been sold—that of one surety for arrears of Government revenue, and that of the other for arrears of rent under Reg. VIII of 1819, the petitioner was called on to show cause why she should not furnish security to the extent to which the former security had become diminished by the sale of the property offered as [642] security; and an order was made by the District Judge of Jessore that the petitioner should furnish such security.

From this order the petitioner appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Boykant Nath Dass, for the appellant.

Baboo Surendur Chunder Sen, for the respondent.

At the hearing a preliminary objection was raised that no appeal would lie from such an order.

The judgment of the Court (MACPHERSON and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal from an order by which the appellant, who had obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, was directed to furnish security to the extent to which the security originally furnished had been diminished by the sale of a portion of the property. We think that neither under Act XXVII of 1860 nor under the provisions of the present Act, VII of 1839, does an appeal lie from such an order. It is not an order relating either to the granting, refusing, or revoking of a certificate.

The appeal is rejected with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 161, 172—Statements of witnesses recorded by police officers investigating under chap. XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code—Police Diaries.

The privilege given by s. 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not extend to statements taken under s. 161, but recorded in the diary made under s. 172.

[F., 16 A.W.N. 793; R., 19 A. 330 (392)=17 A.W.N. 174 (F.B.); 20 M. 189=7 M. L.J. 167 (170, 175) (F.B.)=2 Weir 763; 9 C.P.L.R. 33 (34) Cr.; Cons., 11 Cr. L. J. 117 (121)=5 Ind. Cas. 357=13 O.C. 7.]

[643] ON the complaint of one Rashu Gossain, the petitioners were convicted by Baboo Rakhal Mohan Banerjee, Deputy Magistrate of Purulia, of rioting under s. 147 of the Penal Code, and sentenced each to six months' rigorous imprisonment, and three of them were, in addition, ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 200 each, and in default, to suffer six weeks' further rigorous imprisonment.

From this decision and sentence, the petitioners appealed to the Deputy Commissioner of Purulia, who, however, upheld the conviction and sentence, and dismissed the appeal.

It is unnecessary to further allude to the facts of the case, as the only question argued before the High Court was that relating to the production, at the instance of the accused, of certain statements of the complainant and his witnesses, recorded by the investigating police officer, which it was contended formed portion of the special diary which the accused were not entitled to see.

Before the Deputy Magistrate, the petitioners had filed an application praying that these statements, which had been reduced into writing, as they contended, under the provisions of s. 161, Criminal Procedure Code, might be sent for, and that they, i. e., the accused, might be permitted to cross-examine the witnesses before the Court upon those previous statements. This application was refused.

Before the Deputy Commissioner of Purulia, who heard the appeal, counsel for the petitioners urged, inter alia, that the Deputy Magistrate was in error in not calling for these statements, and submitted that those statements should be sent for by the Deputy Commissioner: this contention was, however, overruled and the statements were not sent for.

The petitioners then applied to the High Court to send for the record and revise the decision and sentence upon various grounds, and, inter alia, urged that the Courts below should have granted their application with regard to the statements of the complainant and his witnesses recorded by the investigating police officer, and they contended that they had been greatly prejudiced by being prevented from showing material discrepancies which existed between the statements made by the witnesses before the Court and those made before such police officer. A rule was issued on this latter ground on the 3rd February, and at the same time the High [644] Court directed that the statements of the witnesses referred to, and the non-production of which was complained of, should be sent up with the record. The rule came on for hearing on the 24th March.

Mr. W. Jackson and Baboo Mohan Chand Mitter, for the petitioners.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.

Mr. Jackson:—The Deputy Magistrate has stated in his explanation that there are no statements recorded under s. 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The statements, however, exist, and they are before your Lordships. The outer cover to those statements suggests that they are taken under s. 172 of the Code, but that is only a device to get rid of the necessity of having to produce them in Court. Section 172 refers to special diaries; it has nothing to do with statements of witnesses. The mere fact that a heading is put on to depositions reduced into writing under s. 161, to the effect that they are taken under s. 172, does not make them special diaries or privileged statements. [TREVELYAN, J.—The Magistrate says that it is untrue that there are any statements under s. 161.] That statement is not correct. The statements are there, only a heading is put on to them to the effect that they are taken under s. 172, but that does not make them special diaries. Section 172 does not authorize a police officer to take down the statements of witnesses. [RAMPINI, J.—I do not know of any authority by which you can call for these papers, without calling the person in whose possession they are. There is a case to that effect—The Empress v. Kali Churn Ohunari (1).] This is a device of the executive to evade the rulings of the High Court. I refer to the two cases Bikro Khan v. The Queen-Empress (2) and Mahomed Ali Hadji v. The Queen-Empress (3). [RAMPINI, J.—You have misunderstood my question. Can you point to any law or authority which gives you the right to ask for the production of these documents?] Section 94 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I submit, gives me this right. A witness called to produce a document must do so, unless he can [645] show that it is a protected document. These statements are not protected under the Evidence Act, nor are they protected under any section of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is only right and just that the accused should have the right to call for the statements. [RAMPINI, J.—Did you apply under s. 94 of the Code?] The application was in order. It is not necessary to mention the section under which an application is made. The latter part of s. 94 shows that no person need be called. Production of these statements may be applied for also under s. 165 of the Evidence Act. A person called on to produce a document is bound to do so. See Evidence Act, s. 162. [TREVELYAN, J.—I do not know of anything more disastrous to the administration of Criminal law than that the accused should be debarred from having access to information to which he has a right, and to which he is not absolutely debarred from having access, by some express provision of the Legislature. Here the statements were, it appears, actually in Court.] I cannot add anything stronger to the observations which have fallen from your Lordship. The statements were actually before the Court. There are two decisions of this Court in my favour, and I submit that this question cannot be reopened.

[TREVELYAN, J.—You wish to have a re-trial with the aid of these depositions?] Yes. [RAMPINI, J.—But how do you propose to use these papers?] I shall ask the witnesses one after another whether they made such and such statements, and then call the Sub-Inspector. TREVELYAN, J.—Calls attention to Empress v. Haran Chunder Mitter (1), and says: The mere fact that the heading states that certain statements are taken under s. 172, Criminal Procedure Code, does not make any difference, if those statements are really the statements of witnesses recorded under the provisions of s. 161, Criminal Procedure Code, the only question is whether you are entitled to see those statements.] Just so. And I submit that as such statements can only be taken under s. 161 of the Code, I am so entitled by law. Under the Code of 1882, the Legislature has enacted that a witness can be prosecuted for speaking falsely before the police. This provision did not exist before. Can it be contended that statements upon which a witness can be prosecuted for perjury [646] should never see the light of day? In order to evade the law and to render the rulings of this Court a nullity, the Inspector-General of Police has issued a circular to his subordinates to take down all such statements under s. 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [TREVELYAN, J.—How can we assume that the Inspector-General of Police did issue such a circular. It would be apparently an evasion of the law as laid down by this Court.] But it is true. The Deputy Magistrate in his explanation says so. Your Lordship could send for the circular.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby):—The two cases relied on by Mr. Jackson are certainly not in my favour. [TREVELYAN, J.—The question here is this; the statements are really taken under s. 161 of the Code, and a heading is put on to them to say that they are under s. 172. Is not that an evasion of the law?] These two decisions have made a complete revolution in the law. They are contrary to the earlier decisions. For the last 25 years, s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has been regarded as referring to a part of the police diary. [TREVELYAN, J.—Will you formulate your proposition?] Statements under s. 161 of the Code are privileged [TREVELYAN, J.—Both Mr. Justice RAMPINI and I are of opinion that they are not privileged. The question has been decided by two Division Benches of this Court, and we should like to know whether you are going to argue that this matter should be referred to a Full Bench. It would not be necessary to refer the matter to the Full Bench.] In deference to your Lordship's views I will not pursue this point any further. But the next point is, have the accused been in any way prejudiced? [TREVELYAN, J.—But we have not as yet arrived at that stage; are not the accused first of all entitled to look at those statements?] They have laid no foundation for cross-examination. If it can be shown that they have been prejudiced upon the merits of the case, then, of course, I have no objection to the case going back for retrial. In the case of Bikao Khan v. The Queen-Empress (2) your Lordships say:—"Before, however, we can order a new trial on this ground, we would have to be satisfied that injustice had been done to the accused by the exclusion of this evidence."

[647] TREVELYAN, J.—Mr. Jackson, can you show any material difference between the two statements?]

Mr. Jackson then referred to various contradictory statements in the statements recorded by the police officer and the depositions before the Deputy Magistrate.

(1) 6 C. L. R. 399.

(2) 16 C. 610.

[RAMPINI, J.—Is s. 172 of the Code exhaustive? Might it not also contain a memorandum of evidence and be at the same time a bona fide diary?]

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer.—I submit the special diary might contain the statements of witnesses.

Mr. Jackson.—Section 172 is exhaustive. Statements of witnesses cannot be taken under that section.

C. A. V.

The judgment of the High Court (TREVELYAN and RAMPINI, JJ.) was delivered on March 27th, and was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In this case it is complained that the accused were not allowed to use statements of witnesses taken by the police under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the way permitted by law. On the 3rd February 1893, a Bench of this Court made an order in the following terms:—"Let the record be sent for, and a rule issue on the Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside, or such order passed as to this Court may seem fit. The District Magistrate will be further requested to send, with the record, the police diaries bearing on this matter, and to report whether, in addition to those diaries, any other record not embodied therein exists, or was made of statements taken by the police officers from the witnesses in this case. Pending further orders in this case, the petitioners will be admitted to bail." The documents have been sent up to us, and we have examined them. Although written in special diary form, we find they contain amongst other things, which properly form portion of a special diary taken under s. 172, statements made by the witnesses, and taken down by the Inspector. Section 161 provides for the taking down of statements of witnesses by the police. Such statements are, it has been held by at least two Benches of this Court, not privileged. Section 172 shows what a [648] special diary should contain. It is to contain the proceedings of the police officer. The section shows what kind of proceedings it is to contain. We do not think that the statement of proceedings beginning at the words "setting forth" is exhaustive, but we do not think that the section is intended to include the statements made by witnesses on an oral examination made by a police officer. In the first place, we do not think that the matters stated to the witnesses are a part of the proceedings of the police officer. The fact that he examined certain witnesses is a part of his proceedings, and, as the section shows, the circumstances ascertained from the examination are a part of the proceedings; but the actual statements of the witnesses are not the proceedings of the police officer. In the second place, the Legislature has expressly provided in s. 161 for the examination of witnesses, and does not make the statement taken under such examination privileged. It is only under s. 161 that a police officer making an investigation can examine persons acquainted with the facts of the case, and reduce them into writing. It is admitted that the fact that the statement is included in the police diary can make no difference if the statement was made under s. 161. We do not see how the statement can have been taken down, except under the provisions of s. 161. In the third place, s. 161 requires a person to answer truly all questions relating to the case put to him by the officer, and he is liable to be punished if his statements are untrue. If the Legislature intended to cover with the cloak of privilege statements which might render persons liable to a criminal prosecution, they would have done so in express terms. It would be wrong to hold that a police officer, by inserting in the special diary statements which can only have been made to him under s. 161, can protect such statements from being used in the way that the law allows, e.g., under ss. 145 and 159 of the Evidence Act. The Deputy Magistrate, in his explanation, says that the allegation, that the statements made by the witnesses were reduced into writing, "is absolutely devoid of foundation in truth." As we have said, the examination of the papers forwarded to us shows that the statements were reduced into writing. The allegation in the affidavit on this point is, we think, absolutely true. The statement not being privileged, the question arises [649] whether the accused have been prejudiced by the action of the Deputy Magistrate. The Deputy Magistrate says:—"I carefully went through the diaries under s. 172, and found nothing favourable to the accused in these diaries." We have been referred to several matters in the statements of witnesses recorded in what are called the special diaries, and we find that there are many statements which would unquestionably be of great assistance to the accused. We think, therefore, that the accused have been prejudiced by the action of the Deputy Magistrate. In our opinion, the conviction and sentence must be set aside, and we accordingly set them aside. In the circumstances of the case, we think it desirable that it should not be re-tried by Baboo Rakkhal Mohan Banerjee. We direct that it be re-tried by any first class Magistrate there may be at Manbhum. At this re-trial, the accused will be at liberty to use, in accordance with the provisions of the law, the statements of the witnesses recorded by the police.

Lords Watson, Hobhouse and Morris and Sir R. Couch.[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

BHAI NARINDAR BAHADUR SINGH AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)
v. ACHAL RAM (Defendant). * [2nd and 3rd
 February, 1893.]

The Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869)—Taluk descending to a single heir—Ascertainment of that single heir distinguished from the rule of primogeniture.

An estate belonging to a talukdar whose name is entered in the second and not in the third of the lists of talukdars in six specified classes prepared under the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 8—10, is one which according to the custom of the family descends to a single heir, but not necessarily by the rule of primogeniture.

If, as happened in the present case, where the estate descended to a single heir, the heir according to lineal primogeniture is more remote in degree from the ancestor than other persons, who may be collaterals, coming [650] within the line of heirship, then, according to the classification in the Oudh Estates Act, nearness in degree prevails over directness of line. But if two collaterals, or other persons in the line of heirships, are equal in degree, then the person rightly entitled is indicated by the seniority of the line to which he belongs. Section 22, sub-s. 11 of the Act, referring to the law which would govern descent in default of any heirs who would come under the special provisions of Act, includes in that law family custom when established.

In an attempt to prove a family custom to the effect that females should not inherit, no proof was afforded by the production of certain wajib-ul-araz, as to which there was nothing to show that the villages of which they were recorded were the villages in suit, or belonging to the family which was disputing the succession.

APPEAL from a decree (24th April 1884) of the Judicial Commissioner, affirming a decree (26th June 1886) of the District Judge of Faizabad, and dismissing the appellant's suit with costs.

The estate in dispute was the taluk Birwa Mahnaon in the Gonda district, conferred upon Pirthi Pal Singh, who died in November 1859. His name as talukdar was, however, entered in the lists I and II prepared by the order of the Chief Commissioner, and the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869); list I comprising all talukdars, and list II comprising "talukdars whose estates, on and before the 13th February 1855, ordinarily devolved upon a single heir."

Pirthi Pal's widow, Thakurain Sarfraz Kuar succeeded her husband, and died on the 20th February 1870. Her daughter Brij Raj Duar next inherited; and died on the 3rd February 1879, when her husband Achal Ram entered upon possession of the taluk. In Achal Ram v. Udai Partab Addiya Dat Singh (1) the rule of succession as stated in the above Act, in regard to estates in list II, was affirmed as applicable to Birwa Mahnaon; and it was held not to be necessary that when a talukdar's name was entered in the second, but not in the third of the lists, the estate, though descending to a single heir, should descend by the rule of primogeniture.

The plaint, filed on the 8th January 1886, alleged that, on the death of Sarfraz in 1870, the plaintiff's father Harbhagat, deceased in 1874, became entitled as the nearest collateral heir to Pirthi [651] Pal to inherit the taluk, to the exclusion of Brij Raj Kuar, daughter of Sarfraz and Pirthi Pal. The possession which Brij Raj obtained on the death of her mother was said to be wrongful. But, according to the plaint, the cause of action against Achal Singh, the present defendant, did not arise on the death of Sarfraz, but arose at the time when, in a suit against Achal Singh, the succession to Pirthi Pal's taluk was claimed by Udai Partab Singh, talukdar of Bhinga, and a final order was made for Achal's possession on the 1st April 1885, by the Judicial Commissioner. More explicitly stated, the origin of the right of Narindar to sue Achal Ram was put in this way. Brij Raj represented by the Court of Wards retained possession till her death in 1879; and her husband Achal Ram, on his succeeding her, was sued by the Raja of Bhinga, who on the 21st February 1881 obtained a decree. To that suit Narindar, the present claimant, was not a party. On the 12th December 1883 that decree was reversed by order of Her Majesty in Council; the result being that the right of possession was restored to Achal Ram. This, in the course of events, involved the opposition of the latter to the claim set up by Narindar, who claimed as against Achal Ram to be put into possession of the taluk, dating his dispossession to have taken place on the 2nd February 1884, and alleging title to possession in virtue of his being the nearest heir of the late Pirthi Pal Singh.

The defendant denied that the plaintiff was the nearest male relation of Pirthi Pal Singh, deceased, and claimed the right to taluk Birwa on a title through his marriage with Brij Raj Kuar: he alleged also that the latter was entitled under a will, made by Sarfraz, as well as by the rules of inheritance.

The Courts below concurred on the following points:—that Pirthi Pal died intestate; that Brij Raj Kuar, on the death of her mother Sarfraz Kuar, succeeded as heiress to her father in preference to collaterals; that the descendants of Azmut Singh, in the third generation, who had been adopted into another family, must be left out of consideration.

But they differed on the question of limitation. The District Judge, on the understanding that the succession opened to collaterals on Brij Raj Kuar's death in 1879, was of opinion that the [652] plaintiff might have made title through his father Harbhagat; but holding the suit barred by the twelve years' limitation, he dismissed it. The Judicial Commissioner held that the suit was not barred by limitation; but he dismissed the suit on the merits. The Judicial Commissioner found that, at the death of Brij Raj Kuar, the plaintiff, Narindar, was not the nearest collateral heir, in the presence of Jubraj, who, like the plaintiff, survived Brij Raj Kuar. This Jubraj he found to be equal in degree with Narindar, but nearer than he was in line, being great-grandson of Sardawan, an elder brother of Sangram Singh, of whom the plaintiff was great-grandson.

The suit was accordingly dismissed.

On this appeal,

Sir H. Davey, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that it had not been proved that Jubraj Singh stood before the plaintiff as nearer in degree to Pirthi Pal. In reference to the evidence afforded by the wajib-ul-araiz of certain villages, Lekraj Kuar v. Mahpal Singh (1) was cited. The plaintiff had shown the better title and should have had a decree in his favour.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., and Mr. H. Cowell, for the respondent, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was given by

LORD HOBHOUSE.—The question in this case has come to a very simple point in lead after all this litigation. The estate is in Oudh, and was granted by the Crown to one Pirthi Pal after the confiscation, and it is placed in class 2 of Act I of 1869, and not in class 3. The effect of that is that the estate is labelled as one which according to the custom of the family descends to a single heir, but not necessarily by the rule of lineal primogeniture. It may be, and it has so happened in this case, that the heir according to lineal primogeniture is more remote in degree from the ancestor than other collaterals, or other persons in the line of heirship. If so, the degree prevails over the line according to the classification under the Act; though if two collaterals or persons in the line of heirship, are equal in degree, then as the property can only go to [653] one, recourse must be had to the seniority of line to find out which that one is.

(1) 5 C. 744 = 7 I.A. 63.

Pirithi Pal died in the year 1859. He left a widow and a daughter, but no son. There was no question as to the right of his widow to succeed; the Act of 1869 provides for that. She succeeded, and held during her life, and died in the year 1870, and the first question is whether on the death of the widow the daughter succeeded. If she did not, the succession opened to collaterals of Pirithi Pal at the death of his widow; and there is no doubt therefore upon the pedigree, that one Harbhagat would then be the nearest collateral to take, and the plaintiff Bhai Narindar is his heir. Therefore it is the plaintiff's interest to show that the succession to collaterals did open at the death of the widow in 1870: and for that purpose he attempts to prove a family custom to the effect that females shall not succeed. The only proof of such a custom is the production of certain wajib-ul-araiz. But it is not shown that the villages of which they were recorded are villages now in suit, and it is not shown that they belong to the same family as the family which is now disputing the question of succession. There is therefore no proof of the custom before their Lordships. Besides this there are concurrent findings in the Courts below in favour of the succession of Pirithi Pal's daughter which, though they do not in terms negative the custom alleged, are absolutely inconsistent with it, and must be taken as concurrent findings against the custom. Therefore the succession opened at the death of the daughter without issue, which happened in the year 1879. By that time Harbhagat was dead, and the two nearest collaterals were the son of Harbhagat, who is the plaintiff, and his cousin Jubraj; those two being both sixth in descent from the common ancestor of themselves and Pirithi Pal. But Jubraj comes of a branch senior to the branch of the plaintiff; and therefore if the estate can only go to one, it will go to that one who represents the senior branch.

Sir Horace Davey has suggested rather than argued on behalf of the appellant that in a case of distribution ordered by the 11th sub-section of the 22nd section of the Act of 1869, the family custom is not to be taken into account. Their Lordships consider that the effect of the 11th sub-section is simply to refer [654] the parties to the law which would govern the descent of the property when the special provisions of the Act are exhausted. That law clearly takes in the family custom, and that law will in this case carry the estate to the one single heir, and that single heir must be pronounced to be Jubraj in preference to the plaintiff.

Their Lordships have not got Jubraj before them, and do not know whether there are other claimants; but the plaintiff's own evidence shows that Jubraj comes in before them, and therefore the plaintiff cannot maintain this suit.

The result is, that their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

20 C. 654.

Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), ss. 337, 338, 339, and 344—License for a provision market—Market—Order prohibiting use of unlicensed market—Powers of Municipal Commissioners to grant or withhold licenses.

It is entirely within the discretion of the Municipal Commissioners, under the provisions of s. 339 of the Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), to grant or refuse a license for a market, and the Courts have no longer any jurisdiction to control such power, however arbitrarily exercised.

Moran v. The Chairman of the Metihari Municipality (1) approved.

[655] A landowner on whose land a market had been held for some years previous, and which land lay within the bounds of a municipality, was prosecuted under s. 344 of the Bengal Municipal Act, and convicted and fined for using such market without having obtained a license under s. 338. He alleged that he had applied for a license and that it had not been granted him, and that the neglect to grant it was due to the fact that his market interfered with a new market established by the Municipal Commissioners, and their desire to close his market. It appeared that some time previous to the institution of the prosecution, the Municipal Commissioners at a meeting passed a resolution "that the provisions of s. 337 of the Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884) be extended to this municipality," and it was contended that by this resolution licenses became necessary to sell at any market any of the provisions mentioned in that section, and that selling without such license rendered the accused liable to prosecution and fine under s. 344. It appeared, further, that Part X of the Act, which includes s. 337, had been previously extended to the municipality by an order of the Government of Bengal.

Held, that the resolution of the Commissioners was not an order such as is contemplated by s. 337, as it was not sufficiently precise to convey any definite meaning, and purported only to do what the Bengal Government had already done some time previously.

Held further, that the conviction and sentence must be set aside, there being no proper order under s. 337.

In this case the accused was charged at the instance of the Madaripur Municipality with an offence under s. 344 of the Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), and was convicted by a Deputy Magistrate and fined Rs. 30.

The prosecution was instituted by the Vice-Chairman on the 14th June 1892, and it appeared that the accused had been previously convicted in the preceding month of November of a similar offence in respect of the same market by the same Magistrate and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 51. This conviction was, however, set aside by the Sessions Judge on appeal.

The reasons given by the Magistrate for convicting on the present occasion, as well as the facts of the case, are fully stated in his judgment, which was as follows:—

"This is a case brought by the Madaripur Municipality under s. 344 of the Bengal Municipal Act. It is said that the accused has wilfully permitted a certain area of land within the limits fixed, under s. 337 of the said Act, to be used as a market for the sale of provisions specified in the latter section without the license required by s. 338 of the said Act."

^{*} Criminal Reference, No. 346 of 1892, made by J. Posford, Esq., Sessions Judge of Faridpur, dated 31st December 1892, against the order passed by Baboo R. M. Chuckerbutty, Deputy Magistrate of Madaripur, dated the 19th September 1892.

[656] The evidence on the record clearly shows that Part IX of Act No. V of 1876, corresponding to Part X of the present Municipal Act, has been duly extended to the Madaripur Municipality, and under s. 2 of the present Act, the notification extending the market laws of the former Act to this municipality remains as valid as if it had been published under the Act now in force. It is also satisfactorily proved that the order under s. 337 of the present Municipal Act was duly made, and that it was notified by beat of drum, and that the market in respect of which this prosecution is instituted is situated within the limits fixed under the said section, is also clearly and indisputably established. The fact that a license has been applied for in respect of the market in question goes to show beyond all doubt that the aforesaid provisions of the Municipal law are in force in this municipality.

It is further established that the accused has obtained no license for the year 1892-93, and that the existence of the offence was brought to the knowledge of the Vice-Chairman on the 26th May last, and the prosecution has been instituted on 14th June 1892. It is both proved and admitted that the site of the market belongs to the Pal Baboos of Loukajung and that the accused is their naib (agent), and according to the definition given in sub-s. 11, s. 6 of the present Municipal Act, an agent is to be deemed to be an owner for the purposes of the said Act.

The prosecution has further proved that a market is commonly held within the given boundaries, and that perishable articles are sold therein; and in order to verify this general statement, the prosecution has adduced evidence to the effect that on a certain day, i.e., the 21st May last, a market as defined in s. 336 of the Municipal Act, i.e., consisting of at least 30 shops, stalls or standings, was held, and that vegetables, fruits, and similar provisions were sold. The municipal overseer and the tax-daroga went to the hat on that day and made a list of the shops, &c. This list has been filed and attested. The statement of the municipal officers is corroborated by the testimony of two respectable witnesses, namely, Baboo Syama Kunto Chowdhry, B.L., a pleader of the local Civil Court, and Baboo Jatish Chunder Sen, clerk, Madaripur Local Board. Their depositions vary no doubt from each other as to the number of shops, &c. But both of them have said that there were at least 30 shops, stalls or standings. The discrepancy is apparently due to the fact that they did not actually count the shops. The existence of the market and the sale of perishable articles therein are admitted even by the defence witnesses, although some of them, who are apparently anxious to secure the interest of the accused, qualify their statements by saying that the number of shops, stalls or standings selling fruits, vegetables, and similar provisions, does not exceed 25. This downright falsehood proceeds from their ignorance of the definition of market. They are evidently labouring under the mistaken idea that no place can be deemed to be a market unless there are at least 30 shops, &c., of perishable articles.

[657] The only point for determination that now remains to be dealt with is whether the accused has wilfully or negligently permitted the land to be used as a market. This is a point on which no direct evidence can be adduced, and it is to be gathered from the conduct of the accused. The evidence shows that he lives in a house within the given boundaries, and he cannot but witness the holding of the market almost daily; and the fact that he does not try to prevent it, cannot but raise a presumption that it is done with his connivance; but there are facts which will show directly that he has wilfully permitted the land to be used as a market,

His own mirdha, namely, Faizuddin Bhunja, has attested certain kabuliats, and he admits that the lands covered by the said documents are situated within the given boundaries of the market, and that the accused receives the rent agreed to thereby, on behalf of his masters, the Pal Baboos of Loukajung. Again, the municipal overseer swears that he has seen a peon in the employ of the Pal Baboos, attached to their kutcheries at Madaripur of which the accused is the naib, levy toll in kind (mango) from the sellers of mango in the market. All these circumstances cannot but clearly point out that the accused has wilfully permitted the land to be used as a market.

It is contended on behalf of the defence (1) that the case is barred by limitation; (2) that the accused is neither the owner nor the occupier of the land, and that there is a lessee of the market who is in direct possession of the same; (3) that the municipality have maliciously withheld the license, although it has been applied for more than once, with a view to put an end to his master's old hat; (4) that the Vice-Chairman has no power to institute the prosecution without the consent of the Commissioners. The accused also pleads an alibi.

As to the plea of limitation, it has already been said that the existence of the offence was brought to the notice of the Vice-Chairman on the 28th May, and that the prosecution has been instituted on the 14th June last. The accused should have taken out a license on the 1st April last, and as the offence is a continuing one, limitation does not run till the expiration of the period for which it should have been taken out. It could never be the intention of the Legislature that no license is necessary for an unlicensed market which has been in existence for more than three months, for such an interpretation would make the law a mere dead letter.

As regards the second plea, it has already been shown that the accused is the owner of the land for the purposes of the Municipal Act. Again, the so-called ijara lease executed by Faizuddin Bhunja on the 25th Baisak last shows that he has no concern with the land on which the market is held. He has admitted that the rents payable by the permanent shop-keepers are received by the accused, and the aforesaid lease authorizes the lessee to levy certain perquisites from the traders of the hat; for instance, half an anna on the sale of every maund of jute, on every rupee on the sale-proceeds of the bamboos, and so on. Then it is quite clear that the ijaradar is neither the owner nor the occupier of the land.

[658] Regarding the third ground, it need only be said that the question whether the Commissioners should have granted a license or not, does not at all arise in this case. It is quite irrelevant to consider the impropriety or otherwise of withholding a license in such a case. What the Court has to decide is not whether a license ought to have been granted, but whether it has been granted. Granting, however, for the sake of argument, that the license has improperly been refused, the accused is not justified in setting the law at naught. In the case of Moran v. The Chairman of the Motihari Municipality (1) it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that s. 339 of the Municipal Act has given the Municipal Commissioners absolute power in the matter of granting or refusing a license. But, having regard to the opinion of the Civil Surgeon as to the fitness or otherwise of the place to be used as a market, I cannot prepare my mind to believe that the refusal of the Commissioner to grant a license was arbitrary. They had good and valid reasons to refuse the license applied for. That the natural and legitimate consequence of this prosecution may be favourable to the growth and the development of the municipal market is not, I think, a sufficient ground to charge the municipality with having mala fide exercised their powers to the injury and loss of the accused or his masters, and it is very curious to find that the Municipal Commissioners, who have sworn to this effect, have not adopted any measures to put a stop to this prosecution.

The allegation that articles of perishable nature have long been sold in the market is entirely untrue. It appears that there was a market situated to the east of the Pal Baboos' market, and so long as the former was in existence, only some select goods such as gur, dhan, used to be sold in the latter hat. The defence witness, Gobinda Chunder Chatterjee, admits that the accused tried to establish a new market for the sale of fish, vegetables, &c., in the year 1297 B.S., so it is quite clear that previous to the said year, articles of a perishable nature had never been sold as in the Pal Baboos' hat, and it was only in the year 1297 B.S., that the sale of these articles was naturally shifted to the Pal Baboos' market by the total annihilation by diluvion of the other market. At about the same time the municipality started a market with a view to enhance the commercial importance of the town, and to keep the sale of perishable articles of food under their control. But as it was very inconvenient for the people to get their daily provisions from the municipal market on account of its having been situated at the distance of about two miles from the old market, the municipality have started a daily market in the centre of the town for the sale of fish, vegetables, and similar provisions at a considerable cost in the beginning of the current financial year. The Municipal Commissioners, who are primarily responsible for the sanitation of the town, have thus done everything to keep the sale of perishable articles under their own [659] control consistently with the comfort and convenience of the people, and it would be an anomaly if after doing so much they should allow the sale of perishable articles in a place which, in the opinion of the Civil Surgeon, is not at all fit for the purpose.

As to the 4th plea, I need only refer to s. 44 of the Municipal Act, which empowers the Chairman to exercise all the powers vested by the Act in the Commissioners (not the Commissioners at a meeting). It would be fatal to all municipal administration if, for the transaction of every trifling business (such as the institution of a prosecution for the violation of any bye-law or the like), a meeting of the Commissioners were to be called, and it is for this reason that the Legislature has wisely vested the Chairman with the powers of the Commissioners. Again, s. 45 of the Act authorises the Chairman to delegate all or any of his powers and duties to the Vice-Chairman by a written order, and the evidence on the record fully proves that the power to institute any prosecution under the Municipal Act or bye-law has been duly delegated to the Vice-Chairman.

The plea of alibi is of no avail in this case. The fact that the accused has taken a kabuliat from the lessee, Faizuddin Bhunja, on the 25th Baisak last for the period of one year, goes to show that he has given the permission once for all. Again, he cannot avoid his duties and liabilities by reason of his temporary absence. The evidence shows that the market is continuously held, and it matters little if he is away from the station on a certain day or days. To verify the general statement that a market is held, evidence has been given of its having been held on a particular day, but it does not therefore mean that he is prosecuted for the holding of the market on that day only.

It now remains to notice one point only, which, though not so much necessary for the purpose of this judgment, cannot be overlooked, as it amounts to a serious insinuation against the conduct of the Municipal Chairman. He has apparently been charged with the serious charge of keeping back an application for a license alleged to have been filed by the ijaradar, Faizuddin Bhunja, on the 20th February last. This allegation is a downright falsehood. On the 9th August the accused filed a list of witnesses, including the Chairman of the Municipality, and this list contains a prayer for calling for certain documents from the said witness. But there is no mention of this document in this prayer. The accused could not, previous to the said date, i.e., the 7th August, understand that it was a great flaw in his defence not to apply for a license for the year 1892-93, and in order to cure the defect he has filed another petition on the 23rd August, with a prayer to call for, from the Municipal office, the very documents named in the list filed on the 9th August, and some new ones, including the alleged application alluded to above, and on the 27th evidence was adduced by the defence to prove that the alleged petition was actually submitted to the Chairman. It is strange that the defence has not [660] dared ask the Chairman or the municipal officers any question in connection with this plaint. The witnesses who have sworn to the submission of the application are downright perjurers. The Chairman states that he does not at all recollect to have received any such petition. I need hardly say that such conduct is entirely unbecoming on the part of the accused, who is an Honorary Magistrate and Municipal Commissioner."

The sentence passed not being an appealable one, the matter was brought to the notice of the Sessions Judge, who referred the case to the High Court with the following report:—

"Mukunda Chunder Chatterjee has been fined Rs. 30, under s. 344 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, for allowing a fish, &c., market to be held on land under his management without license under s. 388 of the Act on the 21st May last. Sentence was passed on the 19th September 1882; complaint had been made in the middle of June.

"It was the Vice-Chairman of Madaripur Municipality who instituted the prosecution. The Chairman (the local Assistant Surgeon) had delegated all his duties to the Vice-Chairman under s. 45 of the Act.

"But the Town Committee had not at a meeting passed orders under s. 337 that within certain limits no land should be used as a market for sale of fish, &c., without license. Neither, moreover, had they at a meeting ordered or under s. 353 consented to the prosecution.

"Accordingly both prosecution and conviction appear illegal."

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is a case under the Bengal Municipal Act of 1884, in which the accused has been convicted and sentenced to fine, under s. 344 of Bengal Act III of 1884 for having permitted his land to be used as a market for the sale of provisions as therein specified without a license.

[661] The Sessions Judge has referred the matter to us on revision, recommending on various grounds that the order should be set aside as illegal and improper. We have had the advantage of hearing learned counsel on both sides, and have given the fullest consideration to their arguments, for though the case is apparently a petty one, the points raised are of some importance to the general community.

The case of Moran v. The Chairman of the Motihari Municipality(1), which proceeded on facts almost exactly the same as in the present case, has been cited to us. That was a suit for damages in consequence of the closing of a market by order of the Municipal Commissioners of Motihari, and, after argument of counsel, the learned Judges held that the law placed absolute authority in Municipal Commissioners, acting under the Act of 1884, so as to deprive the appellant of any relief or compensation for disturbance with his previously existing rights as proprietor of a market for which a license was refused. In the present case, amongst other matters, we have been asked to consider the legality of the order purporting to have been passed under s. 337, and whether the Commissioners were not bound to have granted the accused the license for which he applied to continue to hold the existing market for which apparently it is desired to substitute a rival municipal market.

Before proceeding further it may be mentioned that in the preceding November, the accused was convicted of the same offence as that for which he has been again convicted in June. He was then sentenced to a fine of Rs. 51 which was set aside by the Sessions Judge on appeal. He has now for a repetition of the same act, which was then held to be no offence, been again convicted by the same Magistrate and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 30 which sentence is not appealable. We are not prepared to accept the view of the law expressed by the Sessions Judge under which he set aside the previous conviction. We accept the opinion laid down in the case cited to us [Moran v. The Chairman of the Motihari Municipality (1)] that it is entirely within the discretion of the Municipal Commissioners to grant or refuse a license, and the Courts have no longer jurisdiction to control such power, however [662] arbitrarily exercised. The Legislature has thought proper to enact such stringent provisions seriously affecting private property, and it is difficult to believe that they could have had before them the full consequences of such a measure or such a case as that now before us. Fortunately we have the satisfaction in the present case of being able to set aside the orders passed, because the matter has not been properly brought within s. 337, and the whole case therefore fails. We trust, however, that a statement of the whole case from beginning to end, as it has been represented to us and appears on the record, will not be without advantage, and especially to the party now before us.

The prosecution in the present case was by order of the Vice-Chairman. The law (s. 353) directs that no prosecution shall be without the order or consent of the Commissioners; but s. 44 provides that the Chairman shall exercise all the powers vested by this Act in the Commissioners, provided that he do not "exercise any power which is directed to be exercised by the Commissioners at a meeting," and s. 45 permits the "Chairman by a written order to delegate all or any of the duties or powers of a Chairman." A written order giving the Vice-Chairman powers under s. 353 to institute prosecutions under the Act, was passed in March last, and is a sufficient legal authority for the present case. We cannot accept the contention of the learned counsel that, from the nature of the order or consent, it must be given at a meeting of the Commissioners. It seems to us that the Act expressly provides for certain acts to be done at a meeting, and thus draws a clear distinction between such acts and others not at a meeting formally convened. We have been asked to note specially the date of the order of the Chairman, and the fact that it was passed within a few days before the close of the official year (31st March) after which fresh licenses would be necessary for purposes requiring that authority. This may not be without some significance in the present case, if it should appear that the prosecution in it was the result of some private resentment and ill-will towards the accused. It is alleged that an application for a license was made on 20th February. It is not forthcoming, and that it was ever made is denied. It, however, appears that in a petition of the 1st July, asking for a transfer [663] of this case to another Magistrate, it was mentioned and made one of the grounds of the application, and it was also pleaded in the course of the trial as one of the grounds of objection to this prosecution.

The Sessions Judge in referring this case to us has stated that "it may be taken that the Madaripur Bazar site" (that is, the bazar of the accused) "has been for many years past the ground east of the Madaripur khal so far as houses lasted." But apparently the site has shifted from time to time as the bank of the khal was broken away by the action of the stream. The evidence in this case shows, too, that the bazar is not a new one. On the 15th January 1881, the Government of Bengal extended to Madaripur Part IX of the Municipal Act now repealed, and this applies equally to Part X of the Act of 1884, amongst which the law relating to the present case is to be found.

Early in August 1889, the Municipal Commissioners of Madaripur at a meeting passed the following resolution:—"That the provisions of s. 337 of the Municipal Act III (Bengal Act) of 1884 be extended to this municipality." It is contended that, by this order, licenses were necessary to sell at any market any of the provisions mentioned in s. 337 within the municipality, and that the selling of such in a market as defined by s. 336 without a license on his land has rendered the accused liable to prosecution and fine under s. 344. We have no hesitation in holding that the terms of the resolution above mentioned are not an order such as is contemplated by s. 337. That section was extended to the municipality as a part of Part X of the Act by an order of the Government of Bengal, and, therefore, the terms of the resolution are not sufficiently precise so as to convey any definite meaning. They purport only to declare that the Municipal Commissioners do what the Bengal Government had already done some time previously. We have further great doubt whether it was ever intended that s. 337 should be used in the manner attempted in the present case or without some clear ground of public benefit. From the Sessions Judge's remarks it would seem that the municipal market recently established is at some considerable distance from the market of the accused person, and not so conveniently situated. That, however, is of [664] little consequence except to indicate the inexpediency or injustice of the closing of the private market. We observe again that in July 1890, the site of the market was disapproved by the Officiating Assistant Surgeon, because "it was very low with deep ditches surrounded with cess-pools, and has no drainage and no proper road leading to it." He concluded:—

" I should be very sorry to see such a place licensed by the local Municipality for the purposes of a market-place." It was after this that the accused was convicted but acquitted by the Sessions Judge on appeal, so that the report is not necessarily a representation of the present state of the land, nor has the accused ever been directed to improve the land as a condition to obtaining a license. Attempt has rather been made steadily to close this market. It has been stated that the real object is substantial sanitary improvement. While we are at all times most ready to give every credit for such motives, we regret extremely to find very strong reasons for believing that personal motives are rather at the bottom of these proceedings. The Sessions Judge reports that at Madaripur local quarrels and the friction engendered by Municipal politics are very well known. In the proceedings before us we find that the Vice-Chairman is the moving power. The Chairman, who holds the office of Assistant Surgeon, has stated, " I do not remember to have seen the hat this year," and that " when the Vice-Chairman informed me that the accused was again permitting the land to be used as a hat, I told him to do what he deemed proper." At the same time the Chairman states that the accused and the Vice-Chairman are on bad terms. The cause of difference is this case. The Vice-Chairman is not the mukhtear of the Pal Baboos now-a-days. The Pal Baboos are the owners of the land, and the accused is their local agent. We are informed by the counsel for the accused that the Vice-Chairman is the discharged mukhtear of these Baboos, and this has not been contradicted. Taken with local quarrels and friction engendered by Municipal politics, reported by the Sessions Judge, the resentment felt by the Vice-Chairman at his discharge from the service of the Pal Baboos furnishes good reason for believing that the action taken was not prompted by purely public motives, and there is much reason to attach weight to the argument of the learned counsel, that the delegation of power to prosecute [665] given to the Vice-Chairman towards the end of the official year of March last was obtained with the object of injuring those who had ceased to employ the Vice-Chairman as mukhtear. It has, we may add, been made the subject of unfavourable comment that whereas the Subdivisional Magistrate held a regular trial and in convicting the accused passed an appealable sentence in November 1891, in June 1892, after that conviction and sentence had been set aside on appeal, he again tried the accused for a repetition of the same offence, not by the ordinary but by the summary procedure, and passed a sentence not open to appeal. It is very much to be regretted that this course was taken, and particularly after an attempt had been unsuccessfully made by application to the District Magistrate to remove the trial to some other Magistrate.

We set aside the conviction and sentence, as already stated, because no proper order has been passed under s. 337. We trust, however, that the statement we have given at some length of the state of the law and the manner in which the arbitrary powers conferred by it may, and indeed must, not unfrequently be used, will attract attention and lead to some change in the law which will ensure a better administration and afford some security for the maintenance of private rights. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

JUGAL DAS DALAL (Petitioner) v. QUEEN-EMPRESS (Opposite Party).^{*}
[9th February, 1893.]Public nuisance—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 263, 293, 290—Obstruction on tidal navigable river.

The mere fact of an encroachment on a tidal navigable river does not necessarily amount to a public nuisance so as to render a person causing [666] such encroachment liable to punishment under s. 290 of the Penal Code, but there must be evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in s. 268.

In the matter of the petition of Umesh Chandra Kar(1) considered and commented on.

The rule laid down in that case to the effect that any encroachment, however slight, on a tidal navigable river constitutes an offence under s. 290 is too widely stated. Each case should be determined on its own merits, and a decision arrived at as to whether the encroachment has caused an obstruction or not.

The petitioner was charged with having erected a jag in a tidal navigable river, constructed of trees and dams, and thereby having committed offences under ss. 283 and 290 of the Penal Code. There was evidence to show that the jag was about 45 cubits long and 20 cubits broad, and that it was erected on the silted side of the river where it was about 300 hats broad, and that it did not obstruct the ordinary navigation of the river. The lower Court held that the jag could not but cause an obstruction, and convicted the petitioner under s. 283.

Held, that as there was no evidence to show that the petitioner had caused any danger, obstruction, or injury to any person in any public way or line of navigation, the conviction under that section could not be sustained.

Held further, that he could not be convicted under s. 290 as there was no evidence of any obstruction to the ordinary navigation of the river.

IN these three cases the petitioners were charged before the Deputy Magistrate of Chandpur with the commission of offences under ss. 283 and 290 of the Penal Code by causing an obstruction in a navigable river by putting up jags constructed of trees and dams. In the case No. 16 the jag was about 20 cubits broad and about 45 cubits long, and the Magistrate found that this jag in a narrow river only about 300 cubits broad could not but cause an obstruction, and convicted the petitioner under s. 283 and fined him Rs. 5, or in default, sentenced him to four days' simple imprisonment. He further directed the removal of the jag or that it be reduced in size to not more than 5 or 6 cubits in width. The facts of the other two cases were similar to those in No. 16. The petitioners therefore applied to the High Court under the provisions of s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to send for the record and reverse the order of the Deputy Magistrate [667] on the ground that they, the petitioners, had an immemorial right to put up the jags complained of; that there was no evidence or finding that any obstruction was caused to any individual or individuals, and that no one had complained of having been injured thereby; that there was ample space left open at the sides of the jags for navigation by boats, and there could be no obstruction to the public; that the evidence did not support the conviction, and that on it the Magistrate should have held that the act complained of was a lawful act on the part of the petitioners, and that no injury to any person or persons could naturally follow from it.

Upon these applications rules were issued to consider the legality of the conviction and propriety of the sentence, which rules now came on for hearing.

Mr. P. L. Roy, Baboo Basunto Kumar Bose, and Baboo Sattyanand Bose, for the petitioners.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.

Mr. P. L. Roy.—Although the petitioners were charged under ss. 283 and 290 of the Penal Code, the conviction is only under the former section, under which it must be affirmatively proved by the prosecution that an obstruction was caused to a particular individual. There is no such evidence in the present case and no complaint from any injured person. The jags in question were on the silted side of the river, and there is positive evidence for the defence that no boats ever pass that way. These jags have been in existence for many years and there has never been any obstruction to navigation. The case of The Queen v. Khader Moidin (1) and Empress v. Ram Singh (2) are in favour of my contention. It may be contended on the authority of In the matter of the petition of Umesh Chandra Kar (3) that the petitioner in this case is guilty of an offence under s. 290 of the Penal Code; but the facts of that case were entirely different, for it was there proved that the obstruction extended over the whole width of the river with the exception of a small outlet [668] through which boats could only pass by using considerable precaution. It is not laid down in that case that any and every kind of obstruction to a tidal river would bring a case within the purview of s. 290. For the purposes of that section it must be shown that the illegal act or omission must necessarily cause some injury, obstruction, danger, or annoyance to persons who may have occasion to use any public right (see s. 268). None of these elements exist in the present case, and therefore no offence has been committed.

Mr. Kilby.—In the present case, although it is doubtful whether the conviction under s. 283 can be upheld, yet it is clear that a conviction under s. 290, Indian Penal Code, would be proper. No length of time can be held to justify a public nuisance,—see Russell on Crimes, 5th edition, vol. 1, p. 442, and The Municipal Commissioners of the Suburbs of Calcutta v. Mahomed Ali (4).

The facts of this case clearly bring it within the scope of s. 290. Anything which affects the comfort or safety or the community may be indicted as a public nuisance,—see Attorney-General v. Proprietors of the Bradford Canal (5) and Benjamin v. Storr 6. Once the obstruction is admitted, it is no answer to say that sufficient space for the public traffic remains—see Reg v. The United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Company (7). This very point arose in the case of In the matter of the petition of Umesh Chandra Kar (3), and was decided in favour of my contention. I submit the rule should be discharged.

REVISION.

20 C. 665.

In these cases the accused were charged under ss. 283 and 290, Indian Penal Code, that is to say, with doing an act which caused danger, obstruction, or injury to any person in a public way, viz., a particular tidal khal; and secondly, with causing a public nuisance. They have been convicted of the first offence under s. 283 and have been sentenced to fine.

[669] A rule was granted to consider the legality and propriety of the sentence.

We have considered the case on the evidence before us and on the arguments addressed to us by the learned counsel on both sides. Mr. Kilby, who appears in support of the conviction, has cited the case of In the matter of the petition of Umesh Chandra Kar (1) as an authority for his contention that the mere fact of an encroachment on a tidal navigable river necessarily amounts to a public nuisance so as to render the person causing that obstruction liable to punishment under s. 290. We may, however, observe that in the case before us the conviction has not been under s. 290, but under s. 283, and that there is no evidence to show that the accused caused any danger, obstruction or injury to any particular person in any public way. The evidence taken merely shows that the accused put up a jag in this river, that the jag is about 45 cubits long and 20 cubits broad. It is however contended by Mr. Kilby, on the authority of the case already mentioned, that the conviction can be maintained under s. 290, since any encroachment on a navigable river must necessarily be an obstruction and so a public nuisance. We have given careful consideration to the case cited by him and numerous other cases of the English Courts bearing on the subject. On the facts of that particular case there can be little doubt that there was an obstruction. But with every respect for the learned Judges, and after the fullest consideration of the matter, we find ourselves unable to accept the general terms there laid down (and indeed they were not necessary for the purposes of that case) that any encroachment, however slight, on a tidal navigable river would constitute the offence of public nuisance so as to render the person making such encroachment punishable under s. 290 of the Indian Penal Code. It seems to us rather that there must be some evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in s. 268. We may observe that there are circumstances well known to us in connection with large navigable Indian rivers which would render it desirable, if not absolutely necessary, to permit some encroachment from the banks for the protection of [670] the property of private parties, such as the erection of spurs to prevent diluvion.

These have never, that we are aware of, been the cause of any criminal prosecution. This is mentioned only as an instance for showing that the strict application of such a rule is contrary to custom. We are further of opinion that some evidence is necessary; and lastly, that each case should be determined on its own merits, whether an obstruction has or has not been caused so as to come within the Penal Code. In the present cases, too, we find evidence for the defence which goes much further than the evidence for the prosecution (and this, as has already been mentioned, does not establish the case set up), and that is to the effect that there has been no obstruction to navigation by the acts of the petitioners; that although there may have been the erection of these particular jags, the jags nevertheless did not obstruct the ordinary navigation of the river ; and further, that they were on the silted side of the river which, we may conclude, is not ordinarily used for the purposes of navigation. Under such circumstances the conviction and sentence must be set aside, and the fine, if paid, must be refunded. Rule made absolute and conviction quashed.

FORSYTH v. WILSON AND OTHERS.* [10th March, 1893.]

Calcutta Police Act (Bengal Act IV of 1866), ss. 5 and 46—Deputy Commissioner, powers of—Search warrants in gaming cases.

A Deputy Commissioner of Police appointed under s. 5 of the Calcutta Police Act has all the powers of the Commissioner of Police, subject to the control of that officer, that is to say, the Commissioner may at any time set aside any of his orders, or he may give either in writing or verbally or otherwise any special directions with regard to any matter. Apart from such special direction, however, any act of a Deputy Commissioner, [671] provided it be within the powers of the Commissioner, is valid, and no instructions, either in writing or otherwise or general or in regard to specific acts, are necessary to render such act valid.

A Deputy Commissioner has power to issue search warrants under s. 46 of the Act.

THE accused in this case were charged at the instance of an Inspector of Police with offences under ss. 44 and 45 of the Calcutta Police Act, 1866, viz., respectively keeping and being found playing in a gaming-house. It appeared that the prosecution was instituted by the Deputy Commissioner of Police, who issued a search warrant under s. 46 of the Act. There did not appear to have been any sworn information before him with regard to the first accused, who was alleged to be the keeper of the gaming-house in question. The Deputy Commissioner was examined by the Magistrate, and his evidence was to the effect that he had issued the search warrant; that the Commissioner had instructed him to issue search warrants in such cases; that such instructions were verbal and given him when he first became Deputy Commissioner; that he had authority to take evidence in such cases; that informers were sometimes brought to him and sometimes to the Commissioner, and that the latter also issued search warrants; that they were sometimes signed by the Commissioner and sometimes by himself, and that in the absence of the Commissioner he carried on all that officer's duties; that the instruction to issue search warrants given him by the Commissioner was not given him in so many words, but that he was given to understand that he was to issue them. He further deposed to the fact that he was a Magistrate and a Justice of the Peace. The Chief Presidency Magistrate being in doubt as to whether the Deputy Commissioner had power to issue such a warrant, adjourned the further hearing of the case, and referred the question to the High Court under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The following is a copy of the letter of reference:—

"I have the honour to refer, under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for the opinion of the High Court, the following questions arising in the hearing of the case, Inspector Forsyth v. Mrs. Wilson and others, charged under ss. 44 and 45 of Bengal Act IV of 1866, now pending before me.

[672] "I have adjourned the case till the 15th instant, pending the decision of the High Court on the reference—

"1st.—Whether the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Calcutta under verbal instruction from the Commissioner, is empowered to issue search warrants under s. 46 of the said Act?

"2nd.—If so, whether such instructions must be issued in each specific case, or may be issued generally?

"I have the honour to forward herewith a copy of the evidence of Mr. Barnard, the Deputy Commissioner of Police, together with the original search warrant issued."

At the hearing of the reference,

The Standing Counsel (Mr. A. Phillips) appeared on behalf of the Crown.

The accused were not represented.

The opinion of the High Court (TREVELYAN and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows:—

OPINION.

In case this the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta has referred for our opinion two questions:—

1st.—Whether the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, under verbal instructions from the Commissioner, is empowered to issue search warrants under s. 46 of the said Act?

2nd.—If so, whether such instructions must be issued in each specific case, or may be issued generally?

The only section that bears directly upon this question is s. 5 of Bengal Act IV of 1866, which provides—"The said Lieutenant-Governor may from time to time appoint one or more Deputies to the Commissioner of Police, who shall be competent to perform any of the duties assigned to that officer under his orders." It seems to us that the meaning of that section is clear, that the Deputy Commissioner shall have all the powers of a Commissioner subject to the control of that officer, that is to say, the Commissioner may at any time set aside any of his orders, or he may give either in writing or otherwise any special directions with regard to any matter. But, apart from such special direction, any act of the Deputy Commissioner, provided it be within the powers of the Commissioner, is made valid, under that section. We do not think that any question, whether an order is written or verbal, can arise [673] under this construction of that section, nor do we think that any instructions, either in writing or otherwise, or either general or in regard to specific acts are necessary, the Deputy Commissioner being clothed with all the powers of the Commissioner, subject only to what I have said. That, we think, is the only reasonable construction to be given to the Act. Any other construction would place difficulties in the way of the Police, which, we think, the Legislature never intended. That being so, we think what we said above is a reasonable answer to the questions put to us.

CHATTRAPAT SINGH (Petitioner) v. JADUKUL PROSAD MUKERJEE
AND OTHERS (Opposite parties). [17th November, 1892.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 295, 311—Rateable distribution of sale-proceeds—Sale in execution of decree—Execution proceedings—“Decree-holder.”

A person who is not entitled to come in under s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code and share in the distribution of the sale-proceeds, is not included within the term “decree-holder” in s. 311, nor is he entitled to apply under that section to set aside the sale.

Deboki Nundun Sen v. Hart (1) and Lakshmi v. Kuttunni (2) referred to.

[R., 29 C. 548 (554) ; D., 4 C.W.N. 542 (545).]

IN this case the decree-holder, Chattrapat Singh, made an application to be allowed to come in and share in a rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds under s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also to have the sale set aside under s. 311 of the Code, on the ground of irregularity in publishing and conducting it. There were a number of judgment-debtors in this case whose property had been sold by other decree-holders, but the decree of Chattrapat Singh was only against three of the judgment-debtors. The Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, on [674] the 19th March 1892, on the authority of Deboki Nundun Sen v. Hart (1), held that the decree-holder was not entitled to share in a rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds, nor was he entitled to apply to set aside the sale.

The decree-holder, Chattrapat Singh, appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rashbehari Ghose and Baboo Digamber Chatterjee, for the appellant.

Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy and Baboo Herendronath Mitter, for the respondents.

The following cases were referred to during the arguments.—

The judgment of the Court (PIGOT and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

We think that this appeal must be dismissed. By an order made in this case the appellant was held to be not entitled to come in under s. 295 and share in the rateable distribution of the sale proceeds in this case. That order was made by the Subordinate Judge on the 19th of last March. Application was made to this Court to a Divisional Bench, of which one of the present Bench was a member, for a rule under s. 622 for the purpose of having that order of the 19th of March reviewed ; and inasmuch as that order was made in express and direct obedience to the decision of the Court in Deboki Nundun Sen v. Hart (1), referred to in it, we thought that a rule under s. 622 ought not to be granted in respect of a decision of the lower Court clearly following the law as it stood upon the last decided case. The learned pleader for the appellant has asked us in this case, it being an appeal, to examine [675] the decision in Deboki Nundun Sen v. Hart (1),* arguing that it was not one which was wholly satisfactory. Upon this appeal that matter does not arise, because as between the parties in these proceedings the order of the 19th of March is final, and it finally decides that the appellant is not entitled to come in under s. 295 for a rateable distribution. Not being entitled to do that, we think we must hold that he was not entitled, as he has sought to do in the present proceedings, to challenge the sale and to be heard for the purpose of setting it aside under s. 311 of the Code. The case of Lakshmi v. Kattunni (2) decides that a decree-holder who would be entitled to come in under s. 295 is included within the term "decree-holder" in s. 311. It is argued by Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy that that is an erroneous view of the section; but it is not necessary for us to follow the learned pleader in discussing that decision, because that decision certainly goes so far as this, viz., that one who is not entitled to come in under s. 295 certainly is not included within the words "decree-holder" in s. 311. That, we think, is the fair conclusion to be derived from the opinion expressed by the learned Judges in that case, although the point was not actually decided in it. In any case, we are of opinion ourselves that outside of those entitled under s. 295 to come in, the power of applying under s. 311 certainly does not exist; and as the appellant is not such a person, he is not entitled to apply to set aside the sale under s. 311.

The decision of the Court below is therefore right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MOORE.† [12th June, 1893.]

Companies Act (VI of 1882), ss. 35, 252—Magistrate, jurisdiction of—Jurisdiction—“Forfeit”—“Penalty”—Share warrant not duly stamped—Stamps on share warrants—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 32.

There is no distinction between the word "forfeit" as used in s. 35 of the Indian Companies Act and the word "penalty" as used in other sections of the Act, and the omission to duly stamp a share warrant under that section is an offence under the Act punishable by a penalty, to enforce the payment of which a Magistrate has jurisdiction under s. 252.

In a case under s. 35 a Magistrate has no option but to inflict the full fine of Rs. 500 if the offence be proved.

Where a person was charged as being the principal officer of a company, with having issued nine share warrants not duly stamped, in respect of which the penalties claimed under s. 35 amounted to Rs. 4,500, and where it was contended that the infliction of such a penalty was beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, which under the provisions of s. 32 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was limited to inflicting a fine of Rs. 1,000; held, that the issue of each of the nine share warrants was a separate offence, and the fact that several offences had been committed, and therefore that the Magistrate's power to fine would extend to more than Rs. 1,000, was not affected by that section of the Code.

[R., 35 A. 173 (175) = 11 A.L.J. 196 = 14 Cr. L.J. 105 (107) = 18 Ind. Cas. 665.]

THE accused in this case, who was alleged to be the principal officer of a Company known as the "People Printing and Publishing Company, Limited," was charged with an offence under s. 35 of the Indian Companies Act, 1832, namely, issuing certain share warrants of the Company not duly stamped. It appeared that the warrants were in favour of the bearer and were only stamped with a one-anna stamp, whereas it was contended that the proper amount of stamp duty exceeded that amount, being an ad valorem duty which in the case of some of the warrants amounted to 6 annas each and in others to 12 annas.

[677] At the commencement of the hearing of the case before the Magistrate, Counsel on behalf of the accused took the objection that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction in the matter, as he was only empowered under s. 252 of the Act to take cognizance of offences under the Act declared to be punishable by a penalty, and s. 35 inflicted no penalty, but merely a forfeit, and as such was only recoverable by civil process.

The Magistrate thereupon stopped the further hearing of the case and referred the question to the High Court under the provisions of s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The letter of reference was in the following terms:—

"I have the honour to refer the following under the provisions of s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the opinion of the High Court.

"The defendant is charged in the above case under s. 35 of the Indian Companies Act, 1832, with having issued certain share warrants without the same having been duly stamped. Section 35 of the Act declares that 'If a share warrant is issued without being duly stamped, the Company issuing the same, and also every person who at the time when it is issued, is the Managing Director, or Secretary, or other principal officer of the Company, shall forfeit the sum of Rs. 500.'

"It has been contended by Mr. Hyde, for the defence, that this Court has no jurisdiction under the said section, inasmuch as the sum of Rs. 500 is a forfeit and not a 'penalty' within the meaning of the Act, and being a forfeit should be recovered in the Civil Court.

"It appears clear that if a Presidency Magistrate has jurisdiction under s. 35, no discretion is left to him, but in the case of each insufficiently stamped share warrant he is compelled to direct both the defendant and the Company each to forfeit the sum of Rs. 500. This, I apprehend, could scarcely have been the intention of the Legislature. In the present case the defendant is charged with having issued nine share warrants without the same being duly stamped, and s. 35 of the Act would apparently require from him a forfeiture of Rs. 4,500, and also a forfeiture of a like sum from the Company, making a total of Rs. 9,000.

"Mr. Apear, for the prosecution, contended that not only has a Presidency Magistrate jurisdiction, but also that he has discretion as to the amount to be forfeited, and is in no way compelled to enforce the forfeiture of the full amount of Rs. 500.

20 C. 676.

"I would call their Lordships' attention to s. 32 of the Criminal Procedure Code which limits the amount of fine a Presidency Magistrate is empowered to inflict to Rs. 1,000, and s. 35 of the Indian Companies Act would seem to be in direct conflict with this.

[678] "The questions, therefore, on which I have the honour to ask an expression of their Lordships' opinion are—

1. Is the issuing of a share warrant, the same not being duly stamped, an offence within the meaning of Act VI of 1882?

2. Is the forfeiture provided by s. 35 of Act VI of 1882 a penalty within the meaning of s. 252 of the said Act?

3. Having regard to ss. 35 and 252 of Act VI of 1882, has a Presidency Magistrate jurisdiction to impose a forfeit under s. 35 of the Act?

4. If a Presidency Magistrate has jurisdiction, has he any discretion empowering him to impose a lesser forfeit than Rs. 500 in the case of each share warrant?"

At the hearing of the reference—

Mr. Hyde, appeared for the accused.

Mr. T. A. Apcar, for the Crown.

Mr. Hyde.—The only section conferring jurisdiction on the Magistrate is s. 252, and that gives him jurisdiction only in cases where an offence declared to be punishable by a penalty under the Act is disclosed. Section 35 in express terms provides for a "forfeit" and not a "penalty," and by the use of the word "forfeit" it is clear that the Legislature intended something different from a "penalty." This is the only section in the Act which provides for a "forfeit," and it provides that it is to be the specific sum of Rs. 500, and apparently leaves no discretion to the Court as to the amount. In other sections of the Act which provides for penalties, such as ss. 66, 68, 69, 71, 75, the Act provides that the penalty inflicted shall not exceed a specific sum. Some distinction must therefore be drawn between the meaning of the words "forfeit" and "penalty," and when you find that s. 252 gives the Magistrate summary jurisdiction in cases brought before him, it never could have been intended that such jurisdiction should be exercised in cases such as this, where the amount claimed from the accused is Rs. 4,500, as he is charged in respect of nine warrants. In prosecutions under the Stamp Act, the Magistrate has a discretion as to the amount of the penalty he inflicts, and in other sections of this Act where the offences are of a more serious character than under this section, he has a like discretion. This all points to the fact that a civil liability was contemplated by the Legislature and not a summary trial before a [679] Criminal Court. This view is confirmed when you see that s. 35 of the Act is taken verbatim from 33 and 34 Vic., c. 97, s. 127, except that Rs. 500 is substituted for £50. Under that Act (s. 26) it is provided that penalties are to be recoverable by information in the Court of Exchequer in the name of the Attorney-General, thereby showing that a civil and not a criminal liability is incurred. Section 26 of that Act has, it is true, not been incorporated in the Indian Companies Act: but that was unnecessary, as s. 144 of Act X of 1875 has not been repealed by Act X of 1882, and that section provides for the Advocate-General exhibiting informations in the High Court for all purposes for which the Attorney-General may exhibit informations on behalf of the Crown in the Court of Exchequer. The power, therefore, to recover forfeits to the Crown exists, and it must be taken that the Legislature by incorporating s. 127 of the English Stamp Act of 1870 in the Indian Companies Act, did not intend to give greater powers than was given under that Act, as, if such had been the intention, the recovery of a forfeit would have been expressly provided for in s. 252, or the wording of s. 35 altered, to bring it into conformity with the other penal sections of the Act. It is true the marginal note to s. 35 refers to a "penalty;" but so does the marginal note of s. 127 of the English Stamp Act, and marginal notes do not necessarily form portions of the Act.

Mr. T. A. Apcar.—The issuing of a share warrant not duly stamped is an offence under the Act, and is cognisable by the Magistrate under s. 252. There is no distinction between a "forfeit," and a "penalty" as used in the Act. This is shown clearly by the marginal note to s. 35, which is taken from the English Act. In this case it is clear that s. 252 applies, and that the Magistrate has jurisdiction to try the accused for an offence under the Act.

The opinion of the High Court (PRINSEP and TREVELYAN, JJ.) was expressed in the following terms:—

OPINION.

This is a reference from the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta. The defendant is charged under s. 35 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882, with having issued certain share [680] warrants without the same having been duly stamped. Section 35 provides as follows:—"If a share warrant is issued without being duly stamped, the Company issuing the same, and also every person who, at the time when it is issued, is the Managing Director, or Secretary, or other principal officer of the Company, shall forfeit the sum of Rs. 500."

The questions which we are asked are, first—"Is the issuing of a share warrant, the same not being duly stamped, an offence within the meaning of Act VI of 1882?" Second—"Is the forfeiture provided by s. 35 of Act VI of 1882 a penalty within the meaning of s. 252 of the same Act?" Third—"Having regard to ss. 35 and 252 of Act VI of 1882, has a Presidency Magistrate jurisdiction to impose a forfeit under s. 35 of the Act?" and fourth—"If a Presidency Magistrate has jurisdiction, has he any discretion empowering him to impose a lesser forfeit than Rs. 500 in case of each share warrant?"

The first question argued before us is whether the Presidency Magistrate has any jurisdiction to fine a person issuing a share warrant not duly stamped. It was contended that because the word "forfeit" occurs in s. 35 and the word "penalty" occurs in other sections of the Act, a distinction must be made between "forfeit" and "penalty," and that although under s. 252 of the Companies Act, a Presidency Magistrate may deal with an offence declared to be punishable by a penalty, he could not do so in a case under s. 35. It was suggested that the remedy was by information under s. 144 of Act X of 1875, and that, having regard to the fact that there was that remedy, the Legislature had omitted to enact a provision similar to s. 26 of the Stamp Act, 1870 (33 and 34 Vic., c. 97), although they had taken from s. 127 of that Act, the words contained in the last portion of s. 35 of the Indian Companies Act.

This difficulty, if it be one, arises from the Legislature having adopted verbatim a part of the English Statute without adopting the other parts bearing on it, or making it completely correspond in phraseology with the terms of the Indian Bill. It does not appear that the Legislature here really intended to make any distinction between a "forfeit" and a "penalty." In ordinary parlance, those [681] words are usually interchangeable, and in legislative nomenclature they are sometimes used one for the other. In the Stamp Act, to which we have referred, we find that, although the different sections which inflict a fine upon omissions to comply with the provisions of that Act provide that the offending person shall "forfeit" certain sums, s. 26, which provides for the mode of recovering such forfeits, describes them as "penalties." If the contention of the learned Counsel here was correct, and if it were that a penalty and a forfeit were not the same thing, s. 26 of the Stamp Act, 1870, would be meaningless and would have nothing to apply to. We think it quite clear that the Presidency Magistrate has jurisdiction under s. 252 to deal with a charge of the kind in this case.

It is not necessary for us to consider whether there be also a remedy by information under s. 144 of the High Court's Criminal Procedure Act, 1875.

There is no doubt that the omission to stamp a share warrant is an offence under the Indian Companies Act, and it is, as we have shown, an offence declared punishable by a penalty. The Magistrate has jurisdiction.

In this way we answer the first three questions referred to us.

The learned Magistrate refers to s. 32, Code of Criminal Procedure. That section gives him power only to fine up to Rs. 1,000. We do not think that that section affects the present case. Section 35 of the Indian Companies Act inflicts a penalty of Rs. 500 in respect of each share warrant issued without being duly stamped. The issue of each share warrant not duly stamped is a separate offence. The fact that several offences may have been committed, and therefore his power to fine would extend to more than Rs. 1,000, is not affected by s. 32, Code of Criminal Procedure.

The last question is not, we think, a difficult one. Sections 68 and 69, 71, 75, &c., provide for penalties not exceeding certain sums. This distinction of words, we think, makes it quite clear, if it were not otherwise made so, that the Magistrate has no discretion at all. The words of s. 35 are imperative. They provide that if warrants are issued without being duly stamped, the Company and every person, &c., &c., shall forfeit the sum of Rs. 500. This [682] is an express penalty fixed by the Statute for the offence. The Magistrate, if the offence is proved is bound to impose a fine of Rs. 500 in respect of each offence. It is for the Revenue authorities to determine whether they would enforce such penalties.

THE facts in this case were shortly as follows :—

One Rama Nath Goswami, governed by the Bengal school of Hindu law and possessed of considerable property, died on the 12th of October 1884, leaving him surviving his widow, Barahi Debi, and two sons, Debendro Nath Goswami and Jogendro Nath Goswami. Amongst the properties left by him was an undivided one-third share in two houses at Barrackpore.

Debkamini was the owner of the remaining two-thirds of the two houses, and after the death of Rama Nath Goswami she purchased from the elder son, Debendro Nath, his half-share of the one-third [683] left by Rama Nath, and thus became owner of five-sixths undivided shares of the two houses, Jogendro Nath Goswami being the owner of the remaining one-sixth share. Debkamini had the houses repaired under orders from the Cantonment Magistrate, and failing to get Jogendro Nath Goswami to contribute to the extent of his one-sixth share towards the expenses, she brought an action for the amount and asked to have the two properties partitioned. Barahi Debi, the widow of Rama Nath Goswami, had herself added as a party-defendant in the action, and contended that if the two houses were partitioned, she as a Hindu widow was entitled on account of her maintenance to a one-third share of the properties left by her husband, and that as her husband had a one-third share in the two houses, she was entitled to a one-ninth therein. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit against both Jogendro Nath and Barahi Debi, and from that decree Barahi Debi appealed to the High Court.

Sir Griffith Evans, Baboo Saroda Charan Mitter, and Baboo Nando Lal Sirkar, for the appellant.

Mr. Bonnerjee, Dr. Rashbehari Ghose, Baboo Nilmadhub Bose, Baboo Mohit Chandra Bose, and Baboo Atul Krishna Ghose, for the respondents.

Sir Griffith Evans.—The decree of the Subordinate Judge is wrong, for the plaintiff, if she wanted to have the property partitioned in order to get her share, must have the whole of the joint family property partitioned, and cannot select one portion out of the joint estate, simply because she is interested only in that portion. A partition of a joint family property between the members and any stranger who has purchased an interest in a part of the property, must be of the whole estate and not only of a portion of it. Therefore, if the plaintiff wishes to have her share in these two properties declared, she must, in bringing her suit, ask to have the whole of the joint family estate partitioned.

The appellant is clearly entitled to her one-third share of her husband's estate in these two houses, for a wife by her marriage takes an interest in her husband's estate, and on partition of the ancestral estate between sons, their mother takes a share equal to a son's share. The mere fact that the properties in question happen [684] to be one item out of the bulk of the joint estate is no reason why the widow should not have her share in lieu of her maintenance, for a wife's right is declared to extend to every property belonging to her husband. The rights of a Hindu wife, according to the Bengal school, are fully discussed in Wilson, J.'s judgment in Sorolah Dossee v. Bhoobun Mohun Neoghy (1). This right of the wife has been settled for years by the decisions of this Court and of the Privy Council. Where a partition of one item of a joint family estate is enforced by a stranger, the wife is clearly entitled to her share, and the appeal should be allowed with costs.

Mr. Bonnerjee, for the respondents.—The construction put forward by Sir Griffith Evans, that the plaintiff, if she wishes to have her share given to her separately, must have the whole of the joint family property partitioned, simply because the members of the family happen to have a small interest in the property in dispute, is fallacious. The plaintiff has no interest in the other properties of the joint family, so why should she be burdened with the expense of having all their properties partitioned, in order to obtain her share of one item of the properties? No one would ever buy an interest in joint property if those were the conditions under which they would have to purchase. As regards the appellant's right to a one-third share of her husband's estate, she is undoubtedly so entitled, but not to this property. A widow's right is only given to her in lieu of maintenance, and she takes the same interest as one of her sons; but in this case her right does not arise, for the evidence is that the father Rama Nath left very considerable properties which are still undivided, and her right to maintenance will not be affected by the partition of the property in dispute, which is a very small interest in only one item of the joint estate. The widow's right to maintenance does not arise out of every item of property composing the whole of the joint estate, but is only an allowance from the estate sufficient to keep her amply maintained. The right of the widow does not come into existence whenever one property which forms one item of the joint estate is divided and when the bulk of the property remains undivided.

[685] Sir Griffith Evans, in reply contended that if that were so, the widow's right could be defeated by one of the sons selling his interest in each item of property to a different person, and the purchasers obtaining piecemeal partition such as is now asked for.

The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and NORRIS, J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Rama Nath Goswami, a Hindu governed by the law of the Bengal school, and possessed of considerable property, died on the 12th of October 1884, leaving two sons, Debendro Nath Goswami and Jogendro Nath Goswami, and a widow Barahi Debi. Amongst the properties left by him was an undivided two-sixths share in two houses at Barrackpore.

On the 13th of April 1886, one of the sons, Debendro Nath Goswami, sold and conveyed an equal undivided one-sixth share in these houses to the plaintiff Debkamini Debi. A question was raised whether or not she was a benamidar for her husband; but as he has since been added as a plaintiff, that question is not now material.

She had before acquired shares in the houses equal to four-sixths, so that after the purchase of April 13th, 1876, she was the owner of the whole sixteen annas, except the undivided one-sixth which had been inherited by Jogendro Nath from his father Rama Nath. On the 16th of September 1889, the present action was brought by the plaintiff Debkamini Debi against Jogendro Nath Goswami to obtain separate possession by partition of a share equal to five-sixths of the two houses.

On the 13th of May 1890, Barahi Debi, the widow of Rama Nath, was, at her own request, added as a defendant in the suit. She put in a written statement in which she claimed that the property could not be partitioned, as she had a lien upon it for her maintenance, or that, if it were partitioned, a share in it equal to that of each of her sons should be allotted to her.

The Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit against both Jogendro Nath and Barahi Debi, and against that decree Barahi Debi alone has appealed.

The first contention which has been made before us, on her behalf, is that the suit must be dismissed because the plaintiff [686] does not claim to have the whole estate of Rama Nath partitioned, but only these two houses; no authority has been cited before us in support of the proposition, that where a fractional share in a property which forms part of a joint estate has been sold, the purchaser cannot obtain separate possession of the share he has bought without partitioning the whole joint estate, and I think that to give effect to it would practically amount to a refusal to allow the purchaser of such a share to obtain separate possession of it at all; and this would, in my opinion, not only be inequitable, but would greatly diminish the value of property held in this way. I think that this contention must fail.

The next contention—and that is the one which has been most strongly pressed upon us—is, that if any portion of her husband's estate is partitioned, the widow is entitled to have a share of it equal to that of each of her sons allotted to her, and that consequently the one-third share in these houses which was left by Rama Nath must be divided, not into two shares, but into three, of which one must be allotted to the plaintiff. The law on this subject is to be found in the judgment of this Court in the case of Sorolah Dossee v. Bhoobun Mohun Neoghy (1). It is there laid down that upon a partition between sons of their father's estate, their mother takes a share equal to a son's share, but that she takes it from her sons in lieu of, or by way of provision for, that maintenance for which they and their estates are already bound. In other words, when the sons partition the estate out of which the widow is entitled to be maintained, a share must be set apart for her during life. It is evident that to bring this right into existence, there must be a partition of the estate in the sense that it ceases to exist as a joint estate; but it has never been held, and I am not prepared to hold, that this right in the widow comes into existence whenever any property which forms one item of the joint estate is divided, if notwithstanding such division the main estate remains undivided. Of course every case must be determined by its own facts, and there may well be cases in which the main body of the family property is divided, leaving only a small portion joint, and in such a case no doubt the sons would [687] have partitioned the property among themselves, and the right of the widow to have a share set apart for her maintenance would come into existence. That, however, is evidently not the present case; here there is no suggestion that these houses are anything more than a small outlying piece of property, or that the bulk of the family estate does not remain undivided, or that it is not ample for the support of the widow. In my opinion, therefore, this is not such a partition of the family property among the sons as brings this right of the widow into existence, and I think that the Subordinate Judge was right in the conclusion at which he arrived, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

MADAN MANDUL (Petitioner) v. HARAN GHOSE (Opposite Party).^{*}
[15th June, 1893.]

Appeal in Criminal case—Appealable sentence—Costs of complaint in Criminal Court, order on accused to pay—Fine—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 31—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 413.

An order passed by a Magistrate under s. 31 of the Court Fees Act, directing an accused person to pay to the complainant the court-fees paid on the petition of complainant, is no part of the sentence so as to make it a sentence of fine within the terms of s. 413 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and an order therefore sentencing an accused person to 14 days' rigorous imprisonment and to pay the costs is not appealable.

[F., 1 Weir 724; Appl., 11 Cr. L.J. 191 = 4 Ind. Cas. 1130 = 5 M.L.T. 223 = 31 M. 547 = 9 Cr. L.J. 83; Appr., 29 M. 188 (189) = 3 Cr. L.J. 460]

THE petitioner in this case was charged by the opposite party with committing mischief by ploughing up certain indigo plants, and convicted by the Deputy Magistrate, under s. 426 of the Penal Code, in a summary trial and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 14 days. The Deputy Magistrate further directed him to pay the costs, Rs. 3-8.

[683] The petitioner then appealed to the Sessions Judge, who, holding that no appeal lay, converted the petition of appeal into one for revision under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and having gone into the facts of the case refused to refer it to the High Court, and rejected the application.

The petitioner thereupon made the present application to the High Court to send for the records under s. 437 and revise the order of the Sessions Judge, on the ground, amongst others, that the Sessions Judge was wrong in holding that no appeal lay to him, inasmuch as the order to pay the costs amounted to a fine, and two kinds of sentences having been passed, the appeal lay.

The facts relating to the merits of the case and the other grounds taken in the petition to the High Court are not material for the purpose of this report, as the main ground relied on by Counsel in support of the application was that the Sessions Judge was wrong in holding that no appeal lay to him, and this was the only ground dealt with by the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. S. P. Sinha (with him Baboo Sarat Chunder Rai Chowdhry) in support of the petition argued that as the costs directed by the Deputy Magistrate to be paid by the petitioner were, under the provisions of s. 31, cl. IV of the Court Fees Act, ordered to be recovered as if they were a fine imposed by the Court, that portion of the sentence was in fact a fine, and being imposed in addition to imprisonment, rendered the conviction appealable.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and TREVELYAN, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

It is necessary in this application only to refer to one of the grounds taken, which is that, because the Magistrate, in addition to a sentence of 14 days' imprisonment, directed the accused person, under s. 31 of the Court-Fees Act, to pay to the complainant the Court-fee paid on his petition of complaint to the Magistrate, the order is appealable. The learned Counsel contends that inasmuch as the law provides that all such fees ordered to be paid may be recovered as if they were fines imposed by the Court, therefore this part of the sentence must be regarded as a fine, and, superadded to the sentence of imprisonment, makes the order appealable. We do not accept this view of the law. The order [689] under s. 31 of the Court Fees Act is no part of the sentence so as to make it a sentence of fine within the terms of s. 413, Code of Criminal Procedure. The order is therefore not appealable. This application is refused.

CRISP (Defendant) v. WATSON (Plaintiff).^{*} [29th June, 1893.]

Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 16 (e), proviso—Recorder of Rangoon, jurisdiction of.

The plaintiff sued in the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon to recover damages for trespass on land in his own possession situate outside the limits of the original jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court; asking at the same time for an injunction restraining the defendant from further acts of trespass. Both plaintiff and defendant resided within the limits of the original jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court. Held—(1) that the plaintiff having alleged that the land was in his possession, was not entitled to the benefit of the proviso to s. 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and (2) that a suit for damage to land cannot be said to be a suit for which relief can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant, even though it may be joined with a claim for an injunction; and that for the above reasons the Recorder had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

THIS was a suit brought in the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon to recover damages for trespass and for an injunction.

The plaintiff alleged that on the 27th March 1891, at a time when he was in possession of a piece of land, known as Extra Suburban allotment, 3rd class, No. 455, Kokine Circle, the defendant and his servants broke into and entered upon this land and cut and carried away a quantity of grass growing thereon; he claimed Rs. 500 as damages, and asked for an injunction restraining the defendant from further acts of trespass.

[690] The land in suit was situate just without the limits of the original jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court; but both the plaintiff and the defendant resided within such limits.

The defendant contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the case; but that if jurisdiction were found, he by way of counterclaim asked for damages against the plaintiff for an alleged trespass on some adjoining land.

The learned Recorder held that under s. 16 (e) of the Civil Procedure Code he had jurisdiction, and on the merits found for the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee (with him Baboo Umakali Mookerjee), for the appellant contended that the Recorder had no jurisdiction.

Mr. Ackworth (with him Mr. Eddis), for the respondent contended that the plaintiff was not even suing the owner, nor did the plaintiff claim any title to the land; and as to the prayer for an injunction cited Rajmohun Bose v. East Indian Railway Company (1), and on the question of jurisdiction referred to the cases of Bagram v. Moses (2) and Juggodumba Dossee v. Wordie (4) and also cited Chintaman Narayan v. Madhavray Venkatesh (5).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C. J., and GHOSE, J.) was delivered by PETHERAM, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Recorder of Rangoon, and for the purpose of what I have to say the simplest way is for me to read the plaint, which is a very short one. The plaint states that "the plaintiff was, on the 27th day of March 1891, in possession of a piece of land known as Extra Suburban allotment, 3rd class, No. 455, Kokine Circle, Hmawbi Township, Hanthawaddy district.

[691] "2. The defendant, on the said 27th day of March 1891, and while the plaintiff was in possession as aforesaid, broke into and entered upon the said land, accompanied by certain servants, and cut and took and carried away a quantity of grass growing upon the said 'land' and the plaintiff claims, first, Rs. 500 damages for the wrong complained of, and for the costs of the suits; and 2nd, an injunction restraining the defendant from any repetition of the acts referred to."

Upon the plaint being filed the defendant took various objections. The first objection which he took was that the land was outside the limits of the Rangoon Municipality, and that therefore the Recorder of Rangoon had no jurisdiction to try the suit; and he also took objections on the merits.

The learned Recorder, who tried the cause, came to the conclusion that he had authority to try the cause by virtue of the proviso to s. 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the plaintiff was right on the merits, and he gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 500 damages, that being the amount which the plaintiff himself claimed, and he gave the plaintiff an injunction. From that decree the defendant has appealed, and both points have been argued before us.

We think that the Recorder of Rangoon had no jurisdiction to try the suit at all, and that being the case, it would be improper for us to express any opinion as to the merits, inasmuch as we have no more jurisdiction to do so than the Recorder had.

It is admitted, in fact it is part of the case of both parties, that the land in respect of which the trespass mentioned in the plaint is said to have been committed lies outside the limits of the Municipality of Rangoon; and outside the civil jurisdiction of the Recorder of Rangoon; and it has not been contended, and it cannot be contended, that the Recorder had any jurisdiction to try this suit unless it comes within the proviso upon which he relies.

The proviso is a proviso to s. 16, and the portion of the section which applies to this suit is as follows:—"Subject to the pecuniary or other limitations prescribed by any law, suits for the determination of any right to or interest in immoveable property or for compensation for wrong to immoveable property, shall be [692] instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate." The plaint which I have just read is a plaint for compensation for wrong to immoveable property, with an added claim for an injunction to restrain the defendant from continuing the wrong, and it is clear that unless it is within the proviso it is within the intention of the section, which says that such a suit, that is to say, a suit for compensation for wrong done to immoveable property, shall be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate. The proviso is, "provided that suits to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property held by or on behalf of the defendant may, when the relief sought can be entirely obtained through his personal obedience, be instituted either in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate or within the local limits of whose jurisdiction he actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain." Now, it is not disputed that the defendant does reside within the local limits of the Recorder's Court, and the view which the learned Recorder has taken is that, that being so he has jurisdiction to try this particular suit against this particular defendant.

Let us look at the proviso and the plaint. The plaint, as I said just now, is for damages for a trespass, said to have been committed on the 28th March 1891, upon land which is said, in the plaint, to be in the possession of the plaintiff, and the question is, can it come within the meaning of the proviso? The proviso relates to immoveable property held by or on behalf of the defendant, and it cannot be contended, it seems to us, that when the plaintiff, for the purpose of obtaining damages for the purpose of founding his action, alleges that the property is in his possession and has been trespassed upon by the defendant, he is at liberty to say, for the purpose of bringing it within this proviso, that it is held by the defendant. Therefore we think that it cannot come within the proviso, it being land not held by the defendant according to the plaintiff's own case.

But in addition to that we do not think that a claim for damage to land can be said to be a claim which can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant, even though it may be joined with a claim for an injunction.

[693] For these reasons we think that this was not within the proviso of s. 16, and that the Recorder of Rangoon had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit, and that as this objection was taken at the trial, this appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

The share of a partner in a partnership business is "saleable property" within the meaning of those words in s. 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and can therefore be attached and sold by an execution creditor in execution of a decree against that partner.

Dwarika Mohun Das v. Luckhimoni Dasi (1), Tuffuzzul Hossein Khan v. Raghu Nath Pershad (2), Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (3), and Parvatheesam v. Bepanna (4) referred to (5).

IN this case the decree-holders put in a petition stating that the judgment-debtor, Iswar Chunder Roy Chowdhry, was the owner of a two-anna share of a certain partnership business, and prayed the Court to order realization of the unsatisfied portion of the decree by attachment and sale of the said two-anna share. The Judge made an order on the petition that "the prayer for sale of the share in the partnership is rejected."

From this order the decree-holders appealed to the High Court.

The judgment of the Court (MACPHERSON and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The sole question in this appeal is whether an execution creditor can attach and sell in execution of his decree the share of his debtor in a partnership business. The decree-holder in this case applied for the attachment of a 2-anna share belonging to the judgment-debtor in two trading firms, and the District Judge, after issuing notice of attachment, rejected the prayer for sale on the ground that a share in a partnership business could not be sold in execution of a personal decree against the partner. We are of opinion that this decision cannot be sustained. It is true that in the case of Dwarika Mohun Das v. Luckhimoni Dasi (1) it was held that a debt alleged to be due from one partner to another could not be attached and sold. But that case did not go so far as to lay down that a share in a partnership business could not be attached and sold in execution of a decree against one of the partners, provided that the execution proceeded in a proper manner. That case was in fact decided upon the authority of the case of Tuffuzzul Hossein Khan v. Raghu Nath Pershad (1), in which their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a claim as between two partners which had been referred to arbitration could not under the peculiar circumstances of that case be attached and sold in execution of a personal decree against one of the partners. It has nowhere, however, been laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that the interest of one of the partners in a firm cannot be attached and sold in execution of a personal decree against that partner. On [695] the contrary, in the case of Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (2) their Lordships remarked as follows:—

"But, however nice the distinction between the rights of a purchaser under a voluntary conveyance and those of a purchaser under an execution sale may be, it is clear that a distinction may, and in some cases does, exist between them. It is sufficient to instance the seizure and sale of a share in a trading partnership at the suit of a separate creditor of one of the partners. The partner could not himself have sold his share so as to introduce a stranger into the firm without the consent of his co-partners, but the purchaser at the execution sale acquires the interest sold, with the right to have the partnership accounts taken in order to ascertain and realize its value." As a matter of fact, the interest of a partner in a partnership business is liable to be seized and sold in England in execution of a personal decree against that partner in favour of third parties, and there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure which in our opinion operates to prevent a similar course of proceeding in this country. We think, too, that the words in s. 266 of the Code, "saleable property, moveable or immoveable, belonging to the judgment-debtor," are sufficiently wide to include the interest which he possesses in a partnership business. It is true that, as pointed out by the Privy Council, the partner could not have himself sold his share so as to introduce a stranger into the firm without the consent of his co-partners; but the share might be sold with their consent; it may be sold by the Court. We therefore think that it is "saleable property" within the meaning of the words in s. 266. If this were not so, it is clear that a person by entering into a partnership might secure for himself complete immunity as against his private creditors. The case of Parvatheesam v. Bepanna (3), to which reference has been made in the course of the argument, was in some respects different from the present. In that case the partnership had been dissolved by the death of one of the partners, and a creditor in execution of a decree against the son of that deceased partner attached and brought to sale, and himself purchased, the right which the son had to sue for an [696] account and to recover what might be found due to the estate of his father. The Court held that the sale was good in law and that the purchaser was entitled to sue for an account and to receive such sum as might be found due to the partnership account. In the present case the partnership is apparently still subsisting, and we think that the decree-holder is entitled to attach the partnership property, that is to say, the two shops mentioned in the application. If the decree is not satisfied, he may proceed to put up to sale the 2-anna share in the partnership business which it is alleged belongs to his judgment-debtor. If any such sale takes

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Gordon.

WASI IMAM AND ANOTHER (Decree-holders) v. POONIT SINGH AND ANOTHER (Judgment-debtors).^{*} [25th April, 1893.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, Art. 179, cl. 4—Application for execution of decree—Step-in-aid of execution—Application to record certificate of payment by judgment-debtor in part satisfaction—Civil Procedure Code, s. 25.

An application made by some of the judgment-debtors (and signed by the decree-holders) to have certain payments, which were made out of Court, certified under s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that time be allowed to pay the balance of the decree, the attachment put upon their property continuing, is "a step-in-aid of execution" such as will keep the decree alive within the meaning of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, art. 179, cl. 4.

[F.. 8 O.C. 161 (165); Appl., 38 B. 47 = 15 Bom. L.R. 930 = 21 Ind. Cas. 407 (409).]

[697] THIS was an application for execution of a decree, dated the 27th December 1887. Execution of the decree was taken out on the 23rd April 1888, and on that date the judgment-debtors put in a petition (which was signed by the decree-holders by their pleader) asking to have the sum of Rs. 93, which had been paid out of Court to the decree-holders, certified under s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, and asking for six months' time to pay off the remaining amount due under the decree. On the 25th April the execution proceedings were struck off. The judgment-debtors failed to satisfy the decree, and on the 8th of April 1891 the decree-holders applied for attachment and sale of the judgment-debtors' properties to satisfy their decree. The Subordinate Judge of Patna held that the application of the 23rd of April 1888 was a step in aid of execution, and hence was not time-barred. The District Judge on appeal reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge, holding that the petition of the 23rd of April was not a step taken in aid of execution such as the law requires to be taken in order to keep the decree alive, and declared the execution was barred.

The decree-holders appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Saligram Sing, for the appellants.

Baboo Tarit Mohun Das, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (GHOSE and GORDON, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The sole question involved in this appeal is whether the application that was made by the judgment-debtors, and consented to by the decree-holders, on the 23rd April 1888, was an application to take some step in aid of execution of the decree obtained by the decree-holders.

We are disposed to think that this was a joint application by both the judgment-debtors and the decree-holders; and what was asked for in the said application was, as we understand it, that a certain amount of money paid to the decree-holders out of Court might be certified in accordance with the provisions of s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that six months' time might be allowed to the judgment-debtors for payment of the balance of [698] the decretal money, the attachment that had been put upon the property of the judgment-debtors being allowed to continue.

The Court upon this application made an order in accordance with the request of the parties.

The question whether an application like this might be regarded as an application to take some step in aid of execution was considered in a case decided by this Court, Tarini Das Bandyopadhyaya v. Bishtoo Lal Mukhopadaya (1), and it was there held that an application by a judgment-creditor to bring an execution proceeding on the file, and to record his certificate of the payment of a sum of money by the judgment-debtor, is an application to take some step in aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of cl. 4, art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act. And we find that this case was followed by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Muhammad Husain Khan v. Ram Sarup (2). There is also another case of the Allahabad High Court to the same effect, Sitla Din v. Sheo Prasad (3).

We think that (although the matter is not free from doubt) we ought to adopt the rulings of this Court and the Allahabad High Court in this case; and following these rulings, we hold that the application which was made, and which we regard as the joint application of both the parties concerned, gave the decree-holders a fresh start of time.

We observe that the lower Court assigns another reason for holding that the decree is barred by limitation, and that is, that the application that was made on 23rd April 1888 was not an application by the whole body of judgment-debtors, but by some of them; but we do not think that that makes any difference in the principle which ought to govern us in this matter, because explanation 1 of art. 179 of the Limitation Act, among other matters, provides that "where a decree or order has been passed jointly against more persons than one, the application if made against any one or more of them, or against his or their representatives, shall take effect against them all." That, we think, is an authority for holding that the application made by the decree-holders in this case, the decree being a joint decree against all [699] the judgment-debtors, saves the decree-holders from being barred by limitation.

The result is that the order of the Court below is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored, with costs.

BAIKANTHA NATH DAS (Complainant) v. LOLIT MOHUN SARKAR
(Accused).^{*} [23rd May, 1893.]

Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), ss. 2, 230, 270, sub-s. (4)—“Notification,” meaning of—“Order” under Bengal Act V of 1876, ss. 234, 249, 250—Extension of Municipal Act to Balasore—Order notified.

The word “notification” in s. 2, Bengal Act III of 1884, includes an order made under s. 234 of Bengal Act V of 1876.

An order, therefore, made and notified under s. 234 of Bengal Act V of 1876, extending the provisions of chapter VII of the Act, is, under the provisions of s. 2, Bengal Act III of 1884, to be deemed to have been made and notified under the provisions of the Act of 1884.

THIS was a reference to a Full Bench made by Mr. JUSTICE PIGOT and Mr. JUSTICE HILL. The order of reference was as follows:—

“In this case the Sessions Judge of Cuttack has submitted, for the orders of this Court, in revision, the record of a case in which the Deputy Magistrate of Balasore has tried and convicted Lolit Mohun Sarkar, under s. 270, sub-s. (4) of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, and sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 10 for making an excavation within the limits of the Municipality of [700] Balasore, without obtaining the permission of the Municipal Commissioners, in contravention of the provisions of s. 232 of the Act.

“Section 232 empowers the Commissioners to prohibit by a general order the making of excavations for the purpose of taking earth or stone therefrom, or for the purpose of storing rubbish or offensive matter therein, and the digging of cess-pools, tanks, or pits without special permission previously obtained from them: and breach of such prohibitory order is punishable under s. 270, sub-s. (4).

“Sections 232 and 270, sub-s. (4), are a re-enactment of the provisions of ss. 249 and 250 of Bengal Act V of 1876, which was repealed by the Act of 1884. The old sections differ from the new a little in respect of the language used, but substantially the provisions of the old and of the new sections are the same.

“No question is raised in this reference (nor does any appear to have been raised in the case) as to the defendants having done such acts as would justify the conviction, if ss. 232 and 270 were and are in force in the Balasore Municipality, and if a prohibitory order was in force there, such as is contemplated by s. 232 when the Acts complained of were done.

“For the defence it was contended that Part VI of the Act of 1884 (of which ss. 232 and 270 form a part) has not been extended to the Municipality of Balasore, and further, that the Municipal Commissioners did not prohibit the digging of any tank, etc., within the municipal limits under s. 232 of that Act.

“Sections 220, 221, and 222 of the Act are as follows:—

‘220. No provision contained in this Part, or in Parts VII, VIII, IX or X, shall apply to any Municipality, unless and until it has been expressly extended thereto by the Local Government in the manner provided by the next succeeding section.

^{*} Letter of Criminal Reference No. 327, from Baboo B. L. Gupta, Sessions Judge of Cuttack, dated 20th August 1892, from the conviction of Baboo Nobin Chunder Dey, Deputy Magistrate of Balasore, dated 15th July 1892.

'221. The Commissioners may apply, in pursuance of a resolution passed at a meeting specially convened to consider the question, to the Local Government, to extend to the Municipality all or any of the provisions of this Part or of Parts VII, VIII, IX or X; or to exclude from the operation of the said provisions, or any of them, any place within the Municipality.

[701] 'And the Local Government may thereupon make an order accordingly.

'222. Every such order shall be published in the Calcutta Gazette, and the Commissioners shall, within fifteen days of such publication, cause a copy of the same, with a translation thereof into the vernacular of the district, to be posted up at their office, with a notice of the date on which such order shall take effect, and shall cause the same to be published as prescribed in section three hundred and fifty-four.

'And the said provisions shall come into force in the Municipality from the date so fixed.

'Provided that the date so fixed shall not be less than fifteen days after the publication under the said section, or more than three months after the publication of the order of the Local Government as aforesaid in the Calcutta Gazette.'

"These sections are similar to ss. 233 and 234 of the old Act, so far as it related to the extension of chap. VII of that Act to Municipalities: chap. VII of the old Act corresponds to Part VI of the new; Part VI of the present Act contains some provisions not contained in chap. VII of the old. There is a difference of some importance between the provisions of s. 234 of the old Act and s. 221 of the new, which will be hereafter noticed.

"No order has been made by the Local Government under the provisions of s. 221, extending Part VI of the new Act to the Municipality of Balasore: nor has any prohibitory order been made by the Municipal Commissioners of Balasore under the provisions of s. 232 of the Act.

"The provisions of chap. VII of the old Act are found by the Deputy Magistrate to have been 'by a general notification, dated the 12th October 1876, published in the Calcutta Gazette, Part I, of the 18th October 1876,' extended to the Municipality of Balasore; and the Deputy Magistrate also finds that an order was made by the Municipal Commissioners of Balasore on the 26th August 1881, 'prohibiting the opening of new holes or tanks, etc., within the Municipality without the previous sanction of the Municipal Committee.' No question arises on this reference as to the fact of the extension of chap. VII of the old Act to this Municipality, or as to the due issue of a prohibitory order under s. 249 of the old Act.

[702] "The Deputy Magistrate held that the notification of October 1876, which extended, under s. 234 of the old Act, the provisions of chap. VII of that Act to the Municipality of Balasore, must, under s. 2 of the present Act, be deemed to be operative under the present Act, so as to render the provisions of Part VI of the new Act in force in Balasore. He therefore held that ss. 232 and 270 of the new Act were in force in that Municipality: he held that the prohibitory order of the 26th August 1881 [which he found as a fact to have been issued] was also in force as a prohibitory order duly made under the present Act and he convicted the defendant.

"The decision in point of law so arrived at is in conflict with the ruling of this Court in the case of Horodeb Das Agurwalla v. The Municipality of Kushtea, decided on the 24th March 1891, and for this reason the case has been referred to us under s. 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge.

"The decision of this Court in the case in question has not been reported. We append a copy of it to this reference.

"We do not attempt to summarise the purport of the decision, for upon a question of this sort the whole judgment relating to it must necessarily be read together. The following passage taken from the concluding portion of the judgment may be conveniently introduced here as stating the proposition as to which we were asked, upon argument on behalf of Government, to make this reference, should we feel a doubt which should justify us in referring the case:—

'The notification of the 22nd March had no legal effect at all. It was the order of the Lieutenant-Governor, dated 18th March 1882, which had the effect of applying the provisions of the old Act to the Kushtea Municipality. It is quite true that it is required that such order shall be published in the Calcutta Gazette.' But it is not a notification within the meaning of the present Act. Section 2 of the present Act contains no words, saving 'all orders made.'

"Mutatis mutandis, this applies precisely to the present case: in this case the notification of October 18th, 1876, recites the order, of date previous to it, extending chap. VII of the old Act to Balasore.

"The Deputy Legal Remembrancer asked to be heard in argument against the decision. He stated that the Government of [703] Bengal and, as we understood him, the Government of India also, were desirous of having it, if possible, reconsidered, because the interpretation given to the term 'notification' is of great importance owing to the general use of the term with reference to acts of Government: and is not that which it has hitherto been by the Local Government supposed to bear. He asked that we should hear arguments upon the case with a view to a reference to a Full Bench, and we thought that we ought to hear him.

"The question is one, as it appears to us, of difficulty; but upon the whole we have come to the conclusion that in the absence of authority we should hold that by force of s. 2 of the present Act, and of the order notified under the former Act, s. 232 and s. 270, sub-s. (4) are in force in the Municipality of Balasore. Being of that opinion, it becomes our duty to refer the case to a Full Bench.

"We think that the general scope of s. 2 points to the intention that the system of Municipal administration prevailing in the Mufassal Municipalities at the time the Act was passed should continue in force as it then existed: and should do so in virtue of the provisions of this section: and a very large part of this system depended upon the extension to numerous Municipalities of the sections of the old Act which corresponded with the sections contained in Part VI of the present, and of the machinery in operation under those sections. The question seems to be whether, reading the section by the light of the intention which we ascribe to it, the term 'notification' in the section does or does not include an order made and published under the provisions of s. 234 of the old Act? If the question were res integra, we should hold that it did. The term 'notification' is not defined in this Act or in any other, as far as we are aware; and, indeed, the only thing certain with respect to its meaning is that it is constantly used in Indian legislation in different enactments with wholly different meanings. It is used sometimes in its primary meaning, signifying merely an announcement, sometimes as an authoritative announcement, constituting in itself an effective act of some subordinate authority : as by Port Commissioners, by Canal Officers, by Collectors, and in the present Act it is used with reference to certain acts of Municipal Commissioners of this nature.

[704] " But it is also used to denote in itself an act of Government, as contrasted with a mere announcement of an act of Government. In the present Act it is certainly so used, as for example in s. 8, under which Government may extend the Act to any town or village, etc.; s. 9 under which Government may vary the limits to any Municipality, etc. In each of these sections 'notification' is used to denote the effective act itself, which is done by Government. It is certain that the term 'notifications' in s. 2 is used to denote not merely notifications strictly so-called, that is mere announcements, but also notifications which are themselves acts of Government, and as such are, in fact, orders.

" We think that regard must be had to this, as well as to what we think is the general scope of s. 2, in coming to a conclusion upon the question whether in that section the word includes an order made and published under s. 234 of the old Act.

" A notification by Government must needs either itself be, or be preceded by, an order ; the fact that a notification is in existence involves the fact that the order which it promulgates has been made. The order published in the Calcutta Gazette, as required by s. 234 of the old Act, constituted a notification. When a notification is by legislation made necessary in respect of an order promulgated under an Act, we think that the act of Government, which is so made complete, may properly be held to be included in 'notification' which is, on the one hand, needed to make the order complete, and on the other, could not have come into existence without an order, and therefore necessarily implies one.

" We think that the term 'notification' in s. 2 must be held to include an 'order notified'; and therefore the order extending the chap. VII of the old Act to Balasore must be treated as saved by the operation of the section ; and that therefore ss. 232 and 270, sub-s. (4) as being substantially identical with the provisions of the old Act, above referred to, are by virtue of that order and of the third and fourth paragraphs of that section, now in force in the Municipality of Balasore.

" We think it desirable to refer to two arguments against the opinion which we have formed, which arise upon a consideration of the Act.

" [705] One is that nothing could have been simpler than to have expressly provided in the new Act that the provisions in it, which correspond to those of chap. VII of the old Act, should be in force in Municipalities to which that chapter had been extended. The absence of any such provision is no doubt an argument against the view urged upon us on behalf of Government, and which we have adopted.

" The second arises upon ss. 220, 221, and is that to which we have said at the commencement of this reference that we must advert. Section 220 provides, in very strong and explicit terms, that no provision in Part VI, etc., shall apply, etc., unless and until it has been expressly extended, etc., etc., in the manner provided by the next succeeding section. Section 221 provides that the resolution of the Commissioners to apply for the extension of the part or parts of the Act referred to is to be passed at a meeting to be specially convened for the purpose, differing in this respect from s. 234 of the old Act.

"There is no doubt that the terms of these sections constitute a serious difficulty in the way to the conclusion at which we have arrived.

"We think, however, that the intention attributed by us to s. 2 in the earlier part of this reference must have the effect of negating any inference to be drawn either from the omission which we have first adverted to, or from the terms of the last mentioned two sections. In short, we think we must accept the fact that the Act is imperfectly drawn, and treat the general intention as overriding difficulties arising from the frame of particular sections, or the omission from the Act of what we might have expected to find there. We, therefore, refer to the Full Bench the following questions:—

First.—Whether the case of Horodeb Das Agurwalla v. The Municipality of Kushtea was rightly decided?

Second.—Whether the order extending the provisions of chap. VII of Act V of 1876 to the Municipality of Balasore was saved by the operation of s. 2 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884?

Third.—Whether, under the provisions of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, and upon the facts as found by the Deputy Magistrate [706] in the present case, s. 232 and s. 270, sub-s. (4) were and are in force in the Municipality of Balasore, so as to make the convention in the present case valid in law?"

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.

No one appeared for the accused.

The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench (PETHERAM, C.J., PRINSEP, NORRIS, PIGOT and GHOSE, JJ.):—

OPINIONS.

The question referred to this Full Bench arises under s. 2 of Bengal Act III of 1884, which is as follows:—

"On the commencement of this Act, the enactment specified in the sixth schedule shall be repealed to the extent mentioned in the third column thereof.

"But this repeal shall not revive any office, authority or thing abolished by any such enactment, or affect the validity of anything done or suffered, or any right, title, obligation, or liability accrued before the commencement of this Act.

"And all rules and bye-laws prescribed, assessments, valuations, measurements, divisions and appointments made, powers conferred, and notifications published under any such enactment, and all other rules (if any) now in force and relating to the matters hereinafter dealt with, shall (so far as they are consistent with this Act) be deemed to have been respectively prescribed, made, conferred, and published hereunder.

"And all references to any such enactment shall (so far as may be practicable) be deemed to be made to this Act.

"And all proceedings now pending, which may have been commenced under any such enactment, shall be deemed to be commenced under this Act.

"In respect of all the matters aforesaid, the Commissioners under this Act shall be substituted for the Commissioners elected or appointed under the Bengal Municipal Act, 1876."

Act V of 1876 is one of the Acts mentioned in sch. VI of the Act.

The question is, whether an order made under s. 234 of that Act, extending to the Municipality of Balasore the provisions of chap. VII of the Act is, under the provisions of s. 2 [707] of the Act of 1884, "to be deemed" to have been made under the provisions of the Act of 1884. If so, the provisions of ss. 232 and 270, sub-s. (4) of the Act of 1884 are in force in Balasore, inasmuch as they are a re-enactment of the provisions of ss. 249-250 of Act V of 1876, which were part of chap. VII of that Act.

The decision of the question depends upon the effect to be given to the word "notification" in s. 2 of the Act of 1884, that is, whether "orders" made under s. 234 of the old Act can be held to be included within the term "notification" as used in that section.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the term "notification" as used in the section does include such an order, although, no doubt, if the word be interpreted in its original and primary sense, it could not be held to do so. We think that, having regard to the reasons stated in the order of reference before us, the term "notification" must be held to include an "order notified," notwithstanding the difficulties which arise from the manner in which the Act is framed, and which are pointed out in the judgment of this Court in the case of Horodeb Das Agurwalla v. The Municipality of Kushtea, as well as in the order of reference in the present case.

The questions referred to this Full Bench must therefore be answered as follows:—

The first question in the negative.

The second question in the affirmative.

The third question in the affirmative.

The conviction had in the present case must therefore be affirmed.

NORRIS, J.—After reading the order of reference in this case, and considering the line of argument therein adopted, I am not prepared to say that a "notification" may not include "an order notified," and therefore, though with much hesitation, I concur in the judgment just delivered.

THIS was a reference to a Full Bench made by MACPHERSON and BEVERLEY, JJ. The following is the order of reference:—

"The facts in these five appeals are very simple. The plaintiffs are the proprietors of a certain village, called Barakahali, and they brought these suits to oust the defendants from certain lands which they are cultivating in the said village. It appears that some years ago there was a dispute regarding these lands between the plaintiffs and the trustees of the late Dwarka Nath Tagore, who claimed them as the reformed lands of village Modhupur, and on the 26th May or June 1877 (the month is in some places given as May and elsewhere as June), the plaintiffs were dispossessed of the lands in consequence of an order of the Magistrate who, in a proceeding under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, declared possession to be with the trustees (whom we may call the Tagores). It is found by the lower Courts that the defendants were then settled on the land by the Tagores, but that they had not acquired a right of occupancy at the time these suits [709] were brought in January 1889. Meanwhile, in 1878, the plaintiffs had sued the Tagores for possession of these lands and obtained decrees which were confirmed by this Court on appeal. The date of the decrees does not appear ;* but it seems that, on 27th January 1886, the plaintiffs took possession of the lands as against the Tagores, and they now bring these suits to eject as trespassers the defendants, who were holding the lands as tenants of the Tagores. The plaintiffs have not received rent from the defendants or in any way admitted their tenancy, and no question of their being settled ryots is raised. The First Court decreed the suits in favour of the plaintiffs, but these decrees have been reversed by the District Judge on the authority of the case of Mohima Chunder Shaha v. Hazari Pramanik (1).

"In that case, which is directly in point, it was held that a person who entered on land as ryot and tenant of a trespasser, and who had not acquired a right of occupancy, was a "non-occupancy ryot," within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), and could not be ejected as a trespasser by the true owner when he recovered possession of the estate. This decision was followed in an unreported case (Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 231 of 1889), in which one of the deciding Judges was one of the Judges who decided the case of Mohima Chunder Shaha v. Hazari Pramanik (1).

"As we are unable to follow these decisions, the correctness of which we question, we must refer the cases for the decision of a Full Bench. Under the old Tenancy Act (VIII of 1869), a ryot who had not acquired a right of occupancy and whose tenancy had not been acknowledged by the true owner was under the circumstances stated treated as a trespasser who could be ejected without notice—(Appeals from Appellate Decrees

Nos. 2092 and 2093 of 1884, decided by Wilson and Beverley, JJ., and unreported.)

"We are not, as at present advised, disposed to hold that the new Act has in this respect made any changes in the law. It greatly facilitates the acquisition of a right of occupancy, and makes [710] non-occupancy ryots more secure in their holdings than they were before. But, as pointed out in Zoolfun Bibee v. Radhica Prosonno Chunder (1), an occupancy right was, and apparently still is, a right which, by virtue of the law, grows up in the ryot from the mere circumstance of cultivating the land for a particular length of time, and consequently it could be acquired under a trespasser.

"But a person who has no right of occupancy must, in order to be protected from ejectment, be a tenant; and it does not seem to us that the new Act creates a tenancy where no tenancy before existed, or that it lays down any new rule as to what is necessary to create the relationship of landlord and tenant. A person may possibly be a ryot who is not a tenant within the meaning of the definition.

"It was contended before us that the present Tenancy Act does not apply to the present case, as the right to eject the defendants accrued before it came into force, and is not taken away by it.

"The decrees are not filed, but we may point out that the plaintiffs took formal possession as against the Tagores after the Act came into force. Moreover, as the District Judge finds in the case of Mohima Chunder Shaha v. Hazari Pramanik (2), plaintiffs not only obtained their decrees, but took possession before the Act came into force. This point does not, however, seem to have been taken or argued, and in the view the learned Judges took of the law it was probably immaterial.

"The question which we refer for the decision of the Full Bench is the following:—

"Whether, upon the facts found in these cases, the defendants are protected by anything in the Bengal Tenancy Act from eviction as trespassers, at the suit of the plaintiffs?"

Babu Srinath Das (with him Babu Hara Chunder Chuckerbutti), for the appellants.—The plaintiffs obtained possession of the estate on the 27th January 1886 and were dispossessed in 1887; and the question therefore is, are the defendants exempt from ejectment under the Bengal Tenancy Act? [PETHERAM, C.J.—The question is, are they "ryots" under the Act?] The word "ryot" has not the same meaning as "tenant." The different classes of [711] tenants are defined in the Act. The defendants are not tenants of the plaintiffs; they are under no liability to pay rent; they derive their title from a wrong-doer; there was no contract between them and the plaintiffs, either express or implied. [PIGOT, J.—Under s. 157 a proprietor may recover rent from a trespasser.] Yes, the landlord may of course acknowledge him as a tenant if he chooses. I submit the plaintiffs are entitled to be governed by the old Tenancy law, as the right to sue accrued before the new Act came into force. See Debiruddi v. Abdur Rahim (3); and if so, the plaintiffs ought to succeed. The case of Mohima Chunder Shaha v. Hazari Pramanik (2) is against me, but that decision is not in accordance with the spirit of the Tenancy Act. [PIGOT, J.—Have you seen the judgments in Special Appeal No. 231 of 1889, and in Ameer Hossein v. Sheo Suhae (4).?] The latter case does not decide what is stated in the head note: neither of those cases are applicable to the present case. [PRINSEP, J.—The principle of Ameer Hossein v. Sheo Suhae (1) applies equally to non-occupancy tenants.] No, I submit not. Wilson, J., has held that unless a ryot acquired a right of occupancy by 12 years' occupation, he had no such right. [PETHERAM, C.J.—That was under the old Act.] As to mode of given possession where trespassers are concerned, see Radha Proshad Wasti v. Esuf (2). I submit that the case ought not to be governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. The plaintiffs brought their suit in January 1889. See Debiruddi v. Abdur Rahim (3). If the cause of action arose before the Act, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed. But if the Act of 1885 applies, I say that the word "tenant" means a person holding under another; the relationship between landlord and tenant cannot exist without a mutual understanding.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose (with him Baboo Kali Churn Banerjee), for the respondent.—If the defendants are ryots having rights of occupancy, they cannot be ejected. Under the old law there was no definition of the word "ryot;" the present Act has made many changes granting indulgences to ryots. Under the old law the expression "ryot" could not be limited as contended; if the word applied to every one who was a cultivator, the case might be [712] different. [After referring to the cases of Surnomoyee v. Denonath Gir Sunnyasee (4), Nityanund Ghose v. Kissen Kishore (5), and Prosunno Coomaree Debea v. Rutton Bepary (6), the learned pleader continued]:—In the case of Ameer Hossein v. Sheo Suhae (1) the period was allowed to be counted towards the right of occupancy, on the ground that the person who cultivated land which did not belong to him was a ryot within the meaning of the Act; there is no reason why the word "ryot" should have a contracted meaning in the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885; and my contention is that the word does not necessarily mean a tenant. The words "acquired a right" do not mean a right from a rightful owner. It cannot be said that the Tenancy Act has retrospective operation; the object of s. 19 was to prevent landlords from contracting tenants out of their occupancy rights.

Baboo Srinath Das in reply.—It is not my argument that the Act has any retrospective effect; my point is that my rights were complete before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force.

The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench (PETHERAM, C.J., PRINSEP, PIGOT, MACPHERSON and GHOSE, JJ.):—

OPINIONS.

PETHERAM, C.J.—I think that the case of Mohima Chunder Shaha v. Hazari Pramanik (7) was rightly decided, and that the defendants are ryots holding the land under the plaintiffs, the zemindars, and that they can only be ejected under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The possession of the land in question for the purpose of cultivating it was acquired a good many years ago by the defendants from the persons who at that time were in actual possession of the zemindari within which it was situated, and who were then the only persons who could give possession of the lands of the zemindari to cultivators. It is not suggested that the defendants did not then obtain possession as tenants under the bona fide belief of the title of their landlords, but since then it has been ascertained by the judgment of a Court of law that the zemindari did not belong to these persons, but to the plaintiffs, and the question is whether [713] now that the plaintiffs have established their right to the zemindari, they can treat all cultivators who have been settled on the lands by the persons whom they have ousted from its possession, as trespassers, and obtain khas possession of all the ryoti lands from them at any moment without any notice and without any compensation even for the crops on the land.

I am of opinion that they cannot. Section 5, sub-s. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act enacts that "ryot" means primarily a person who had acquired a right to hold land for the purpose of cultivating it. The use of the word "primarily" in this section would seem to indicate that the definition was not intended to be exhaustive; but, however that may be, I think that a person in the position of these defendants is a ryot within this definition, and that the zemindar can only obtain khas possession of the land occupied by him under the provisions of s. 44, the ryot having non-occupancy rights. The possession and interest in the land which the defendants acquired from the persons in possession of the zemindari was a right to hold it for the purpose of cultivating it as against all the world except the true owners of the zemindari, and against them unless they proved a title to the zemindari paramount to that of the plaintiffs' landlords.

This was, I think, a right to hold the land for the purpose of cultivating it within the meaning of s. 5, cl. 2. It may have been partial, but if it was a right at all, it is within the definition in the section: provided, of course, it was a right bona fide acquired by them from one whom they bona fide believed to have the right to let them into possession of the land. In my opinion the defendants are ryots, and the only right of the person who has obtained possession of the zemindari is to the rent payable for the land, and not to obtain khas possession of the land itself, unless they can do so under the provisions of the Tenancy Act. My answer to the question referred to this Bench is in the affirmative.

PRINSEP, J.—I am of the same opinion. I retain the opinion expressed by me in Mohima Chunder Shaha v. Hazari Pramanik (1).

THIS reference arose out of an appeal to the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Jessore, against an order passed by the Munsif of Bangaon on the 29th of July 1892, holding that execution of a decree had become barred by limitation. The decree was for money, and was for an amount below Rs. 500; consequently there was no second appeal.

The order of reference was as follows:—

"The decree was obtained by Preo Nath Misser, the father of the present decree-holders, who are minors and have executed the decree [715] through Moti Sundari Debia, their certificated guardian. The decree was passed on the 22nd July 1881, and after several applications for execution had been made by the original decree-holder, one was made on the 25th of March 1889 by the present decree-holder after the death of the original decree-holder, but nothing was done within three years from that time which could save limitation, and the present application was then put in on the 1st of April 1892. The Munsif has consequently held that the application was barred by time. But on appeal it was argued that the disability having accrued before the 25th of March 1889, the minors can apply for execution even after the lapse of three years from that date under the terms of section of the Limitation Act. The question for consideration of the Court is whether they are entitled to do so.

"Section 7 is no doubt applicable to applications to execute decrees. It says: 'If a person entitled to * * * * make an application, be at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned a minor * * * he may * * * make the application within the same period after the disability has ceased as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the second schedule hereunto annexed.'

"And s. 9 says 'when once time has begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it.' The question then is, when does the time begin to run in case of execution of decrees where the disability has accrued subsequent to the date of the decree? Article 179 says that the time begins to run from the date of the decree or order or from the date of the several other occurrences mentioned in the third column. It was argued that one of these occurrences is the date of applying to the Court for execution, which in this case was the 25th of March 1889, and that as the disability occurred before this date, the execution was not barred. But if we hold it to be so, we should not be giving its due effect to the word 'once' which occurs in s. 9. In the case of execution of decrees, time begins to run from several occurrences, and the effect of s. 9 is to limit the right arising from disability to cases in which the disability occurred before time first begins to run, i.e., before the decree was passed or the money became payable under the terms of the decree. It cannot be said that time did not begin to run before the 25th of March 1889, but according to s. 9 when once it began to run, no subsequent disability would place the case under s. 7. If the application of the 25th March 1889 had not been made, the execution would undoubtedly have been barred and there would have been no foundation for the contention now raised, and this shows that limitation had already begun to run before the disability commenced. I hold; therefore, that s. 7 is not applicable, and that the execution has become barred by time. But the case is not free from difficulty. The cases of Jaggivan Amirchand v. Hasan Abraham (1) and Mon Mohun Buksee v. Gunga Soondery Dabee (2) [716] do not help in the solution, as in them the disability occurred before the decree was passed.

"I have directed the appeal to be dismissed contingent on the opinion of the High Court."

No one appeared for either party at the hearing of the reference. The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and HILL, J.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

We are of opinion that this application was not barred by s. 4 of the Indian Limitation Act read with art. 179 of the second schedule, but that the operation of the Act was in this case arrested by s. 7.

Article 179 provides several points of time from which the period of three years shall begin to run, and for the purposes of the Limitation Act we think that the period which begins from each point is a separate period, and that if the person entitled to execution is under a disability at the time when any one of such periods commences, the operation of the Act is suspended during the continuance of the disability by the operation of s. 7.

The case of Mon Mohun Buksee v. Gunga Soondery Dabee (2) supports this view, and with the decision of that case we agree.

We desire, however, not to be understood as expressing the opinion that the limitation of 12 years from the date of the decree provided by s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code can be extended by any disability of the person entitled to execution which arises subsequently to the date of the decree.

identical that he is precluded by s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code from filing separate suits.

The onus is on the defendant to show that the causes of action are identical.

THE plaintiff in this case brought two suits against the Secretary of State in Council—one suit, No. 11 of 1888, as the proprietor of a five-anna-four-pie share of the revenue-paying estates pergunnah Patpashar and chur Hye Madhabdia, asking that possession might be given him of his share in the zemindari and for mesne profits; and the other suit, No. 32 of 1888, as the ijaradar of a two-anna share in those estates held by one Shoyamani, for recovery of possession of a two-anna share which he claimed to hold under an ijara.

The property in dispute was a large tract of chur land thrown up by the river Padma, which the plaintiff claimed as re-formations on the site of, and contiguous to, the above-mentioned estates held by him. The Government, however, proceeded to assess the chur as an addition to the plaintiff's estates, under the provisions of Act IX of 1847. The plaintiff raised objections to these proceedings, claiming the land as re-formations on the sites of his settled estates; but on Government insisting, he under protest took a settlement of these lands, and took up the proceedings to the Commissioner, and ultimately to the Board of Revenue; this latter body released a portion of the chur, holding it to be a re-formation, and as to the remaining portion of the plaintiff's claim which was rejected by the Board, he brought suit No. 11 of 1888, asking for possession of his share in the estates of which he alleged he was proprietor, alleging that the Revenue authorities had no right to assess the lands as an addition to his estate, also asking for wasilat; and suit No. 32 of 1888 for the recovery of possession of the two-anna share of the estate which he claimed under his ijara right, together with mesne profits.

For the purposes of this report it is unnecessary to state more of the defence in suit No. 32 of 1888 than that the defendant contended that the plaintiff, having omitted to include this claim in his suit No. 11 of 1888, must be taken to have relinquished [718] it, and that the suit was, therefore, barred under s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Subordinate Judge heard both the cases, and held, on an issue being raised in suit No. 32, as to whether the suit was barred under s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code, against the plaintiff, stating that, inasmuch as he was both proprietor of a certain share, and ijaradar of another share at the time he took settlement under protest from the Government, his cause of action, with reference to his two claims arose at one and the same time, and not having included his two claims in one suit, he must be taken to have relinquished his claim as ijaradar; and he therefore dismissed suit No. 32 of 1888: suit No. 11 of 1888 he decreed in favour of the plaintiff.

Under an order of the High Court, dated the 18th May 1892 the appeal filed by the plaintiff in suit No. 32 of 1888 was transferred to the file of the High Court for trial.

At the hearing before the High Court—

Baboo Srinath Das, Baboo Saroda Charan Mitter, Baboo Haraprosad Chatterjee and Baboo Sarat Chunder Rai appeared for the appellant.

Baboo Hem Chandra Banerjee and Baboo Ram Charan Mitter, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and GHOSE, J.) was delivered by PETHERAM, C.J.—This suit was a suit brought by one Upendra Lal Mukerjee, who was plaintiff in the suit (No. 32 of 1888) out of which the appeal No. 66 arose, to obtain the same relief in respect of a two-anna share in the same land which he held as an ijaradar for a term under the zemindar, and the Subordinate Judge has dismissed that suit entirely on ground that the plaintiff was prevented from bringing a separate suit by the provisions of s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he being of opinion that the cause of action was one and the same.

This question is by no means an easy one, and it is clear that if the cause of action is absolutely identical, s. 43 does prevent the second action being brought. But the question is whether when a person in the position of this plaintiff has sustained an [719] injury in respect of his proprietary or permanent interest in these lands, and also any injury in respect of a temporary or leasehold interest in the lands, it can be said that the two causes of action are so identical that he is precluded by s. 43 from bringing the second suit.

We think that the interests in this case are so distinct, that it cannot be said that the causes of action are absolutely the same, and inasmuch as it lies upon the defendants to show that the matters are the same, and as we think they have failed to do so in this case, this appeal must be decreed, and the decree of the lower Court will be varied, and the plaintiff will obtain a decree for two annas of the same land for which he has got a decree in the other suit.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Trevelyan and Mr. Justice Rampini.

RADHIKA MOHAN KURI (Petitioner) v. LAL MOHAN SHA (Opposite party).^{*} [23rd March, 1893.]

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 82—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—"Judicial Proceeding"—Delegation of powers by District Registrar—False Evidence.

It is no offence to make a false statement before a person, purporting to act in execution of the Registration Act, but not legally authorized so to do.

THE petitioner in this case was charged with having committed offences punishable under s. 82 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) and s. 193 of the Penal Code, under the following circumstances:—

The complainant, Lal Mohun Sha, presented for registration before the Special Sub-Registrar of Dacca, a document said to [720] have been executed by Lalita Dassi, the mother of the petitioner. Registration being refused, Lalita Dassi appealed to the District Registrar, under s. 72 of the Registration Act. The District Registrar, who was also the District Magistrate, directed a subordinate of his, named Baboo Promada Nath Mukerjee, who held the office of Deputy Magistrate and Deputy Collector, to hold an enquiry, and to report to him concerning matters raised in the appeal. In the course of that inquiry, Baboo Promada Nath Mukerjee examined the petitioner on oath as a witness, and the prosecution of the petitioner was in respect of a statement made during such examination, which was alleged to be false and deliberately made, knowing it to be untrue. It appeared that prior to the institution of the prosecution, sanction was given by Baboo Promada Nath Mukerjee. The case was tried by a Deputy Magistrate of Dacca, Baboo Chandra Bhusan Chakravarti, who convicted the petitioner under both sections, and sentenced him, under s. 82 of the Registration Act, to rigorous imprisonment for 31 days and a fine of Rs. 25, or in default a further term of one month. It was contended, inter alia before the Deputy Magistrate, on behalf of the petitioner, that Baboo Promada Nath Mukerjee had no jurisdiction in the matter, and that therefore he, the petitioner, could not be held to have committed any offence. Objection was also taken to the sanction. Upon that portion of the case, the Deputy Magistrate observed as follows :—

"The accused admits that he gave his deposition, but denies the correctness of the one sought to be proved against him, and urges that it was not read over to him. It is also contended on his behalf that Baboo Promada Nath Mukerjee had no jurisdiction in the matter. In this connection the learned pleader for the defence refers me to s. 11 of the Registration Act, and urges that the Registrar could not order any enquiry of the nature in question to be made by a subordinate of his. It will, however, be seen that Promada Baboo was not appointed to dispose of the appeal, but he simply held a preliminary enquiry in connection with that appeal, and I see nothing in the Act which prevents the Registrar from ordering such an enquiry. I may here also note that both the parties willingly submitted to that enquiry, and were represented by learned pleaders from the Judge's Court. It cannot be denied that such enquiries are often made by subordinates of the District Registrar, and this practice [721] is not confined, I believe, to this district alone. The pleader also takes objection to the sanction, and he refers me to Queen v. Kartick Chunder Holdar (1). But I do not see how that ruling applies to the wording of the sanction itself. The law on the point is contained in s. 195, Criminal Procedure Code, and I think the provisions of that section have been sufficiently complied with in the order of Promada Baboo, dated the 10th June 1892. But, as stated above, the charge has been made in the alternative, also under s. 82 of the Registration Act, for a prosecution under which section no sanction is needed—vide Full Bench ruling in Gopi Nath v. Kuldip Singh (2)."

The Deputy Magistrate then went into the merits of the case, and ended in convicting the petitioner, and sentencing him as above stated.

The petitioner then appealed to the Sessions Judge, who upheld the conviction. His judgment was in the following terms :—

"The appellant has been convicted under s. 82 of the Indian Registration Act for having made a false statement before an officer acting in a proceeding or enquiry under that Act.

"A document said to have been executed by Lalita Dassi, the mother of the accused, had been presented for registration before the Sub-Registrar at Dacca on the 21st July 1891. On the 12th September 1891 the executant appeared and objected to have the document registered. On the 10th February 1892 a petition was put in withdrawing the objection, but as eight months had then elapsed since the date of the execution of the document, registration was refused. Appeal was then made to the District Registrar. The petition of the 10th February 1892 purports to have been signed and put in by the accused.

(1) 9 W.R. Cr. 58.

(2) 11 C. 566.

"The District Registrar directed Baboo Promada Nath Mukerjee, Deputy Magistrate, to enquire into the facts and submit a report before he decided the appeal. The Deputy Magistrate submitted his report after making an enquiry, and the District Registrar then disposed of the appeal.

"The accused was examined by Baboo Promada Nath Mukerjee in the course of the enquiry, and he is said to have made a statement to the effect that he was not present on the 10th February 1892 in Dacca when the petition was presented, and that he did not present it. In the present case he adheres to that statement. He said, and now says, that he signed a blank piece of paper with a view to an application for adjournment, being written on it, and not in order that the petition in the terms of the document filed on the 10th February 1892 might be drawn up. The statement that he was not present in Dacca on the 10th February 1892 was found [722] to be false, and he has been tried and convicted of making that false statement.

"The deposition made by the accused before the Deputy Magistrate has been put in and proved. Accused admitted that he was examined by the Deputy Magistrate, but denies that this deposition is correct. An attempt is made to prove that the accused was not sworn or solemnly affirmed before he made it, and that it was not read over to him. For the purposes of the present conviction this is not very material, as s. 82 of the Registration Act does not require that the false statement should be made on oath. The evidence adduced is, however, in my opinion sufficient to prove that the oath was administered to the accused before he made the statement, and that it was read over to him.

"It has been urged that the deposition is not legal evidence of what the accused said, as it is recorded in English, and The Queen v. Mungul Dass (1) is relied on. In this case I do not consider the contention is of much weight, especially as it is not denied that the accused said that he was not in Dacca on the 10th February 1892.

"The Sub-Registrar and other witnesses prove that accused was present on that day and presented the petition jointly with his mother, and there can in my opinion be no doubt that in denying that he was in Dacca on the 10th February 1893, accused said what he knew to be false.

"It is further urged that the Deputy Magistrate was not holding an enquiry under the Registration Act, and that the Act does not empower the District Registrar to delegate to any other person the powers with which he is vested under s. 72 of the Registration Act. No such delegation was in this case made. The District Registrar directed an enquiry to be made by a judicial officer whom he selected in order to enable him to exercise his powers under s. 72 of the Registration Act. The practice is one frequently followed, and I am not prepared to say that it is contrary to law. The Deputy Magistrate conducting the enquiry was certainly an officer acting in an enquiry under the Act within the meaning of s. 82 of the Act, and I see no reason to impeach the validity of the conviction on that ground. The ruling in In the matter of Bunwary Poddar (2), though not exactly in point, favours this view.

"Section 181 of the Penal Code would also seem to cover a case like the present.

REVISION.

20 C. 719.

"The evidence leaves in my mind no doubt that the accused made the statement alleged, and that it was false. The conviction and sentence are accordingly confirmed and the appeal is dismissed."

The petitioner thereupon applied to the High Court to send for the record and set aside the conviction and sentence on the following amongst other grounds:—That he had committed no [723] offence under s. 82 of the Registration Act; that the statement alleged to be false was not made before any officer acting in execution of the power conferred on him by the Act, or in any enquiry held under the Act; that the District Registrar had no power to order an enquiry to be made by a Deputy Magistrate or any other person but an officer within the meaning of the Registration Act; and that no offence had been committed under s. 193 of the Penal Code.

A rule was issued which now came on for hearing.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, for the petitioner.

Baboo Durga Mohun Dass, for the opposite party.

Mr. Sinha.—The Registrar can delegate certain of his functions only in cases provided for by s. 11 of the Act, but this was not one of those cases, and therefore the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to enquire into the matter, and the whole proceedings were coram non judice. Section 193 of the Penal Code does not apply because there was no judicial proceeding.

Baboo Durga Mohun Dass.—The enquiry was made under the Act, and therefore it must be taken that the Deputy Magistrate holding the enquiry was an "officer acting in execution of the Act in a proceeding or enquiry under the Act," within the meaning of cl. (a) of s. 82, and the conviction under that section is correct.

The judgment of the High Court (TREVELYAN and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

We think it clear in this case that the conviction must be set aside. The conviction is under s. 82 of the Registration Act and s. 193 of the Penal Code. What happened is this. The District Registrar directed a Deputy Magistrate to make an enquiry as to certain matters which arose in regard to the registration of a document. This enquiry was made, and in the course of the enquiry certain statements made by the accused to the Deputy Magistrate were found to be false, and in respect of the making of those statements he has been convicted. It seems to us clear that s. 82 of the Registration Act has no application to the present case. That only applies to a false statement [724] intentionally made before any officer acting in execution of the Registration Act. The Deputy Magistrate had no powers whatever under that Act. It does not appear that he had any registering power given to him by the Registrar under s. 11 of the Act. We cannot say, therefore, that s. 82 applies to this case. The words "any officer acting in execution of this Act" must mean an officer legally authorized to act in execution of the Act. Nor do we think that s. 193, Penal Code, is applicable. That refers to a stage of judicial proceedings. There was here no judicial proceeding. In the result the conviction and sentence must be set aside and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Penal Code, ss. 193, 199—Proceedings by District Judge without jurisdiction—Ultra vires—Jurisdiction sanction to prosecute granted in proceedings held without—Bengal Tenancy Act, 1884, s. 95—Sanction to prosecution.

The Bengal Tenancy Act does not authorize a proceeding calling upon a person to show cause why he should not make over documents and papers belonging to the estate of which a common manager has been appointed.

A person giving false evidence in such proceeding cannot be convicted under s. 193, or s. 199 of the Penal Code.

[F., 35 A. 58 = 10 A.L.J. 462 = 13 Cr. L.J. 769 = 17 Ind. Cas. 401.]

THE facts which gave rise to this application were as follows :—

Buksh Ali died on the 17th March 1890 possessed of certain properties situate in the district of Noakhali, and leaving him surviving four widows, six daughters and one son. The petitioner Abdul Majid was the husband of one of the daughters of the eldest widow, who was named Halunenessa.

On the 29th August 1892, the District Judge of Noakhali appointed Krishna Lal Nag, the opposite party in this proceeding [725] the common manager of the estate of Buksh Ali under the provisions of s. 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; the appointment being made at the instance of Hafiza, another of the widows of Buksh Ali. The application for such appointment was opposed by Halunenessa, on amongst other grounds that some of the properties, claimed in the application as belonging to Buksh Ali's estate, in reality belonged to Halunenessa. The opposition to the application was, however, unsuccessful.

On the 6th September 1892, Krishna Lal Nag submitted a report to the District Judge complaining that Abdul Majid and Halunenessa had not made over to him all the papers and documents in their possession relating to the estate of Buksh Ali, and on the 7th September 1892 the District Judge passed an order calling on the parties complained against to produce before him all the accounts relating to the estate in their possession, and on the 14th September passed a further order calling on Abdul Majid to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for obstructing the common manager.

On the 15th September Abdul Majid and Halunenessa filed two affidavits in which they swore, inter alia, that they had no such papers in their possession, and that they had not resisted the common manager. The District Judge, not considering the affidavits sufficient, issued a warrant against Abaul Majid, but withdrew the same the following day on the latter putting in an appearance, and on the 4th October he directed the prosecution of Abdul Majid, under s. 188 of the Penal Code, for disobeying his order in not producing the documents. On the 19th October 1892 the District Judge disposed of the miscellaneous proceedings instituted on the report of the common manager, and in his orders sanctioned the prosecution of Abdul Majid by the common manager, and directed the latter to apply to the Magistrate to bind down the petitioner.

^{*} Criminal Revision No. 172 of 1893, against the order passed by W. H. M. Gun, Esq., Sessions Judge of Noakhali, dated the 25th of January 1893.

1893 The case was then taken up by the Deputy Magistrate, who on the APRIL 13. 17th November 1892 convicted the petitioner under s. 188 and fined him
 Rs. 100. The petitioner appealed against this conviction, with the result CRIMINAL that on the 9th January 1893 the Officiating District and Sessions Judge, REVISION. Mr. Anderson, set aside the conviction.

20 C. 724. [726] The previous orders in the case had been passed by Mr. Gun, the District Judge, and pending these proceedings and, on the 24th October 1892, it appeared that Mr. Gun had, on the application of the common manager, directed a search warrant to issue to search the house of Abdul Majid and Halunenessa for the papers alleged to be in their possession, and on the 29th October the warrant was executed, and the house of the petitioner's father as well as that of himself and Halunenessa were searched, and certain documents were alleged to have been found which related to the estate of Buksh Ali.

After the search, the common manager applied to Mr. Gun for sanction to prosecute the petitioner, under ss. 193 and 199 of the Penal Code, for making false statements in the affidavits referred to above and in his deposition taken before Mr. Gun as District Judge in the miscellaneous proceeding alleged to have been taken under the Bengal Tenancy Act. And the petitioner was called on to show cause why such sanction should not be given.

On the 25th January 1893 the matter came on for hearing and resulted in the following orders being passed:—

The opposite party appears by pleaders to show cause, but no sufficient cause has been shown. It is only said that the opposite party does not know what documents were found in his house, and that they may have been put there without his knowledge. It appears that he denied all knowledge of these papers, but some of them have been found, it is said, in his house. I sanction the prosecution of Abdul Majid under ss. 193 and 199, Indian Penal Code, for falsely stating in evidence in the course of the hearing of the miscellaneous case No. 12 of 1892 (Krishna Lal Nag v. Halunenessa and others) before the District Judge of Noakhali on the 26th September 1892, that "I know kismut Andermanik. None of its kabuliyats are with me or with Halunenessa," and for stating in the affidavit of the 1st Aswin 1299 filed in the same case, "no papers connected with his rent collections or documents came into my hands after the Chaudhuri's death," and in the affidavit of the 4th Aswin 1299 "no papers connected with Baksha Ali Chaudhuri's collection nor tenants' kabuliyats and documents of such kind were or are with me," which statements he knew to be false.

A prosecution was then instituted against the petitioner, and the 21st March 1893 fixed for the trial of the case before the Deputy Magistrate.

[727] It further appeared that another prosecution was instituted against the petitioner under the sanction referred to above as granted on the 19th October 1892, but this formed the subject-matter of another application to the High Court and is immaterial for the purpose of this report. The petitioner applied to the High Court to exercise its revisional jurisdiction in respect of the order of the 25th January 1893, and asked that the record might be sent for and the sanction annulled, on the grounds, inter alia, that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to hold the enquiry he did, and that the whole of his proceedings were ultra vires; that the sanction for prosecution under ss. 193 and 199 was void ab initio and given without jurisdiction; and it was further on the merits alleged that the papers found in no way related to the estate of Buksh Ali, except one, which was a very old document and which was not found in the petitioner's house or in his possession.

On this application a rule was issued which now came on to be heard.

Mr. P. L. Roy (with him Moulvi Serajul Islam and Moulvi Mustafa Khan) for the petitioner.—The order granting sanction is without jurisdiction. The fact that a common manager is appointed under s. 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that he is thereby in the position of an officer of the Court under the Judge, does not entitle him to any privileges over other suitors. In seeking relief he must use the same proceedings that other suitors are required to use. The District Judge had no jurisdiction to hold a judicial enquiry upon the letter of the common manager. There is absolutely no provision made for such a purpose either under the Bengal Tenancy Act or any other law. Section 193 of the Penal Code, therefore, does not apply, because the alleged evidence was not given "in any stage of a judicial proceeding." [RAMPINI, J.—Would not the second part of the section apply to the facts of this case?] I submit not, because the whole section is governed by the provisions of s. 191 of the Penal Code, which says that a person must be legally bound by some express provisions of law to speak the truth. Here the proceeding being one not authorised by law, the petitioner was not legally bound to speak the truth. The case law is in favour of my contention—see The Queen [728] v. Jadub Chunder Biswas (1) and Empress v. Chait Ram (2). Similarly s. 199 of the Penal Code has no application to the facts of the case, because that section is also governed by the provisions of s. 191. I refer to the last portion beginning with the words "or being bound by law to make a declaration upon any subject." Here there was no such obligation on the part of the petitioner, and I therefore contend that the sanction is ultra vires and ought to be set aside.

No one appeared for the opposite party.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (TREVELYAN and RAMPINI, JJ.) was delivered by RAMPINI, J.—This is a rule calling on the other side to show cause why the order of the District Judge of Noakhali sanctioning the prosecution of the applicant under ss. 193 and 199, Indian Penal Code, should not be set aside. It appears that the District Judge appointed a common manager under s. 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that the applicant was called upon to deliver certain accounts and papers to the common manager so appointed. The manager reported that the applicant would not furnish him with these accounts and papers, and the District Judge then instituted a miscellaneous proceeding in respect of this matter. In this proceeding the applicant made a certain statement and filed two affidavits, alleging that he had not the accounts and papers called for. It is held that this statement before the District Judge and the allegations made in the affidavits were false, and upon these grounds the District Judge has sanctioned the prosecution of the applicant under ss. 193 and 199. Now, we find no provision in the Bengal Tenancy Act authorizing a District Judge to make any such enquiry or to order the applicant to deliver up any such papers, and we further find no provision in that Act or any other law authorising the District Judge to examine the applicant on oath in such proceedings. We do not think, therefore, that the applicant can be said to have been legally bound by oath when he was examined before the District Judge. Therefore the facts alleged did not disclose that he committed any offence under s. 193, Indian Penal Code. Furthermore, we [729] cannot find any provision of the law, or any rules having the force of law, permitting the use of affidavits in such proceedings or authorising the administration of an oath to persons who profess to file affidavits in such proceedings. Therefore we do not think that the facts show the commission of any offence by the applicant under s. 199, Indian Penal Code. We accordingly think there are no grounds why the applicant should be prosecuted under either of these sections. We therefore set aside the order of the District Judge sanctioning the present prosecution, and direct that the proceedings be quashed and the rule made absolute.

CHATHU RAI, 2ND PARTY (Petitioner), v. NIRANJAN RAI,
1ST PARTY (Opposite party).^{*} [9th May, 1893.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 145, 437—“Complaint”—District Magistrate, power of, to order further enquiry—Dispute concerning land—Power to order enquiry.

Section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not give power to order a further inquiry in a case under s. 145 of that Code.

THE facts which led to the issue of the rule in this case were as follows:—

The two parties claimed to be in possession of five plots of land in mouzah Amma Narbirpore. On 30th of June 1892, Niranjana Rai, the 1st party, brought a complaint against Chathu Rai and Mohabir Rai for criminal trespass, under s. 447 of the Penal Code, with reference to this land. The Deputy Magistrate, Mr. S. M. Nasiruddin, in charge of the Magistrate's office at the time, before whom the complaint was filed, issued a summons only against Mohabir Rai, and made the case over to Baboo Medni Prasad Singh, Deputy Magistrate, for trial. The case was, however, compounded as between Niranjana and Mahabir. Niranjana [730] then applied to the same Deputy Magistrate in charge for issue of process against the other defendant, Chathu Rai, which application was granted, and the case was again made over to Baboo Medni Prasad Singh for disposal, who after holding a trial acquitted the accused on the 29th of August 1892. The complainant then put in a petition before the Deputy Magistrate in charge on the 9th of November 1892, praying that proceedings might be instituted to prevent a breach of the peace. The Deputy Magistrate in charge, thereupon, on the 11th November 1892, instituted a proceeding under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This matter was also made over to Baboo Medni Prasad Singh for enquiry and disposal, but on the application of Niranjan Rai to the District Magistrate the case was transferred on the 16th of November 1892 to the file of the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. S. M. Nasiruddin, who while in charge had instituted the proceeding.

This Deputy Magistrate, however, went away on leave, and was relieved by the Joint-Magistrate. The case accordingly went to the file of the Joint-Magistrate, who on the 29th December 1892 stopped further proceedings and struck off the case without taking evidence, as he was of opinion that there was no immediate apprehension of a breach of the peace. The District Magistrate having been moved in the matter, reinstated the proceeding under s. 145 on the 9th February 1893, and transferred the case to the file of Mr. S. M. Nasiruddin, who had in the meantime returned to duty. The order of the District Magistrate was in the following terms:—

"In this case a Magistrate properly empowered drew up a proceeding based on what had transpired in a trespass case—calling on parties to a dispute about certain lands to attend on a certain date with written statements, &c., under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code. This case was at first on the file of Moulvi S. Nasiruddin, Deputy Magistrate, who initiated it: but he, as in charge of the head-quarters office, transferred it to Baboo Medni Prasad's file. Thence, as the latter had formed an opinion, it was transferred to Moulvi S. Nasiruddin's file, whence in the latter's absence on leave, it migrated to the Joint-Magistrate's file. Such were the travels and such the delay in a proceeding which the law clearly intended should be sharp and summary. I do not know under what section it has been disposed of by the Joint-Magistrate, but his action was clearly ultra [731] vires. The possession contemplated by the section is that at the time the dispute arose, i.e., at the time the order instituting proceedings was passed. Otherwise it would be impossible to decide a case of the kind at all: for while proceedings are going on there is never any serious risk to the peace. The very limited sense which is sought to impose on the word 'then' is irrational. It is incumbent on a Magistrate when proceedings have once been instituted to proceed as cl. (2) of s. 145 demands. As the orders of the Joint-Magistrate are ultra vires and based on no provision of the law, I shall simply order the case under s. 145 to proceed, and transfer it to Moulvi S. Nasiruddin's file."

The Deputy Magistrate thereupon took up the case, and after recording evidence declared the 1st party to be in possession of the lands in dispute.

Against this order the 2nd party moved the High Court, on the grounds, inter alia, that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction under the Criminal Procedure Code to reinstate the proceeding under s. 145 of the Code after it had been once struck off and disposed of. On the application for the rule being made, it was urged that the only section under which the District Magistrate could possibly be taken to have acted was s. 437, and that that section could not apply to the case, inasmuch as it was not a complaint which had been dismissed under s. 203, nor was it the case of an accused person who had been improperly discharged.

On that application a rule was granted which now came on for argument.

The judgment of the High Court (TREVELYAN and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

In this case the learned Counsel in support of the order of the Magistrate has only been able to refer us to s. 437, Code of [732] Criminal Procedure, in support of the power of the Magistrate to make the order which he had passed. Now, that section only allows a further enquiry into a complaint. A complaint means a complaint of an offence [s. 4 (a), Criminal Procedure Code], and an offence is defined in the Code as "any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force." We think it is quite clear that s. 437, which enables a Magistrate to make an order for further enquiry, does not authorize him to order a further enquiry in a case under s. 145, which is not directed to any offence at all. That being so, we think that this rule must be made absolute, and that the orders dated the 9th February and 24th February should be set aside.

[R., 33 C. 1290=4 C.L.J. 343=10 C.W.N. 1044; 25 M. 635 (647).]

THIS was a suit brought to eject the defendants from certain lands in chur Sulkea.

It appeared that in 1847 the Government settled this chur with Poorno Chunder Roy (the predecessor in interest of the minor plaintiff's father), Jogendra Chunder Roy (the predecessor in interest of the pro forma defendants Nos. 2 and 3), and Ananda Proshad Ghose; the two former holding each a five annas share, and the latter a six annas share therein.

That one bigha $2\frac{1}{2}$ cottabs of this chur was taken possession of by Government for the purpose of a public road; and that in 1865 this portion of the chur, under the provisions of Bengal Act III of 1864 (which had been extended to Howrah in 1865), vested in the Commissioners of the Howrah Municipality; and that the Commissioners erected a toll-house thereon and also used the land for the purpose of stacking stones.

That in 1867 Poorno Chunder Roy and his five-anna co-sharers brought a suit against the Howrah Municipality to recover possession of a ten-anna share in this land, which they alleged the Commissioners had ousted them from by using it as a toll-house and for stacking stones. This suit was, however, decided in favour of the municipality, and on appeal to the High Court on the 8th May 1868 [see Pooroo Chunder Roy v. Balfour (1)], Bayley, J., held that the suit was barred by the special limitation provided by s. 87 of Bengal Act III of 1864; Phear, J., however, not concurring in this view, but agreeing in dismissing the suit on the ground that Poorno Chunder and his co-sharers had not made out even a prima facie claim to the land in dispute.

It further appeared that the Howrah Municipality brought a suit against one Modhu Sudan Kundu (the defendant No. 1 in [734] the present ejectment suit) to recover possession of a 10-anna share in $7\frac{1}{2}$ cottabs of land comprised within the land in dispute in the present suit; Modhu Sudan Kundu contending in his written statement filed in July 1877 that he was in possession as tenant of one Preonath Betal, who was the tenant of the 10-anna zemindars, viz., Poorno Chunder Roy and his co-sharers. This suit was decreed in favour of the municipality on the 25th September 1877.

In January 1877 the Sulkea chur was again surveyed, and it having been found to have increased largely in area, the whole chur, both old and accreted, was in November 1877 settled with the persons who were then found to be in possession, viz., Rani Saleon Moni, Girendro Chunder Roy, Poorno Chunder Roy, and Khelat Chunder Ghose; the Rani and Girendro Chunder Roy being the widow and heir respectively of Jogendra Chundra Ghose, and Khelat Chunder being the purchaser of the interest formerly held by Ananda Proshad Roy. In these settlement proceedings the defendant No. 1 was recorded as the tenant in possession of 1 bigha $14\frac{1}{2}$ cottabs, including the $7\frac{1}{2}$ cottabs. Although no mention was made in the paper book as to the exact date of the purchase of Poorno Chunder Roy's 5-anna share by Promotha Nath Roy, the father of the plaintiffs, it appeared that Promotha Nath Roy, the father of the plaintiffs, at some time or another became the purchaser of the 5-anna share belonging originally to Poorno Chunder Roy. In August 1878 the defendant No. 1 (having failed to substantiate his right in the $7\frac{1}{2}$ cottahs of land in the suit brought against him by the municipality) purchased the 10-anna share in such $7\frac{1}{2}$ cottahs from the municipality for the sum of Rs. 2,370.

On the 30th March 1889 the minor plaintiffs, the successors in interest of the 5-anna share formerly belonging to their father Promotha Nath Roy, brought this present suit (making their 5 and 6-anna co-sharers pro forma defendants) against the defendant No. 1 for a declaration of their title to the 5-anna share in the 1 bigha $14\frac{1}{2}$ cottahs of this chur, asking for ejectment and khas possession.

The defendant, amongst other matters, contended that the suit as regards the $7\frac{1}{2}$ cottahs of this land was barred by s. 13 [735] of the Code, by reason of the decision of the 8th May 1868; that the suit was barred by limitation, neither the plaintiffs nor their predecessors in interest having been in possession for 12 years before suit; and further contended that he was in possession of some portion of the land in the ten-anna share by purchase from the Howrah Municipality in 1878, and of other portions in such ten-anna share by adverse possession, and in possession of the six-anna share as tenant under the defendant No. 2; and that he had made improvements on the land and erected pucca buildings thereon, and that at all events the plaintiffs were not entitled to khas possession.

The Subordinate Judge held that, as far as the $7\frac{1}{2}$ cottahs were concerned, the matter was res judicata; but gave the plaintiffs a decree declaring their proprietary right over the rest of the land the subject of the suit, dismissing, however, the claim for khas possession; and holding that the suit was not barred by limitation, the defendant having in his written statement dated 2nd July 1877, in the suit brought against him by the Howrah Municipality in 1877, admitted the right of the plaintiffs' predecessor.

On appeal, the District Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree for the whole of the land sued for, holding that the plaintiffs had brought their suit within 12 years from the date of the second settlement, which settlement he found gave them a new title, entirely independent of any title which the Howrah Municipality might have had before that date. He further gave the plaintiffs khas possession on the ground that the defendant, after admitting the plaintiffs' predecessor's title in the suit brought against him by the municipality in 1877, in the following year denied their title and purchased from the municipality; adding that the municipality had no power to sue the defendant, the land being in their possession as having been an old road, and that on ceasing to be a road it reverted to the zemindar of the neighbouring land; referring on this point to Bengal Act III of 1864, s. 10, Collier's edition of the Bengal Municipal Act, s. 30: and Nihal Chand v. Azmat Ali Khan (1).

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

[736] Sir Griffith Evans (with him Baboo Bhowani Churn Dutt and Baboo Boidya Nath Dutt) for the appellant, contended that as regards the $7\frac{1}{2}$ cottahs, the matter was res judicata by reason of the decree of 8th May 1868; that the second settlement proceedings in 1877, to which the Howrah Municipality was not a party, could not override the decree previously obtained by the municipality in September 1877; that the suit was barred by limitation, the plaintiff's cause of action accruing when the land ceased to be used as a public road and was appropriated for other purposes; that there had been no denial of the plaintiffs' title within the meaning of s. 3 of Act IV of 1877, and that khas possession could not be given.

Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee (with him Baboo Ram Charan Mitter), for the respondents contended that the suit was not barred, inasmuch as the suit was brought within 12 years from the admission of the plaintiffs' title in the written statement of the 2nd July 1877; that the plaintiffs obtained a fresh title by the settlement proceedings of 1877, they being entitled to settlement made by the Government under Reg. XI of 1825 and Act XXXI of 1858; and that the doctrine of res judicata did not apply.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and GHOSE, J.) was delivered by GHOSE, J.—This was a suit for ejectment of the defendant from 1 bigha 14½ cottahs of land in chur Sulkea (Howrah).

It appears that the main estate, chur Sulkea, was settled by Government with the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendant's predecessors in title in the year 1849. Subsequent thereto, there was an accretion to that estate, and the whole of the land, both old and new, were settled by Government with the then owners of the parent estate in November 1877.

In the meantime the Government made a public road over a portion of the lands, measuring 7½ cottahs, and upon the passing of the Bengal Municipal Act III of 1864, and upon the extension of that Act in 1865 to the town of Howrah, the Municipality of Howrah took possession of the land; and they held such possession by erecting a toll-house and stacking stones for metalling roads. The predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs then brought a [737] suit for possession of their share in the said land, and some other lands, but that suit was dismissed by the High Court on the 8th May 1868 (see 9 W.R., page 535). Subsequent to this, it would appear that the municipality somehow or other lost possession of the land, and, as already mentioned, the whole of the lands of chur Sulkea were settled by Government with the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendant's predecessors-in-title in the year 1877. In the settlement proceedings the defendant was recorded as the tenant in possession of 1 bigha 14½ cottahs of land, including the said 7½ cottahs.

In the same year, 1877, the Howrah Municipality brought a suit against the defendant for recovery of possession of a ten-anna share of the said land. The defendant pleaded that he was in possession as a sub-tenant under one Preonath, the tenant under the maliks of the ten-anna share; but this plea did not avail him, and a decree was passed in favour of the municipality on the 25th of September 1877, declaring their maliki right, but the prayer for ejectment was disallowed. The defendant then obtained a conveyance of the land from the municipality for a consideration on the 24th August 1878.

The present suit was brought on the 30th March 1889 for declaration of the plaintiffs' title to the said 1 bigha and 14½ cottahs of land and for ejectment of the defendant in respect of the plaintiffs' share of the lands, upon the ground that the defendant had forfeited his right as a tenant by repudiating the plaintiffs' title as landlord.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit as regards the 7½ cottahs; but as to the rest of the lands gave them a decree, declaring their proprietary right and dismissing the claim for khas possession.

Upon appeal by the plaintiffs, the District Judge has held that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed altogether, both as regards the $7\frac{1}{2}$ cottahs and the other lands, and that they are entitled to khas possession.

The first contention that has been raised before us in second appeal on behalf of the defendant is, that the suit as regards the $7\frac{1}{2}$ cottahs of land is barred by res judicata by reason of the decree passed by the High Court in May 1868. No doubt, at [738] first sight, it seems that the contention is right: but if the matter be closely looked into, it would appear that it cannot be supported. The High Court, at any rate, the senior Judge of the Bench who had to deal with the case (Bayley, J.) held that the Government had been in possession of the land for more than 12 years as part of the public roadway, and that the municipality under Bengal Act III of 1864 succeeded Government in the right which they, the Government, held, and therefore when the municipality took possession of the land they did so under the Municipal Act, and inasmuch as this possession was taken more than three months before suit, the claim was barred by limitation under s. 87 of the Act. The other learned Judge (Phear, J.) did not apparently agree with Bayley, J., in the view expressed by him, and for somewhat different reasons agreed with him in dismissing the suit. But, whatever was the correct view, this much is clear upon the judgments delivered on that occasion, that the land was held by Government as part of a public road, and that, upon the Municipal Act being extended to Howrah, the municipality obtained possession by virtue of Bengal Act III of 1864. Section 10 of the Act provides:—"All public highways in any place to which this Act shall be extended (not being the property of, and repaired by and kept under the control of, the Government, and not being private property) existing at the time this Act comes into operation or which shall afterwards be made, and the pavement stones and other materials thereof, and also all erections, materials, implements, and other things provided for such highways, shall vest in and belong to the Municipal Commissioners." Bengal Act III of 1864 has been superseded by Bengal Act V of 1876, and in the corresponding section in the latter Act the word "roads" has been used instead of "public highways."

Now, it has been held that the word "roads" as used in that Act and in Act XV of 1873 (applicable to the North-Western Provinces) does not include the subsoil: that the subsoil does not belong to the municipality, and that the Act is not intended to deprive any person of any private right of property that he may have in the land used as a public road, or to vest that right in the municipality; and that when the land is no longer required for a public road, the owner is entitled to have it. See Chairman of [739] Naihati Municipality v. Kishori Lal Goswami (1) and Nihal Chand v. Azmat Ali Khan (2).

If then the municipality entered into possession of the land under s. 10, Act III of 1864, and if the right in the subsoil continued to be in the owner of the property, that right could not be said to have become extinct by reason of the dismissal of his suit in 1868, and the owner would, therefore, be entitled to claim the land when it is no longer required by the municipality for the purpose of roads. In this view of the matter, we are of opinion that the suit is not barred by res judicata.

We further observe that the settlement made by Government with the owner of the property was subsequent to the judgment of the High Court. The owners were entitled to the settlement under Reg. XI of 1825 and Act XXXI of 1858, and it was a settlement by the Government as the ruling power. This settlement may be viewed as having conferred upon the owners a fresh right. But this matter is not free from doubt, and we do not, therefore, rest our judgment upon that ground.

(1) 13 C. 171.

(2) 7 A. 362.

It was next contended before us by the learned counsel for the defendant-appellant that the plaintiffs' claim is barred by limitation, because their cause of action accrued when the land ceased to be used as a public road, and was appropriated by Government or the municipality for other purposes. But it will be observed that between the date of the judgment of the High Court in 1868 and the settlement proceeding in 1877, the land reverted to the possession of the proprietors: it came to be held by their tenant, and the municipality had afterwards to bring a suit against the tenant for possession. In that suit the present defendant (the tenant) in his written statement dated the 2nd July 1877 admitted the title of the plaintiffs' predecessor as landlord; and the municipality did not recover judgment until September 1877.

The present suit was brought in March 1889, that is, within 12 years from either of those two dates, and is therefore not barred.

The next contention that was raised before us was as to the decree for khas possession given by the District Judge. We think this contention is right. There was no denial of the plaintiffs' title [740] as landlord at any time previous to this suit, and we do not think that the acceptance by the defendant of a conveyance from the municipality after the defence he raised in the suit of the municipality had failed, and a decree passed against him in 1877, amounts to such a denial of the plaintiffs' right as would in equity entail a forfeiture of the tenancy. The learned Judge has referred to s. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act, but we do not think it has any application to circumstances of this case.

In this view of the matter, we think that the plaintiffs are not entitled to eject the defendant from their share of the lands held by him. He should be regarded as still holding the 7½ cottahs, as also the other lands, as a tenant, and accordingly we think that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree declaring their proprietary right to the lands in suit. To this extent, the decree of the District Judge should be modified. We make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

was refused and the case was proceeded with. The plaintiffs' evidence was recorded and that of one of the defendants; the defendants being unable to produce further evidence, the Court recorded that the case was closed and that judgment would be delivered on the following day, the 31st December.

[741] On the day following the defendants produced certain witnesses and asked that they might be examined. This application was rejected, and judgment was subsequently delivered in favour of the plaintiffs.

Held, per PETHERAM, C.J.—That the omission to examine the defendants' witnesses on the 31st December was a substantial error in procedure, and that the Munsif had therefore exercised his discretion wrongfully.

Per GHOSE, J.—That although there was some doubt whether the Court on second appeal could interfere in a point of discretion, yet this doubt was not strong enough to justify an expression of opinion contrary to that arrived at by the Chief Justice.

[F., 8 C.L.J. 147 = 12 C.W.N. 312 ; R., 9 C.L.J. 367 (372) = 13 C.W.N. 493.]

THIS was a suit for the recovery of possession of certain lands which came on for hearing before the Munsif of Sealdah on the 30th December 1890, on which day the defendants applied for an adjournment, on the ground that their witnesses (who had been summoned to attend) were not present, asking that fresh processes might issue for their attendance. This application was rejected and the evidence for the plaintiffs taken. The defendants being compelled to go on with their case, called the defendant No. 4 as a witness, and on no further evidence being forthcoming, the Munsif recorded in the order sheet that the case was closed and that he would deliver judgment in the case on the 31st December.

On the 31st the defendants attended at the Court before judgment was delivered, produced some of their witnesses, and asked to have their evidence taken. The Munsif refused the application, and later on in the day gave judgment in favour of the plaintiffs.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge on (amongst other grounds) the ground that an adjournment ought to have been allowed on the 30th December for the production of the witnesses, and that the Munsif at all events had exercised his discretion wrongfully in not examining the witnesses produced on the 31st December at a time previous to the delivery of the judgment.

The District Judge held that the Munsif had acted in the exercise of his discretion and was not wrong in his procedure, and that there was no ground for the appeal. He therefore dismissed the appeal on this point and confirmed the judgment of the Munsif.

The defendants appealed to the High Court, on the ground that the Munsif had exercised his discretion wrongfully in not examining the witnesses produced on the 31st December.

[742] Mr. Bonnerjee and Baboo Nil Madhub Bose, for the appellants.

Dr. Troilokhya Nath Mitter and Baboo Dwarkanath Chuckerjarti, for the respondents.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and GHOSE, J.) :—

JUDGMENTS.

PETHERAM, C.J.—This action was brought to recover possession of 9 cottahs of land at Agarpara, which the plaintiffs say was homestead land and had been held by two persons called Mala as tenants of Maharajah Norendro Kristo, which they, the plaintiffs, had purchased from them, and of which they say the defendants have forcibly taken possession in December 1889.

The defence was that the 9 cottahs had been held by Shyama Sundari Dasi under the Maharajah ; that 5 cottahs of it had been held by the Malas, and the other 4 cottahs by other persons, as her tenants ; that she sold the land to the defendant No. 4, and that since the sale the Malas and the other tenants paid their rent to the defendants, and that the Malas had no saleable or transferable interest in the land which they could transfer to the plaintiffs.

After a good many postponements, the case came on for hearing before the Munsif of Sealdah on the 30th of December 1890, on which occasion the defendants applied for a further postponement, on the ground that their witnesses were not present ; but their application was refused, the evidence for the plaintiffs taken, the defendant No. 4 himself, we are told, examined, and the case fixed for the next day, the 31st, for delivery of judgment.

On the 31st the defendants appeared and produced the witnesses, to obtain whose attendance they had on the day before requested that the case might be adjourned, and applied to the Munsif, before judgment was given, to be allowed to examine them ; this the Munsif refused, and on the same day gave judgment for the plaintiffs. The decision was appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who dismissed the appeal on the ground that he was not satisfied that the Munsif was wrong in his procedure. The matter now comes before us in second appeal.

It is clear that the defendants were in fault in not being prepared with their witnesses on the 30th, which was the day [743] fixed for the hearing of the case, and if judgment had been given for the plaintiffs on that day, or before their witnesses had in fact been produced, the case would have been the ordinary one, and I do not see what could have been said in support of this appeal ; but here the defendants' witnesses were produced and tendered for examination whilst the case was pending, i.e., before judgment had been given, and I am unable to think that a judgment given under such circumstances without knowing what the witnesses actually tendered had to say, can be satisfactory or indeed safe ; and if the provisions of the Code are sufficient to enable us to set aside this judgment, and direct that these witnesses shall be heard, I think that this is a case in which we ought to do so.

The question is whether the refusal by the Munsif on the 31st to examine the witnesses then tendered to him by the defendants, was a substantial error or defect in the procedure which might possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case on the merits. There cannot be a doubt that, having regard to the character of the dispute between the parties, the decision of the case on the merits may have been affected by the fact that the Munsif did not hear the defendants' witnesses, and so the question becomes narrowed to the one point, whether his refusal to do so on the 31st was a substantial error or defect of procedure on his part. I think it was. There can, I think, be no doubt that a Judge is quite acting within his powers in declining, in the exercise of his discretion, to postpone the decision of a case beyond the day fixed for the trial to enable the parties to produce further evidence, and it may be—though as to this I do not wish to express any decided opinion—that if each party had announced that his case was complete and closed, and after such announcement the case had been postponed for the delivery of judgment only, the Judge might, in the exercise of his discretion, refuse on the day fixed for the delivery of judgment, and before giving judgment, to examine any witnesses who might then be tendered to him ; but that was not the case. So far from announcing on the 30th that their case was complete and closed, the defendants on that day announced that it was not, and that they wished to call more witnesses, and on the 31st they actually produced the witnesses whom they desired to call.

[744] I do not think that in refusing to hear them when produced under these circumstances the Munsif exercised a sound discretion; and as it is obvious that it may (whether it did or not it is of course impossible to say) have affected the decision on the merits, I think the case is one in which we ought to interfere, in second appeal.

I think the appeal should be allowed, the judgment set aside, and the case remanded to the Munsif, who should reinstate it on his file, and after hearing all the evidence form an opinion upon the whole of it, and give judgment in accordance with such opinion. As, however, the whole difficulty has been occasioned by the fault of the defendants in not being prepared with their witnesses on the 30th, I think that they should pay the whole of the costs from that day down to the time when the fresh inquiry before the Munsif commences.

GHOSE, J.—I agree in the order of remand which the Chief Justice proposes to make, but I confess that I do so after some hesitation. The hesitation has been owing to this: The Court of first instance, upon the application made by the defendants on the 30th December for adjournment, and that made on the 31st for examination of certain witnesses, was called upon to exercise a discretion. And it exercised that discretion by disallowing the application. The lower appellate Court on appeal has held under the circumstances of the case that the Munsif did not exercise his discretion improperly. The doubt that I feel is whether in second appeal we are at liberty to interfere with the decree of the lower appellate Court upon the ground that the Munsif improperly used his discretion in not complying with the request of the defendants. It is not a case where the Court, under the Code of Civil Procedure, was bound to allow the adjournment on the 30th or to examine the witnesses tendered on the 31st, because I take it that the defendants should have produced their witnesses on the 30th December, and they had no right to ask that their witnesses should be examined, after the order recorded on the former date that the case is closed. This order was recorded after the evidence such as the defendants tendered had been taken. There was no irregularity in the procedure followed by the Munsif. That being so, the question is reduced simply to one of proper or improper exercise [745] of discretion, and I doubt whether in a matter like this we can determine in second appeal whether that discretion was rightly or wrongly exercised.

But I find that in a case which was decided in appeal under the Letters Patent (No. 2 of 1888) by Petheram, C.J., and O'Kinealy and Banerjee, JJ., where a similar question of improper exercise of discretion was raised, the learned Judges in second appeal examined the proceedings in order to see whether the Courts below had exercised their discretion properly or not (1).

(1) Taylor v. Sarat Chunder Roy Chowdhry, Letters Patent Appeal 2 of 1888, on appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1090 of 1887, decided on the 5th December 1888. In this case the defendant, Taylor, applied (after several former applications on the same ground had been made and granted) for a further postponement of the case to enable him to produce his witnesses. The Court of first instance refused the application, and the lower appellate Court on appeal was of opinion that the postponement had been rightly refused. On second appeal the only question was whether the first Court had

So far as the proceedings in this case are concerned, there is nothing to indicate that the application made by the defendants on the 30th was otherwise than bona fide. I am rather disposed to think that the defendants were in earnest in proving their case if they could, and that the Munsif would have exercised a sound discretion if he had examined the witnesses that were tendered on the 31st. The refusal of the Munsif to examine the witnesses then tendered may have prejudiced the defendants.

The doubt that I feel, whether this Court is entitled to interfere in a matter like this, is not so strong as to justify me in differing from the learned Chief Justice, and I am glad that he is of opinion that the case should be remanded to the Court below, because I think the ends of justice require that the defendants should have another opportunity of proving their case if they can.

Sale for arrears of rent—Reg. VIII of 1890, s 14—Putni sale—Seputni interest—Notice of sale—Onus of proof as to requirements of Reg. VIII of 1819.

Certain putnidars having defaulted, their putni right was put up for sale by the zemindar under Reg. VIII of 1819 and purchased by the defendants. The plaintiffs being seputnidars of a portion of the lands let out in putni were, after the sale, dispossessed by the defendants. The seputnidars brought a suit against the defendants asking for possession of the mouzahs forming their seputni, alleging that the notification of sale had not been duly served, and that the proceedings taken by the zemindar were bad, as they were taken in the name of the last deceased holder of the putni. The zemindar was made a party to the suit, but no relief was asked against him.

Held, that notwithstanding that the plaint questioned the validity of the sale, the suit was not one under s. 14 of the Regulation, no relief being claimed against the zemindar, and the plaintiffs' only remedy was a suit under s. 14 of the Regulation to set aside the sale of the entire putni.

THE plaintiffs in this case were holders of a seputni interest in four mouzahs in lot Bhastara, the defendant No. 9 being the durputnidar, the defendant No. 2 being one of the five putnidars of the lot to whom the durputni rent was payable; the defendants 1, 3, 4, and 5 being the other holders of the putni interest; the defendant No. 8, the Rajah of Burdwan, being the zemindar.

properly exercised its discretion in refusing it, and the Judges of the High Court who heard the appeal (NORRIS and GHOSE, JJ.) were divided in opinion, NORRIS, J., thinking that the postponement ought to have been granted, and GHOSE, J., being of opinion that the Court acted rightly in refusing it. On appeal under the Letters Patent the Judges (PETHERAM, C.J., O'KINEALY, J., and BANERJEE, J.), upheld the judgment of GHOSE, J., being unanimously of opinion that the Court of first instance in refusing the postponement had properly exercised its discretion.—Ed. [This case is referred to in 20 C. 740 (745); 9 C.L.J. 367 (372) = 13 C.W.N. 493.]

On the 17th November 1886 the putni was sold under Reg. VIII of 1818 for arrears of rent, and at such sale was bought by the defendants 6 and 7, who took possession of these mouzahs included in the seputni and dispossessed the plaintiffs therefrom.

The plaintiffs on the 14th November 1877 brought this suit, valued in accordance with the value of their seputni right, to [747] recover possession of their seputni interest in these mouzahs, and for a declaration that the sale had not affected their seputni right, inasmuch as the sale had been brought about without due publication of the sale notice, and by the collusion and fraud of the putnidar defendant and the purchasers, who had acted with the object of destroying their (the plaintiffs') seputni interest; alleging that the sale proceedings were bad, having been taken against deceased persons: and that the notice of sale was bad, as it did not comply with s. 8 of the Regulation. They, however, asked no relief against the zemindar. The defendants denied these statements. The notice of sale was not filed as an exhibit in the case, or rather it was withdrawn from the file by the defendant No. 8. The Subordinate Judge found that there was no fraud in the sale, and that the proceedings taken by the zemindar were regular, and that the sale notification was duly published in the mofussil, and inasmuch as the sale notification was not before him, he found that the contention of the plaintiffs as to its non-compliance with s. 8 of the Regulation had not been established, and he therefore dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Sir Griffith Evans, Dr. Troylokya Nath Mitter, Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry, and Baboo Tarit Mohun Dass, for the appellants.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee, Baboo Jogesh Chunder De and Baboo Ram Churn Mitter, for the respondents.

Sir Griffith Evans.—The onus of proof that the requirements of the Regulation have been complied with is on the zemindar—Hurro Doyal Roy Chowahry v. Mahomed Gazi Chowdhry (1) and Doorga Churn Surma v. Najunooddeen (2). In the case of Raj Narain Mitter v. Ananta Lal Mondul (3), the remarks as to onus of Tottenham, J., are obiter, and Ghose, J., decided nothing on that point. The nature of the proclamation can only now be gathered from the receipt, which states that "the 2nd Aughran has been fixed as the time on which the arrears must be paid." [748] I would now ask the Court, the proclamation not being forthcoming, to take further evidence on the point. I can produce evidence as to the nature of the notice. [This application was opposed by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, and the Court intimated that they would decide later on as to whether further evidence should be taken. Sir G. Evans then continued]:—The evidence shows that the notice was not such as is required by the Regulation; and if the sale is a nullity from non-compliance with duties, I am entitled to sue to recover possession. With regard to the manner of service of the notice, I say there has been no sale under the Regulation; the certificate of sale is no proof of it; the defendants must prove the notice of sale; they only prove that the ministerial officer did something, but they do not prove what it was. The onus as to this is on the defendants.

Dr. Troylokya Nath Mitter, followed on the same side, dealing with the evidence.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, for the respondents.

(1) 19 C. 699.

(2) 21 W.R. 397.

(3) 19 C. 703 (713).

[The Court intimated that it was unnecessary for the learned pleader to touch on the question of the service of the notice.]

On the pleadings the plaintiffs are not entitled to challenge the sale on the ground that the notice did not contain all that it ought to contain—see Collette v. Goode (1). Fry, J., there refers to Byrd v. Nunn (2). Evidence cannot be given on this technical point. I further take objection to the form of the suit. The putni comprises 108 villages, and the plaintiffs are seputnidars of only four of these villages; the plaint does not raise the question of notice not having been served; it merely states that the notice is bad. No suit having been brought to set aside the sale, the sale became good in November 1887, and no one can indirectly try to set it aside. The present suit is not one to set aside the sale; if such a suit had been brought under s. 14 of the Regulation, the defendants could then have got what they want. I submit the plaintiffs cannot otherwise attack the validity of my purchase—Unnoda Persad Roy v. Erskine (3). [749] I show a prima facie title when I produce the sale certificate. Putni sales stand in a higher position than revenue sales, and s. 14 alone provides the plaintiffs with their remedy.

Sir Griffith Evans in reply.—With reference to the argument that putni sales stand in a higher position than revenue sales, and that s. 14 is my remedy, I would point out that the revenue sale law in s. 33 is a very much stronger section than s. 14; the Civil Courts say that if the sale is void, owing to want of jurisdiction, the sale can be avoided, e.g., where there are in reality no arrears due, or where there is a want of notice—Bajinath Sahu v. Lala Sital Prasad (4) and Lala Mobarak Lal v. Secretary of State (5). Now in our case the power of sale did not arise owing to the want of a condition precedent. [GHOSE, J.—Can the Courts indemnify the purchaser as he could be indemnified under s. 14 of the Regulation?] If the sale is void, I am freed from this dilemma. The case of Perkin v. Proctor (6), referred to in Bajinath Sahu v. Lala Sital Prasad (4), is on the point of condition precedent to jurisdiction. In Maharajah of Burdwan v. Tarasundari Debi (7) the Court went a long way and pointed out what is the foundation of the power of sale, and though there was evidence on both sides of the fact of publication, the Privy Council would not say which evidence was right, but yet said the sale was void; and that is the ground of decision in Hurro Dayal Roy Chowdhry v. Mahomed Gazi Chowdhry. As to the form of the suit, paragraph 5 does not admit that the "istafa" was a proper one. I say that it means generally that it was not a good one: the pleadings are sufficient for my purpose.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and GHOSE, J.):—

JUDGMENTS.

GHOSE, J.—The facts of this case are shortly these. A putni taluk, lot Bhastara, consisting of a large number of mouzahs, was owned by the defendants 1 to 5, the Maharaja of Burdwan, defendant No. 8, being the zemindar. Four out of the mouzahs which constituted the putni were let out in durputni, and the durputnidar sublet them in seputni to the plaintiffs. For the arrears of [750] rent due upon the putni for the first half-year of 1893 B. S., the zemindar took proceedings under Reg. VII of 1819, and caused the putni to be sold on the 17th November 1836.

(Aughran 1293 B. S.). It was purchased by the defendants 6 and 7 for the sum of two lakhs of rupees, and the auction-purchasers, entitled as they were to treat durputni and seputni as cancelled by the sale, if the sale had been properly conducted, proceeded to take khas possession of the properties comprised in the putni, the result being that the plaintiffs, the seputnidars, were dispossessed of the four mouzahs. Thereupon they brought the present suit on the 14th November 1887 to recover possession thereof. The case made in the plaint is that the sale was brought about in collusion between the putnidars and the auction-purchaser; that the proceedings taken by the zemindar were bad, because they were taken against a deceased person who was no longer the putnidar; and that the sale notification was not duly and legally served upon the property. And the plaintiffs asked that the sale be declared to be bad and such as could not have the effect of extinguishing the plaintiffs' seputni right, and that they be restored to possession of the four mouzahs in question. The suit was valued at Rs. 10,000, being the estimated value of the plaintiffs' seputni right in those four mouzahs only.

The Court below was of opinion that the cause of action to the plaintiffs being the sale of the putni, the suit should be valued at the price at which the putni was sold, and not at the value of the four mouzahs included in the seputni. And the plaintiffs not having paid the Court-fees required to be paid upon two lakhs of rupees (the price at which the putni was sold), the plaint was rejected.

The plaintiffs appealed against this judgment of the lower Court; and they appealed mainly upon the ground that the subject-matter of the suit was not the putni that had been sold, but merely the seputni of a small portion of the putni; that it was not necessary for the Court to set aside the sale of the putni before the plaintiffs could obtain relief; and that the Court-fee was payable only upon the market value of the property sued for. And a Divisional Bench of this Court (Petheram, C. J., and Gordon, J.) held that the subject-matter of the suit was the [751] property which the plaintiffs sought to recover and not the defendants' interest in the entire putni, and that the valuation placed upon the subject-matter by the plaintiffs was correct. This Court accordingly remanded the case to the Court below for trial on the merits.

Upon remand the Court laid down certain issues, and evidence was adduced by either party upon those issues.

The Subordinate Judge has found upon the evidence that there was no fraud in the matter of the sale, that the proceedings taken by the zemindar were regular, and that the sale notification was duly published in the mofussil. It appears upon the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that in the course of argument it was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the notice of sale was bad in law, because it did not specify, as provided by cl. 3, s. 8 of Reg. VIII of 1819, that the sale would not take place if the whole of the advertised balance, or three-fourths of it, were paid before the date fixed for sale.

The record shows that the notification of sale, though a copy of it was produced by the zemindar, was not exhibited as evidence, nor did the plaintiffs take any steps to have it so exhibited. It appears to have been withdrawn from the file by the zemindar on the 12th August, when the defendants, the purchasers of the putni, adduced their evidence. The Subordinate Judge, in the absence of the sale-notification, found himself unable to say whether it did or did not contain the intimation contended for by the plaintiffs : he accordingly overruled the contention of the plaintiffs. The result of the trial in the lower Court was that the suit was dismissed.

It is from this decree of dismissal that the present appeal has been preferred. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs have raised but two points before us. First, that the notice of sale was not published in the mofussil. Second, supposing it was published, that it did not contain the intimation that the sale would be prevented if three-fourths of the advertised balance were paid in before the date fixed for sale. It was contended that the zemindar being responsible for the regularity of the proceedings taken under Reg. VIII of 1819, the onus of proof that the requirements of the Regulation had been complied with was upon him, that [752] it was not shown that the notice of sale did contain the said intimation, and that the sale was altogether bad in law, the notice being the foundation for the sale. The learned counsel further asked us to admit fresh evidence in this appeal by calling upon the zemindar to produce a duplicate copy of the notice of sale in order that the matter of the legality of the notice may be decided.

As regards the first point raised before us, we have no hesitation in saying that the conclusion arrived at by the Court below is right. There can be no doubt whatever that the notice of sale was served at the putnidar's mal katcheri, as prescribed by the Regulation.

As to the other point discussed before us, it would appear upon examination of the plaint that the ground of attack of the plaintiffs, as regards the notice, was that it was not duly served in the mofussil. There was no question raised as to its contents. There was no doubt an issue involving the question of the legality of the notice, but it is quite plain upon the proceedings that the plaintiffs did not intend to raise the question now raised : viz., that the notice of sale did not contain an intimation that the sale would not take place if three-fourths of the balance were paid. The plaintiffs did not call upon the putnidars to produce the original notice that was served at the mal katcheri, nor did they call upon the zemindar to produce a duplicate copy thereof; and, as already noticed, although the zemindar did put upon the file a copy of the notice, the plaintiffs took no steps to have it exhibited as evidence in the record, and it was allowed to be taken back, apparently without any objection on their part. It seems to me that under these circumstances the plaintiffs have no right to ask us to admit fresh evidence in this appeal with a view to prove a matter which was entirely in their power to prove if they chose.

The contention that the onus of proof was upon the zemindars to prove the legality of the notice of sale was based upon certain rulings which were quoted before us by the learned counsel for the appellant. No doubt those cases seem to lay down that the zemindar is bound to prove that all the requirements of the putni Regulation were complied with. But I observe that those were cases brought to set aside the sale under s. 14, Reg. VIII of 1819. This, however, is not a suit to set aside the sale within [753] the meaning of that law, and although no doubt the validity of the sale was questioned in the plaint, still it was not a suit framed for that purpose, and no relief was claimed against the zemindar. The subject-matter of the suit was simply the small portion of the property covered by the plaintiffs' seputni (as indeed it was their case when they appealed to this Court on the last occasion), and not the whole property, that was sold at the putni sale. The true cause of action was the sale of the whole estate, and the plaintiffs should have framed and valued the suit accordingly, so that the rights of all the parties concerned could be adjusted in accordance with the spirit of s. 14 of the Regulation. [see the case of Unnoda Pershad Roy v. Erskine (1) decided by a Full Bench of this Court.]

Upon all these grounds I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

PETHARAM, C.J.—Mr. Justice Ghose has stated the facts so fully that I need not mention them again.

Sir Griffith Evans, founding his argument on the dictum of the Privy Council in the case of Ahsanulla Khan Bahadur v. Hari Charan Mozumdar (2), that a strict compliance by the zemindar with the rules prescribed by the Regulation is a condition precedent to the validity of the sale, has contended that the onus of proving that each and all of the rules have been complied with lies upon the person who claims under the sale, and that as the defendants have not proved that the notice which was posted up at the mal katcheri was in the form required by the Regulation, the plaintiffs must succeed, and in case there should be any doubt on this, he has also applied to be allowed to call fresh evidence in this Court to prove what that notice actually was. If this suit had been brought to obtain the relief to which a person affected by the sale of a putni is entitled under s. 14 of the Regulations, I should have very great difficulty in coming to the conclusion that upon the authorities quoted the plaintiffs would not be entitled to succeed without proving that the notice was insufficient, and at all events I could not say that under the circumstances of this case they ought [754] not to be allowed to prove what it did in fact contain; but Dr. Rash Behari Ghose on behalf of the defendants has contended that this suit is one which cannot be maintained at all, and in my opinion he was right in that contention. As has been before said, this is not a suit to set aside the sale, but is one to obtain possession of four mouzas which the plaintiffs claim as their property and which are in the possession of the 6th and 7th defendants, who obtained them as part of a putni purchased by them at an auction held by the Collector. The zemindar is a formal defendant on the record, but no relief is asked against him. The Regulation, ss. 8, 9, 10, and 11 provide that a defaulting putni may be sold by the Collector at the instance of the zemindar under certain conditions, and that the purchaser shall acquire the tenure on the same condition as that in which the zemindar created it (s. 11). Section 14 provides that any person desirous of contesting the right of the zemindar to make the sale may bring a suit against him to reverse it. In such a suit the purchaser must be made a party, and the claims of all parties are to be disposed of, and the section goes on to provide that when a dispute exists as to the amount of rent due, a summary investigation is to be held, but that if it is not completed when the day fixed for the sale arrives, the sale is to proceed, and the alleged defaulter shall have no remedy but by a regular action for damages or to set aside the sale. This being the law, the question is whether when the Collector has gone through the form of selling a putni, and has placed the purchaser in possession, the whole transaction is absolutely void if the zemindar has not complied with one of the rules, or whether it is one which in that case can be reversed at the instance of any person injured in a suit brought by him against the zemindar to which the persons interested are necessary parties, and in which complete justice can be done. In my opinion the transaction is voidable only, and, moreover, that it can only be avoided by a suit under the provisions of s. 14. The second clause of that section provides that in the cases which that clause deals with, a suit to reverse the sale shall be the only remedy for the alleged defaulter, and this shows quite clearly to my mind that the Legislature could not have contemplated that a sale held by the Collector under the Regulation should under any circumstances be [755] void; as, if that were so a putnidar who was in default, and whose putni had been sold without a complete compliance with the rules, could maintain an action to recover possession of it, on the ground that the sale was no sale at all, and that his estate in the land was not affected by it; whereas the section says in so many words that in some cases of the kind, at all events, his only remedy shall be by suit for damages and to set aside the sale. I think that such a sale is good and effectual, unless and until it is reversed in a suit properly framed for the purpose, and that until that is done, the title of any person who claims under it is valid against all persons who claim under the alleged defaulter.

(1) 12 B.L.R. 370.

(2) 20 C. 86=19 I.A. 191.

The result is that this appeal will be dismissed with costs.

HAFIZUDDIN CHOWDHRY AND OTHERS (Decree-holders)
v. ABDOOL AZIZ (Judgment-debtor).^{*}
[6th April, 1893.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 179, cl. 4—Execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 365, 366—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 4, cl. (b), art. (iii).

On the 10th January 1890 the heirs of a deceased decree-holder (who herself had last applied for execution on the 19th March 1887) made an application for execution of a decree asking for the arrest of the judgment-debtor. At the time of this application the heirs had neither taken out a certificate under Act VII of 1889, nor had they applied for substitution of their names on the record. The Munsif directed the applicants to obtain a certificate, and on their failing to do so, he rejected their application for execution on the 21st January 1890. On the 13th September 1890 the heirs having obtained a certificate under Act VII of 1889, but not having substituted their names on the record, applied for execution against the properties of the judgment-debtor. Held that the application of the 10th January 1890 was one made in accordance with law, within the meaning of art. 179, cl. 4 of the Limitation Act, and that therefore the application of the 13th September 1890 was not barred, [756] On the 9th October 1882 one Hyder Ali obtained a decree against one Abdool Aziz, and during her lifetime, in the years 1883, 1885 and 1887, made successive applications for execution of that decree; the last of such application, viz., that of the 19th March 1887, having been struck off for default.

On the 10th January 1890 the heirs of Hyder Ali, without substitution of their names on the record, made a further application for execution of that decree, asking for the arrest of the judgment-debtor, but inasmuch as they had not obtained a certificate under Act VII of 1889, the Court directed them to obtain a certificate, and on the 21st January 1890 (they not having done so) rejected their application for execution. On the 20th May 1890 the heirs of Hyder Ali obtained a certificate under Act VII of 1889, and on the 13th September 1890 made this present application for execution, asking for sale of certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtor.

The judgment-debtor contended that the application was barred it having been made more than three years from the 19th March 1887, and the application of the 10th January 1890 not being one made in accordance with law, the representatives of Hyder Ali not having at that time obtained a certificate under Act VII of 1889, nor obtained substitution of their names on the record and further that the representatives of the decree-holder had made no application to restore the execution case after it had been dismissed for default on the 21st January 1890.

The Munsif held that the application of the 10th January 1890 was not a legal one, owing to the heirs not having taken out a certificate, and could not be taken as a proceeding to keep alive the decree.

On appeal the District Judge held that, inasmuch as the representatives of the deceased decree-holder had not applied for substitution of their names on the record, they could not be said to be the holders of the decree, and were not entitled therefore to make the application of the 10th January 1890, referring to the case of Gunga Pershad Bhoomick v. Debi Sundari Dabea (1). He therefore dismissed the appeal.

[757] The representatives of Hyder Ali appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Troylokya Nath Mitter and Baboo Tarit Mohun Das, for the appellants contended that the application of the 10th January 1890 was a good one, it having been made by the representative of the deceased decree-holder and in accordance with law, and that it saved the present application from being barred.

Baboo Hem Chunder Bnnerjee and Baboo Mokund Nath Roy, for the respondent, contended that the application having been dismissed under s. 158 of the Civil Procedure Code for default, and no appeal having been made from that order, no fresh application could be made; and that the application of the 10th January 1890 was not one made in accordance with law within the meaning of the Succession Certificate Act and the Limitation Act.

The judgment of the Court (O'KINEALY and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

In this case the decree-holder, a Mahomedan lady, died, leaving as heirs and residuaries ten persons. After her death these ten persons applied for execution of the decree, and the application was registered, but as they were not in a position to file a certificate such as is required by s. 4, cl. (b) of the Succession Certificate Act, the application was dismissed. That was an application to arrest the debtor. The present application is of a different nature, and it is admitted on all hands that if the former application was such as is contemplated by art. 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, the decree-holders are not barred.

(1) 11 C. 227.

The point I think is very easy of decision. Both the Civil Procedure Code and the Limitation Act were passed long before the Succession Certificate Act. Therefore, whatever interpretation may be put on the word "application" as used in the Civil Procedure Code and the Limitation Act, it could in no way depend upon the Succession Certificate Act.

Then it is said that the persons who made the application were not the proper persons to make it. The answer to that is that, when a decree is transferred, as in the present case, by operation of law, the transferee may apply for execution. Here the application was in proper form and made by the heirs of the decree-holder.

[758] It has been further argued that as the previous application to which I have referred was dismissed by the Munsif under s. 158 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that decision was not appealed from, the decree-holder can make no further application. Admitting for the sake of argument, and only for the sake of argument, that the order rejecting the previous application was made under s. 158, still it is quite clear that the relief asked for in that application was different from what is asked for here, and consequently the decree-holders are not debarred from making the present application.

The result is that the decisions of the lower Courts must be set aside and the appeal allowed with costs.

Evidence Act I of 1872, s. 32, cl. 5—Statement of deceased relatives—Hearsay evidence—Birth, date of.

For the purpose of the decision of a question of limitation, it was necessary to prove the date of the plaintiff's birth. The plaintiff and one of his witnesses each spoke to statements made to them by relatives of the plaintiff who were since deceased, relating to the date of the plaintiff's birth: Held that such statements were admissible in evidence under s. 32, cl. 5 of the Evidence Act.

had attained majority, the cause of action having accrued during his minority, more than 12 years before suit.

On the trial of an issue as to whether the suit was barred by limitation, it became necessary for the plaintiff to prove the date of his birth; and the plaintiff gave his evidence on this point, and proved statements made to him by deceased relatives as to the date of his birth.

Another witness for the plaintiff proved statements made by deceased relatives of the plaintiff on the same point made during the negotiations for the plaintiff's marriage.

The Subordinate Judge admitted this evidence and decided the question of majority in favour of the plaintiff, but dismissed the case on the question of the construction of the will.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, and on the hearing the respondents again raised the objection of limitation and contended that this evidence was not admissible, and without it there was not sufficient to prove the age of the plaintiff.

The question of the admissibility of the statements made by deceased relatives is the only one material to this report.

Mr. T. A. Apcar (with him Baboo Nilmadeb Sen and Baboo Sarat Chunder Dutt) for the appellants relied on Haines v. Guthrie (1) and Bipin Behary Daw v. Sreedam Chunder Dey (2), and contended that illustration (l) to s. 32 of the Evidence Act is not law, as it goes beyond the section.

Sir Griffith Evans (with him Baboo Aushutosh Dhur and Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose), for the respondent.—I admit that recent cases in England have settled the law against the admissibility of this evidence. But the Law of Evidence in India is contained in Act I of 1872. Prior to 1872 the law could not be said to be definitely settled in England, although there was a tendency to confine the statements of deceased relations as to relationship to what were termed "pedigree cases" (i. e., cases where such statements were used for genealogical purposes), and it was a moot point whether evidence as to age and place of birth was admissible even [760] in such cases. The Indian Evidence Act has not adopted that limitation. A statement which "relates to the existence of any relationship by blood," etc., is admissible (if admissible at all) in all cases where it is relevant—see s. 32; and illustration (l) shows that a statement by a deceased father announcing the birth of his son A on a given day is a statement relating to the existence of relationship by blood, and also that it is admissible whenever the question to be decided is, what was the date of A's birth.

It is not strange that there should be this difference between the Indian Act and the English cases; for the framers of the Indian Act proceeded on broad principles and were not hampered by the authority of decisions, and in admitting the evidence of persons other than relations they have gone beyond the English decisions.

Although the Indian Act is based on the English Law of Evidence, it has not servilely followed the English cases, but has in more than one instance departed from them, and swept away unnecessarily nice distinctions, resting more on authority than principle. I submit the evidence is admissible in India, and that the words "relates to the existence of relationship" in s. 32 are wide enough to cover even statements as to the commencement of relationship in point of time, and as to the locality when it commenced or existed, so that illustration (l) does not go beyond the words of the section, but is properly an illustration of its meaning. The case of Bipin Behary Daw v. Sreedam Chunder Dey (1) has been overruled by the unreported case of Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose (2) decided by Petheram, C.J., and Pigot, J., in original appeal No. 23 of 1890, on the 15th September 1890, and is a direct authority on the point.

(1) L.R. 13 Q. B. D. 818.

(2) 13 C. 42.

In Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose, one of the questions was as to whether the plaintiff was a minor when he signed a certain deed: and as evidence of age, a plaint in a former suit verified by a deceased member of the family was tendered in evidence and admitted. In the argument Haines v. Guthrie and Bipin Behary Dew v. Sreedam Chunder Dey were cited. On this point, Petheram, C.J., said: "But besides all this, the plaint in the suit of 1879 was put in; that plaint was signed by Nursingh Chunder Bose, the maternal [761] grandfather of the defendant, a person who is since dead, and it is contended on behalf of the defendant that statements in it, as to the order in which Shumbhoonath's sons were born, and as to the dates of their births, are evidence under s. 32, sub-s. 5 of the Evidence Act, and that, if so, they are conclusive. It was contended on the part of the plaintiff, on the authority of the English cases, that as the question at issue in this case did not relate to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption, the section did not apply, and the statements were excluded by the ordinary rules of evidence. I think that on this point the law in India under the Evidence Act is different from the law of England, and that the effect of the section is to make a statement made by such a person relating to the existence of such relationship admissible to prove the facts contained in the statement on any issue, and that the plaint was admissible to prove the order in which the sons of Shumbhoonath were born, and their ages." In that view Pigot, J., concurred. The question is therefore concluded by authority.

Mr. Apar, in reply.

The judgment of the Court (O'KINEALY and AMEER ALI, JJ.) so far as is necessary for this report, was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiff asserts that he was born on the 10th March 1867, corresponding to the 27th of Falgun 1274 B. S. This suit was filed on the 7th March 1891, and as he would have three years to bring it after he had attained his majority, he was according to his own showing within time. The defendants on the other hand assert that the plaintiff was not born in 1274, but in 1272, and that consequently his suit was out of time. Both the parties fix the time of birth with reference to a famine which took place in that part of the country in 1273. In the discussion which arose on the point of limitation, it was strongly urged for the appellant that the statements of deceased persons in regard to the date of the plaintiff's birth were not admissible as evidence under s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act; and in support of that contention the case of Haines v. Guthrie (3) was referred to. It was further asserted that the law of England in this respect is the same as the law of India, but in dealing with the point [762] we must bear in mind that when the Evidence Act was passed in this country, this question of hearsay evidence was not then so definitely settled as it is now. Some of the text-books supported the contention, that hearsay evidence was admissible to prove the date of birth, and looking at illustrations (k to m) of s. 32, we think that view was adopted by the Legislature, and that such a statement is admissible in evidence.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep, Mr Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

MOHENDRO CHANDRA GANGULI (Plaintiff) v. ASHUTOSH GANGULI AND ANOTHER (Defendants).^{*} [11th May, 1893.]

Costs—Costs of preliminary issue in partition suit—Stamp in partition suit.

The plaintiff brought a suit to have 99 items of property partitioned. The plaintiff bore a court-fee stamp of Rs. 10. The defendants admitted that three of the properties were ancestral and joint, but as to the other items the 2nd defendant stated that they were the self-acquired property of her deceased husband, and contended that the plaint was insufficiently stamped, as the object of the suit was to obtain a declaration of title and possession of properties in which the plaintiff had no interest. An issue was raised on this point, and on this issue the Subordinate Judge allowed the objection and rejected the plaint. On appeal, held by PETHERAM, C. J., and NORRIS, J., that the plaint was sufficiently stamped. The only relief prayed for was partition, and for the purposes of the stamp the cause of action which is stated in the plaint, and that only, must be looked at.

The members of the appeal Bench, however, differed in opinion as regards the question of costs, Petheram, C. J., being of opinion that the costs of the appeal should be treated in the same way as the rest of the costs in the case, and be divided between the parties to the partition; and Norris, J., holding that the respondent having failed on appeal ought to pay the costs; and on this question an appeal was preferred under the Letters Patent, cl. 15.

Held by PRINSEP and TREVELYAN, JJ.—The costs of the appeals were severable from the general costs of the suit, and therefore, though the suit [763] was one for partition, the principle that the unsuccessful party must pay the costs was applicable so far as the appeals were concerned; the respondent therefore should pay all the costs in the two appeals.

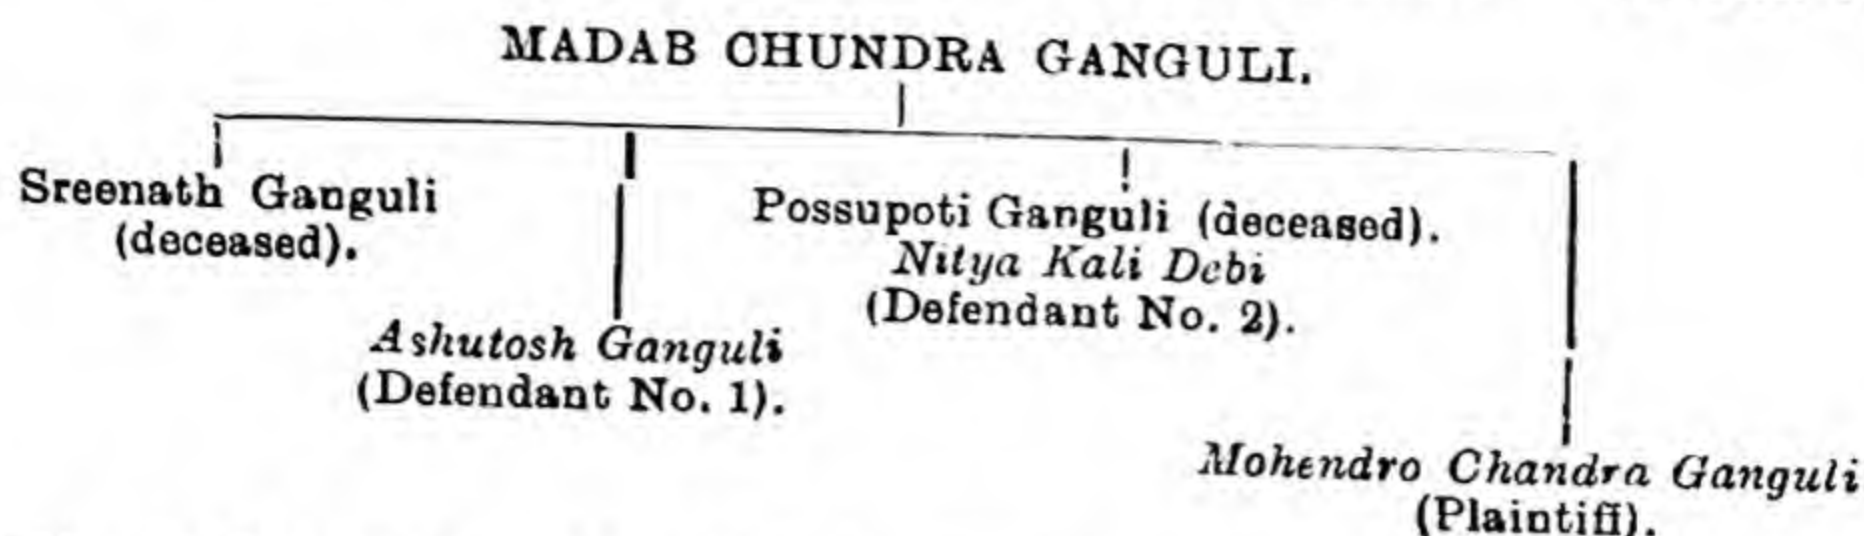

Held by PIGOT, J.—The respondent should pay in any event her own costs of the preliminary issue and of the appeal, but that, as to the plaintiff's costs of that issue and of the appeal, they should be in the discretion of the Court as between the parties to this appeal, such costs being in no case to form part of the costs of the partition.

THE facts in this case were as follows:—

Madab Chandra Ganguli died some 32 years ago, leaving him surviving four sons—(1) Sreenath Ganguli, since deceased, (2) Ashutosh Ganguli (defendant No. 1), (3) Possupoti Ganguli (husband of defendant No. 2), and (4) Mohendro Chandra Ganguli (the plaintiff).

When Madab Chandra died he left three items of property, and since then his sons have lived joint in food and worship. Sreenath, the eldest son, died without leaving any heirs or any self-acquired property. Defendant No. 2 in her written statement states that Possupoti, her husband, during his lifetime by his own exertions acquired a large amount of property and made many additions to the family dwelling-house. After the death of Possupoti, family disputes arose, and Mohendro Chandra, the fourth son, sought to have the joint family property partitioned. In his plaint he stated that there were 99 items of property—the original three items which were left by the father, and two other groups one containing 72 items and the other 24 items. These 96 items, he stated, were acquired by Possupoti while he was kurta of the family with the joint funds of the family, and that the whole 96 items were worth Rs. 48,424, and his suit being for one-third share, he valued his suit at Rs. 16,141 odd, but brought this suit on a court-fee stamp of Rs. 10, as the suit was one for partition. The Subordinate Judge returned the plaint as being insufficiently stamped, on the ground that the plaintiff could not (by joining in [764] his claim three properties as to which his title and possession was not disputed with distinct and independent properties of an enormous value) have the benefit of a suit for establishment of title to, and recovery of, the latter properties on payment of a court-fee stamp of Rs. 10. The Subordinate Judge directed the plaintiff to give evidence of a prima facie character as to his suit being a bona fide suit for partition of properties of which he was admittedly jointly in possession with the two defendants, in order to show that under colour of a partition suit he was not really seeking an adjudication of title to, and a decree for possession of, large properties in which he had no interest. The plaintiff declined to give evidence, and subsequently the plaint was rejected.

From this order the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The appeal was heard by PETHERAM, C. J., and NORRIS, J., and on the 7th December 1892 they delivered the following

JUDGMENTS.

PETHERAM, C. J.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiff against his own brother and the widow of another brother for the purpose of partitioning certain properties which the plaintiff says are family property. On the face of his plaint he alleges that one or two items of the property sought to be partitioned had descended to the family from their father, and as to the rest that it had been acquired by the exertions of the family and from family funds whilst the husband of the defendant No. 2 was acting as the kurta of the family. The properties said to have been so acquired are very numerous. In the written statement put in by the defendant No. 2, she alleges that she is in possession of this latter kind of property, and that it is not family property at all, but the separate self-acquisitions of her husband. She does not object to the partition of the ancestral property. I should have said that the plaint was stamped with a ten-rupee stamp. Under these circumstances it appears to me that a ten-rupee stamp is, according to the decisions of this Court, the proper stamp in a partition suit, where the only relief claimed is partition. The Subordinate Judge has returned the plaint as being insufficiently stamped, on the ground that, inasmuch as the whole of the property sought to be partitioned does not appear to have been property which descended from an ancestor of the parties, the suit is something more [765] than a partition suit, inasmuch as the plaintiff's right to share in this property at all will have to be enquired into in it, and he has called on the plaintiff to give some prima facie evidence before he would admit the plaint upon this stamp.

In that view we think he was wrong. First of all, we cannot see by what authority he called upon the plaintiff to give prima facie evidence of this kind at all; secondly, we think that, for the purposes of the stamp, the cause of action which is stated in the plaint, and that only, must be looked at. So far as this plaint is concerned, the only relief which is sought is the partition of property which the plaintiff says is family property, and which he says he is in possession of jointly with the others, because he says the possession of one member of a joint family of family property is the possession of all; and consequently, so far as the plaint is concerned, this is a suit for partition, and nothing else. It may be that to decide the question, what property is in the possession of one member as a member of a joint family, other questions will have to be tried; but if the plaintiff is entitled to have the property partitioned upon a ten-rupee stamp, the fact that the enquiry will be a long and difficult one does not affect the question of the stamp that will have to be paid for it; and if the only thing to be tried is how the joint property of this family is to be partitioned, that is but a suit for partition, and Rs. 10 being the proper stamp for such a suit, the Judge ought to have admitted the plaint.

For these reasons we think that the Judge was wrong, and accordingly we set aside his judgment in this case and send the case back for trial on the merits, with directions that he admit the plaint on a ten-rupee stamp and dispose of the case upon the merits according to law. I think that the question of costs ought to be reserved and ought to be dealt with by the Judge who deals with the rest of the case; and when I say that, I mean that in my opinion the costs of this appeal should be treated in the same way as the rest of the costs in the case. I think that in a partition suit the partition is for the benefit of all, and I think the costs ought in fairness to be divided between the parties. In this particular case I do not see that any of the parties was so far in fault as that he alone ought be saddled with the costs of any portion of this litigation.

[766] NORRIS, J.—I agree that the appeal should be decreed, but I see no reason why the respondent should not be made to pay the costs. His case stands on precisely the same footing as the case of any other respondent who has failed on appeal.

The Court being divided in opinion as regards the question of costs, an appeal was preferred by the plaintiff on that question under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The case came on for hearing before a Bench composed of PRINSEP, PIGOT, and TREVELYAN, JJ.

Baboo Golap Chunder Sarkar, for the appellant.—These costs would never have arisen had not the defendants raised the preliminary issue as regards the stamp on the plaint. The plaint having been rejected, the plaintiff was bound to come up in appeal to the High Court; the appeal being successful, the plaintiff should have been given costs in accordance with Norris, J.'s decision. It is clearly one of those cases in which the costs should follow the event, and the successful party should not be saddled with the costs. The following authorities support this view:—Himayat Husain v. Jai Devi (1), Ram Chander Shaha v. Manick Chunder Banikya (2), Bunwari Lall v. Chowdhry Drup Nath Singh (3), Moshingan v. Mazari Safad (4), Bhadeshwar Chowdhry v. Gauri Kant Nath (5), Amar Nath v. Thakur Das (6), Murari Singh v. Pryag Singh (7). The appellant should get his costs in both appeals and in the lower Court.

Baboo Baidnath Dutt, for respondents.—The only question is whether the objection raised is not such that the appellant should be made to pay the costs. The objection raised was a necessary one. The plaintiff endeavoured, by joining three properties, admittedly ancestral, with numerous others which were clearly not so, to get possession of a one-third share of the whole. Very naturally the defendants raised the objection, and it was absolutely necessary that the question should be decided before the plaintiff could take a portion of the whole property. The plaintiff, who has never added [767] anything to the family property, endeavoured to take advantage of the industry of his deceased brother. The Subordinate Judge was clearly of the same opinion, or he would not have called on the plaintiff to give prima facie evidence of the bona fides of his partition suit. The defendants resisted the plaintiff on the grounds that the properties were in their exclusive possession, and that the question as to whom they belong could not be tried on a Rs. 10 stamp. The learned Judges, however, have decided that the question can be so tried, but that is no reason why the defendants should be saddled with the whole of the costs. As the point has been tried for the benefit of all the parties, and the plaintiff refused to go into the witness-box to prove the bona fides of his claim, the costs should be divided between them in accordance with the view expressed by Petheram, C.J.

Baboo Golap Chunder Sarkar, in reply.—The other issues will no doubt have to be tried; if I fail eventually, I shall in losing the case be saddled with the costs. The only question is as to whether the property is joint or separate. The Judge in the lower Court wanted the plaintiff to prove that his case was bona fide. The plaintiff was not bound to go into the witness-box. If the defence was that the property was self-acquired, then the onus was on the defendants to prove it. They are not affected by the present decision; if any one is affected, it is the Government.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (PRINSEP, PIGOT, and TREVELYAN JJ.) :—

JUDGMENTS.

PRINSEP, J.—In a suit for partition brought by one co-sharer against two others, one of the defendants, amongst other objections, pleaded that the suit which had been instituted on a plaint bearing a stamp of Rs. 10 was undervalued, because the plaintiff had included amongst the joint properties certain valuable properties held exclusively by that defendant as her own, and it was stated that the object of the suit was to bring a suit for possession of that property on an inadequately stamped plaint and thus to defraud the Government revenue.

This was accordingly made the subject-matter of one of the issues, and on this issue the Subordinate Judge rejected the plaint.

On appeal this order was set aside, and the Subordinate Judge was directed to register and try the suit. The learned Judges, [768] however, differed in their order as to costs, the learned Chief Justice holding that the costs should form portion of the costs in the suit and be divided between the parties to the partition. Mr. Justice Norris, on the other hand, thought that the ordinary rule should be followed under which the unsuccessful party should pay the costs incurred in the appeal.

I am of opinion that this is not a case in which the parties to the partition should bear the costs rateably, for the matter out of which the appeal has arisen does not necessarily form part of that partition, and it was concerning an objection raised by only one of the parties which has been decided against him. It would therefore not be right to charge the other respondent with costs in a matter not raised by him and to which he was indifferent.

The sole question therefore is whether this is a case in which the usual rule should not be followed and costs follow the decision of the appeal. The matter raised and decided does not, in my opinion, necessarily relate to the decision of the merits of the suit. If it should so happen that the defendant should succeed in retaining the properties which she maintains as her own private properties, and therefore not subject to partition, she will no doubt be properly indemnified in costs. The fact remains that she has got the Subordinate Judge to stop the trial of the suit and to reject the plaint on an objection that the plaint did not comply with the law, and on appeal it has been found that her objection was untenable. She has consequently put the plaintiff to unnecessary expense and delay in the trial of his suit, and he is therefore, in my opinion, entitled to claim reimbursement of the costs incurred in obtaining a trial. I am therefore of opinion that the appellant should obtain the costs of this appeal and also of the appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge.

PIGOT, J.—I agree with the other members of the Court, and for the same reasons, that the order as to costs proposed by the Chief Justice is one which ought not to be made.

I do not, however, think that the appellant should have the costs of the preliminary issue, and of the appeal upon it, in any event. The order which I think ought to be made is that respondent should in any event pay her own costs of the preliminary issue and of the appeal: but that as to the plaintiff's costs of that issue and [769] of the appeal, they should be in the discretion of the Court, as between the parties to this appeal, such costs being in no case to form part of the costs of the partition. I think that in this case, if the plaintiff should wholly fail upon the merits of the questions raised between him and the defendant who is respondent in this appeal, it may well be that he ought not to have the costs of this appeal. That would, I think, depend upon the nature of the case made at the hearing, and I should leave this in the discretion of the Court which will try the case upon the merits.

TREVELYAN, J.—The only question before us is one of costs. The suit was brought for partition. Amongst other objections taken by the second defendant, there was one as to the stamp on the plaint, viz., that a stamp of Rs. 10 was insufficient. The Subordinate Judge before trying the rest of the case, tried the question as to the sufficiency of the stamp. He required the plaintiff to get into the box to show that his claim in respect of the properties, the title to which was denied by the defendant, was a bona fide one. On the plaintiff declining to give evidence in this respect, the Subordinate Judge rejected the plaint with costs. On appeal to this Court the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Norris held that the plaint ought not to have been rejected, but that the case ought to be tried on its merits according to law. They, however, differed as to the costs of the appeal. The Chief Justice thought these ought to be costs in the cause. Mr. Justice Norris thought that the appellant was entitled to his costs.

I think that the view taken by Mr. Justice Norris is the correct one. It is true that a partition suit, like some other classes of suits, is brought frequently for the benefit of all the parties to it, and for that reason it would generally be unfair to require any one party to pay the costs of the litigation; but that principle does not apply where one party has been successful in a matter, the costs of which are severable from the general costs of the suit. In that case the ordinary principle that the successful party is entitled to his costs is applicable. For instance, it has been held that where an agreement not to partition is set up in answer to a claim for partition, the costs of the trial of that question should be paid by the unsuccessful party. It also frequently happens that an issue is raised as to whether a particular property [770] is joint or separate. So far as the costs of this issue can be separate from the costs of the suit, it is usual to allow them to the party who is successful on that issue, whether he may or may not ultimately succeed in the suit. Where the defendant raises an objection of a technical character as to the continuance of the suit, and the objection is separately tried and the costs of it are in no way part of the costs of the suit, I think the only right course is to make the unsuccessful party pay the costs. On such an objection he runs the chance either of winning or losing. If he wins he gets the costs of the suit and is relieved of the litigation; and if he loses, he must run the chance of paying the costs. It seems to me that to adopt any other course would have the effect of inviting defendants to raise all sorts of objections technical or otherwise, in order to impede or defeat the trial on the merits of the case. Unless there is the attendant risk of paying the costs, a defendant would be at no disadvantage when putting forward obstructions of this nature. I think that, acting on the ordinary principle that an unsuccessful litigant should pay the costs of the litigation, we ought to order the second defendant to pay the costs of the appeal. They are in no sense costs of the cause, and therefore I do not agree with the Chief Justice that they should be treated as such. I do not think that they ought to be reserved. I think that it is desirable that the Court should, as far as possible, avoid reserving the question of costs. The Court that determines a question is best able to determine the costs, and reserving the costs in this case may amount to giving the Judge who eventually tries the case an opportunity of reconsidering what has been finally determined by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Norris. Even if it turns out that the plaintiff is unsuccessful in this case, I do not see why he should pay the second defendant the costs which he incurred by what has been held to be a wrong objection to the trial of the suit on its merits, or why he should not get the costs which the action of the defendant has forced him to incur. The proper penalty for losing a suit on the merits is to be made liable to pay the costs of the trial on the merits, not the costs of a separate trial on a matter unconnected with the merits in which the plaintiff is successful.

[771] In my opinion this appeal should be allowed and the appellant before us should get the costs of the appeal to this Court and also of the appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent.

The order requiring him to pay the costs in the Court below has been set aside, as the case is to be tried on its merits. It does not appear that any portion of these costs will be otherwise than useful for the purpose of the trial on the merits.

INSOLVENCY.

Before Sir Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Pigot.

In re DHUNPUT SINGH. [23rd May, 1893.]

Insolvency—Jurisdiction—Gomasta—Trader beyond jurisdiction carrying on business by gomasta within jurisdiction—"Departure"—"Intent"—Insolvent Act (11 and 12 Vict., c. 21), s. 9.

D, resident in Azimgunge, carried on business as a banker and money-lender in (amongst other places) Calcutta through his gomasta P, who carried on the business on the second storey of the business premises having his residence on the third storey, the whole of the premises belonging to D. D having gone away on pilgrimage, the Calcutta business became involved; and on the 6th February 1893 P stopped payment and retired to the third storey, but was accessible to all creditors either in the office where business was usually carried on, or in the private room on the third storey. Upon such stoppage of payment telegrams were sent to D, who hurried back to Calcutta, and reached it on 11th February, and took up his quarters in the same premises, and subsequently had several meetings with his creditors.

Held, that such stoppage of payment was not an act of insolvency within the meaning of the Insolvent Act, and that the retirement of P to his rooms on the third storey was not a departure with the intention to defeat and delay the creditors of D.

Held, further that a departure such as is made an act of insolvency by s. 9 of the Act is a departure by the debtor personally, and cannot be committed by any other person on his behalf. Such departure must be his departure, and the intent to depart must be proved to be his intent. Moreover a man cannot commit an act of insolvency by an act of his agent which he has not authorised, and of which act he had no cognisance.

In re ... Ch and Golicha (1) dissented from.

[772] Per PIGOT, J.—Under the circumstances no special powers or position ought to be attributed to P, who was merely an ordinary managing gomasta.

[Affirmed, 23 C. 26 (P.C.) = 22 I.A. 162.]

ON the 16th February one Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur, carrying on business as a banker in Calcutta, and in various other places in Bengal, under the name and style of Bahadur Singh, Pertab Singh, Rai Dhunput Singh, was adjudicated an insolvent under s. 9 of the Insolvent Act, 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21.

The adjudication was made ex parte upon the petition of one of the creditors named Kustur Chand Rai Bahadur, who was the holder of hundis to the value of Rs. 15,000, accepted by Rai Dhunput Singh, but which were not then due. The act of insolvency alleged in the petition was :—

" That on the 6th day of February 1893, at or about 9 o'clock P. M., Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur stopped payment of his liabilities, amounting to a large sum of money, which was payable by him that day on hundis and receipts, and the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur, on the night of the said 6th day of February, closed his place of business, which has since been and still is closed, and his principal gomasta, Panna Lall, and other gomastas and servants departed, and were absent from his said place of business at No. 4, Shama Bye's lane aforesaid on the 7th and 8th days of February 1893, with intent to defeat and delay the creditors of the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur."

The order of adjudication was made by Mr. Justice Trevelyan on the 16th February. On the 17th Rai Dhunput Singh, having given notice, moved to have the order of adjudication set aside.

The case was heard on evidence, and the following facts were elicited :—

Rai Dhunput Singh was a banker, lending money on lands and hundis. The head place of business was at Azimgunge, but the most extensive business was carried on in Calcutta. Dhunput went on a pilgrimage to Palitana in October 1892 to visit a great shrine. His family went with him. At the latter end of January 1893 telegrams were despatched from Calcutta by his gomasta, stating that the firm was in difficulties, and requesting him to return. On receipt of these telegrams, Dhunput directed his course to Calcutta, and leaving Katyawar he got to Ajmere on the [773] 2nd February, and he left Ajmere on the 5th or 6th. He arrived at Agra on the 7th, and reached Azimgunge on the 9th. There he learnt in positive terms the fact of his firm having suspended payment. He left Azimgunge at midnight or morning of 9th or 10th, and arrived in Calcutta on the 11th of February. In Calcutta he had a moonib gomasta, called Panna Lall; he had also a cash-keeper, called Roma Nath Dhur, an English-writing clerk, Rojoni Kanto Gupta, and two book-keepers, Pura-sutum Dass and Chutter Dass. The latter had been sent to Benares, where Dhunput had another place of business. Dhunput's business place or kothi was at 4, Shama Bye's Lane in Burra Bazar, Calcutta, and the place was well known as his place of business. Besides being a Banker, Dhunput was the owner of a sugar factory at Tarpore, a portion of the business of which was conducted in the house in Calcutta. Some business was done there in connection with the factory after the 6th of February. Dhunput when in Calcutta used to reside in this house, on the third storey of which he had his sleeping and living apartments. Panna Lall, the Gomasta, used always to reside there in the third storey, and from time to time he saw brokers and transacted business on the third storey. Private and confidential business used also to be transacted there occasionally. On the night of the 6th of February, towards midnight, when business was done in Burra Bazar, the head gomasta found himself so short of funds that he was compelled to and did suspend payment. After the 6th the first floor was not used as much as it was when the banking business was going on. The cash-room was locked and Panna Lall remained in the house in the third storey, and from time to time went downstairs to the first floor, and on the 7th saw some persons in the gadi room. Panna Lall was not denied to any one, and any one who wished to see him might have done so. He did in fact see several persons at 4, Shama Bye's Lane in the gadi and some upstairs, and told them that he could make no payments, as he had no money, but that the malik would arrive in a few days and would make arrangements. On Dhunput's arrival on the 11th he endeavoured to come to an arrangement with his creditors. On the 12th he ordered Panna Lall to pay Rs. 15,000 out of the cash in the cash-room to Hurro Lall Bangaj, to whom he owed R. 30,000, and who was some connection of his own. On the 13th and 15th Dhunput held meetings with [774] his creditors, but no settlement was come to, and on the morning of the 16th he was adjudicated an insolvent ex parte. On that day he became aware of the adjudication. He afterwards sent for the books of the kothi, ascertained that the cash which was then in the cash-room amounted to Rs. 14,000, and took possession of the whole of it before the arrival of the persons sent by the Official Assignee to take possession.

On these facts Trevelyan, J., on the 20th of March 1893, confirmed his order of the 16th February adjudicating Dhunput Singh an insolvent and from this order the insolvent appealed.

Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Bonnerjee, for the appellant.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips and Mr. O'Kinealy, for the adjudicating creditor.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Garth, for the Official Assignee.

Mr. Woodroffe.—This matter comes before this Court under s. 74 of the Insolvent Act. The question here is, can Dhunput Singh be adjudicated an insolvent for what was done by his gomasta Panna Lall on the 7th and 8th of February. Trevelyan, J. has based his decision on the case of Hurruck Chand Golicha (1). In that case Broughton, J., held "that a man could be made an insolvent by his head gomasta leaving his place of business and locking the door behind him." Was it ever held in England that a man could commit bankruptcy by proxy? Bankruptcy was formerly looked upon as a species of crime, and a crime could not be transferred. The main question here is, did Dhunput depart? And if he did, what was his intention? In Vincent v. Prater (2) the debtor left a message that he had no money and could not pay; so he would keep out of the way in order to avoid harsh language; still it was there held that his intention was not to defeat and delay his creditors; see also Ex parte Lopez (3), Ex parte Meyer (4), Dudley v. Vaughan (5), In re Foster, Ex parte Woolstenholme (6). Departure is defined as an act ambiguous in itself, and the intent constitutes the gravamen of the offence. [775] It must be committed by the individual himself, for an act of bankruptcy must be a personal act or default, and cannot be committed through an agent nor by a firm as such—Ex parte Blain, In re Sawers (7). The non-participant party could not be made responsible for the passive act of his agent. In Hurruck Chand Golicha's case the authority—In re Cullumjee Moonjee (an unreported Bombay case)—on which Broughton, J., relied did not go as far as he thought it did. In the Bombay case the man closed his business and went away, and directed his agent in Calcutta to do the same, and that fixed the intent. A person cannot be said to depart by action taken on the part of his gomasta when he has not ordered it, for a man might close a business in order to spite his master. In Hurruck Chand Golicha's case the gomasta locked up the place of business and went away, but in this case the master so far from departing did all he could to get here. The act and the intent must be that of the principal. That an intention on the part of the gomasta is an intention of the master is ridiculous. The intent cannot be transferred. It is not alleged in the petition that Dhunput ever had any intention to defeat and delay creditors. The omission is fatal. "Such a defect is a matter of substance, not a merely formal defect, and it cannot be cured by amendment—" Ex parte Coates, In re Shelton (1). Certain cases have been relied upon, but they are in respect of a different act of bankruptcy known in England as keeping house—Dudley v. Vaughan (2), Key v. Shaw (3), and they are not applicable in this country. For the purposes of giving the Court jurisdiction under s. 5 of the Insolvent Act, a man carrying on business within the jurisdiction but residing out of it has been held to reside constructively within the jurisdiction—Kustoor Mull v. Jookeeram (4), In re Howard Brothers (5), In the matter of Tietkins (6), In re Cockburn (7), Ex parte The Asiatic Company (8). But the doctrine of constructive residence cannot be carried so far as to make out that under the circumstances of this case [776] Dhunput resided in Calcutta. Even if there could be constructive residence there could not be constructive departure. Now Broughton, J., held that if a person could reside in Calcutta by gomasta he could also depart by gomasta so as to become an insolvent, and Trevelyan, J., has followed that decision. Though a gomasta can carry on a business, he cannot determine it. In the case of several partners where one absented himself it was held not to be the joint act of all three. Mills v. Bennett (9), Ex parte Blain, In re Sawers (10), Kissowji Damodar Jairam v. Khimji Jairam (11). Dhunput could not be adjudicated an insolvent, even if he could commit an act, through his gomasta: the essence of the act leading to the adjudication being the intent, such intent must be by Dhunput himself. Even if the intent was in Dhunput, he could not depart from his place of business through his gomasta. Trevelyan, J., does not consider the difference between the fact that an agent can bind and act, but cannot put an end to a business. On the facts of this case the order of adjudication should be set aside with costs.

Mr. Hill on the same side.

Mr. Phillips for the adjudicating creditor:—This case is purely a question of fact. It is necessary to look at the Act, and then you will find that the Act is for the benefit of the creditors in order that they may get paid. Section 5 provides that where a man is in insolvent circumstances he may at any time apply for relief, and ss. 8 and 9 refer to the circumstances under which the creditors may apply to the Court in order to have the debtor adjudicated an insolvent, and the Act says he must have done something on which the Court can act, either the shutting up of the business or departure from jurisdiction. [PETHERAM, C. J.—But departing from the jurisdiction must be the act of the individual.] The most common form of departure is putting up shutters or stopping payment. It would be frustrating the Act, to read it narrowly. If the gomasta attended, it was for the sake of form and in order to avoid the Act. Dhunput undoubtedly became insolvent on the morning of the 6th of February by stopping payment, for a [777] trader is in insolvent circumstances when he is not in a condition to pay his debts—Shone v. Lucas (12). Dhunput was insolvent for some time before the 6th of February, and on the 6th he openly confessed. [PETHERAM, C. J.—I think the telegrams show that Panna Lall was not one of those gomastas who acted absolutely without restraint; directly he got into trouble he wired to his master.] That was merely a matter of form. The real question is the intent. Undoubtedly Panna Lall closed the business as he had no funds, and he departed by withdrawing himself upstairs. [PETHERAM, C. J.—If the gomasta says:—I have Rs. 17,000. I owe Rs. 73,000, but I shall sit down until my master comes; I shall pay no one—is that an act of insolvency?] Most certainly, for the essence of the act is the want of money, as in Richardson v. Pratt, (1) “where when a debtor kept house not with the intent to defeat or delay, but to gain time, it was held to be an act of insolvency.” Undoubtedly it is an act of insolvency if a man departs from his place of business with intent to defeat and delay his creditors. Is it not the same thing if the business departs from the man? Here there has been an emphatic departure, for when a man sits in his shop for an entirely different purpose, it is a departure with intent to defeat and delay. “If the necessary consequence of a trader’s departing is that his creditors must be delayed, he thereby commits an act of bankruptcy”—Ramsbottom v. Lewis (2). Here from the circumstances intent may be presumed. Ex parte Osborne (3), Dudley v. Vaughan (4), also supports our case, where a man withdrew to a different part of the house in order to prevent his creditors importuning him. So also Johnston v. Woolf (5), where a debtor kept out of the way, and Key v. Shaw (6) shut up his premises; Ex parte Austen (7), Hobson v. Brown (8). Directly a man leaves his usual place of business, departure takes place—directly he leaves the house—Archibold’s Bankruptcy, edition of 1869, pp. 99-100. From the facts of this case the intention may be presumed. Intent may be presumed from acts of [778] debtors—Archibold’s Bankruptcy, p. 109. “When a debtor knows that the necessary consequence of his going abroad out of the jurisdiction will be to defeat or delay certain creditors, he will be held to have gone abroad with intent, and will be adjudged an insolvent—Ex parte Goater (9). Here Dhunput goes away and leaves his gomasta with no money; that by itself is an act of insolvency—Ex parte Kilner (10). Again, intention may be presumed when a man conveys all his property for the benefit of his creditors, though he did not intend to defeat or delay them—Steward v. Moody (11). Intention does not necessarily arise from what is in a man’s mind, but from what his embarrassed circumstances lead him to. Mr. Woodroffe has cited cases which show that bankruptcy cannot be committed by a partner, but this is not a partnership and those cases do not apply in that way; a partner has restricted power, but a gomasta has unlimited power. Ex parte Blain (12) does not affect us; the whole case turned on jurisdiction. Ex parte Coates (13) has been cited by the other side to show that we can’t amend our petition; that case simply lays down that when you allege innocent acts, you may not afterwards give them a sting. The act was that of the gomasta’s, which by the correspondence and subsequent acts was known to and ratified by Dhunput, and can it now be said that the actions of the gomasta were not the actions of Dhunput? The case of Ex parte Lopez (14) does not affect us, for our statements are true; nor does the case of Ex parte Meyer (15), where the debtor did not keep an appointment with his creditor. When a man assigns his whole property to cover a past debt, the law assumes the intent to defeat or delay creditors as a necessary consequence of the act. In re Wood (1). Again Mills v. Bennett (2) is another case of partnership which does not touch us. If a man can depart from jurisdiction by his agent, he can also depart from his business by agent. If you can have constructive residence to come within s. 5 of the Insolvent Act—In re Howard Brothers (3)—you [779] can also have constructive departure. In Ex parte Breull (4), a clerk who worked in a Bank in London, but resided out of it, was held to reside in London. The decision in Hurruck Chand Golicha (5) is sound (there are four decisions unreported of the same nature, In re Cullumjee Moonjee, In re Hirkissen Shroff, In re Hadjiatollah, In re Sudas Mohurrir), and should be followed in this case. The payment of the Rs. 15,000 was in itself an act of insolvency; see Williams on Bankruptcy, 5th Ed., 209. The adjudicating order is good on the authority of the case of Hurruck Chand Golicha and should be upheld; otherwise any person can trade in Calcutta by a gomasta and reside out of the jurisdiction, and if this adjudication is reversed, it will be impossible ever to bring the principal within the purview of the Insolvent Act, no matter what his gomasta may choose to do.

Mr. Pugh for the Official Assignee:—One of the principal objects of the Bankrupt law, when a person becomes insolvent, is to seize his remaining property and to distribute it amongst his creditors, instead of allowing him to squander it or to appropriate it in paying particular creditors to the prejudice of others, Robson's Law and Practice in Bankruptcy, 4th Ed., 114; also defined in Robertson v. Liddell (6). The payment of the Rs. 1,500 was a fraudulent preference. [PIGOT, J.—There is a case of Cotton v. James (7), which I don't think has been referred to, where a delivery of goods by an agent without the direction of the principal is no act of bankruptcy.] That does not affect us, but here Panna Lall let Dhunput know what was going on, and on Dhunput's arrival he continued the same policy as Panna Lall, and also kept upstairs on the third storey.

With regard to "delaying"—the signification of "delaying" cannot be limited; it is general; it really signifies putting off creditors in order to gain time. In former days people used to depart in order to avoid arrest or process, but that is not so now. Where there is a departure or keeping house with intent to defeat and delay creditors, it is an act of bankruptcy. Bigg v. Spooner (8), [780] Fowler v. Padget (9), Robertson v. Liddell (6), Deffle v. Desanges (10), Ex parte Osborne (11), Widger v. Browning (12). The payment of the Rs. 15,000 is clearly an act of insolvency, Ex parte Simpson (13). [PETHERAM, C. J.—The cases in India have been, except one, that the gomasta has suspended payment, closed the business and gone away. In this case it is different. Is it not so?] The principle covers both cases where the gomasta has closed the place of business and gone away, or closed the place of business and does nothing, and the master sends no one and does not come himself. That is an act of insolvency. So here if the principal has come down and done nothing surely it is the same thing. This case cannot be distinguished from the case of Hurruck Chand Golicha and the adjudication should be upheld.

Mr. Woodroffe in reply.—The words to be construed in s. 9 of the Insolvent Act are these—"If any such person shall depart from within the limits of the jurisdiction of any of the said Supreme Courts with intent to defeat and delay his creditors:" it all depends on the departure. Mr. Phillips spoke as if the jurisdiction could depart from the insolvent. The departure must be from place of abode or usual place of business. How can the words be read as though his business departs from him? The meaning of departure is not that the man's business closes or has failed, but relates to going away. A departure does not mean a business failing; it means a change in the insolvent's geographical position; it is a physical position. In none of the unreported cases referred to is there such a state of facts as there is in this case. In In re Cullumjee Moonjee the case decided by Sir C. Jackson, C. J. there was a fraudulent preference and the man bolted. In Hirkissen Shroff, in 1889, the man put up his shutters and went away. In In re Hadjiatollah the men departed from the jurisdiction of the Court and closed their business also closing their places in Bombay and Benares, and distributed their goods to the value of Rs. 8,000 when they owed Rs. 45,000. They were adjudicated insolvents; the adjudication was set aside, and they were re-adjudicated. In In re Sudas [781] Mohurrir (February 1889) they stopped payment and closed their place of business, and departed beyond the limits of the jurisdiction of this Court. The only case in which there was any doubt was that of Sir Charles Jackson's. Not one of those four cases comes up to this case. There is no doubt on the cases that an act of insolvency of one partner is not an act of insolvency of the firm or of the other partners; but, says Mr. Phillips, a partner's power is limited, an agent's unlimited. But is that true? Surely a person's partner has all the powers which the person himself has. Is there anything in this case to show that Panna Lall had powers even equal to those of a partner? Then, again, says Mr. Phillips, if Dhunput left no one there he would have committed an act of insolvency; but that is not correct, for when Dhunput went the firm was solvent. If it was intended that there should be an exception introduced into this country against the plain language of the Act of Geo. IV as determining who are to become insolvents, then the Legislature would have inserted the words "shall by agent depart," etc., in the Indian Insolvent Act. The question was first raised in Hurruck Chand Golicha's case, and I submit that case was wrongly decided; but even if that decision was correct, there the gomasta was the alter ego of the principal, while here there is nothing to show that Panna Lall was such an agent.

What is it that Panna Lall did and that Dhunput acquiesced in? Whatever it was, it was never put to him in cross-examination. There never has been a case in England in which it has been held that an agent could do these things for his principal. If it is to be held differently here, it cannot be on the Indian Act, as the Indian Act is framed from the English Act of Geo. IV.

Even if under s. 9 a fraudulent preference was an act of bankruptcy, it can only be so if the petitioning creditor moves the Court on that ground. In this case the petitioning creditor did not apply on that ground, nor has the Judge adjudicated on that ground. A fraudulent preference is not of itself an act of insolvency under the Indian Act, and the words in the Act, are to be construed properly and strictly. No intent has been alleged as against Dhunput in the petition which is fatal (Ex parte Coates In re. Skelton), and as there has been no departure, this adjudication should be set aside.

[782] The following judgments were delivered by the Court (PETHERAM, C. J., PRINSEP, J., and PIGOT, J.)

JUDGMENTS.

PETHERAM, C. J.—On Thursday, the 16th of February 1893, a petition was presented by Kustur Chand Rai Bahadur, who was the holder of hundis for Rs. 15,000 accepted by Rai Dhunput Singh, but which were not then due, to adjudicate Rai Dhunput Singh an insolvent. The act of insolvency alleged in the petition was "that on the 6th day of February 1893, at about 9 o'clock P.M., the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur stopped payment of his liabilities, amounting to a large sum of money, which was payable by him that day on hundis and receipts, and the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur, on the night of the said 6th of February, closed his said place of business, which has since been and still is closed, and his said principal gomasta, Panna Lall, and other gomastas and servants, departed and were absent from his said place of business at 4, Shama Bye's Lane aforesaid on the 7th and 8th days of February 1893, with intent to defeat and delay the creditors of the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur." The usual adjudicating and vesting order was made on the morning of the 16th by Mr. Justice Trevelyan, and the Official Assignee at once took possession of the estate.

The next day a motion was made on affidavits to set aside the order of adjudication. It was set down for hearing, and witnesses on each side examined upon it, and on the 20th of March, Mr. Justice Trevelyan gave judgment, dismissing the application and confirming the adjudication, and this is an appeal from that judgment.

The facts as I find them from the evidence adduced are as follow:—

From sometime in the year 1861 down to the evening of February 6th, 1893, Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur carried on business as a banker at various places in Bengal. He himself lived at Azimgunge, where the office or kothi was situated, which was known, as the head kothi of his business, but the largest amount of business was done in Calcutta at 4, Shama Bye's Lane, which is a three-storeyed house, the whole of which was occupied by Dhunput Singh, the room on the second storey being used as the gadi, cash room and store rooms, and those on the third as dwelling [783] rooms in which the principal gomasta lived, and where Dhunput Singh himself stayed when he was in Calcutta without his family, the durwans sitting at the outer door on the ground floor of the house. Each kothi was in charge of a head or moonib gomasta, but Dhunput Singh himself took an active part in the conduct of the whole of his business. In February last Mohabat Chand Shamsook, who was the moonib gomasta at Azimgunge, was considered the principal or head of the gomastas in his service, and at Calcutta Panna Lall Mohatta was in charge of the kothi as moonib. He had held that position for many years down to about three years before December last, but for those three years he had been absent from Calcutta. He returned to Calcutta on the 20th of December 1892, and on the 24th took over charge of the kothi there from Noltimal, who had held the office during his absence.

In February last the persons employed in Calcutta were Panna Lall Mohatta, the gomasta; Roma Nath Dhur, the cashier; three mohurrirs, Chut-ter Dass, Purasutum Dass, and Rojoni, an English speaking clerk, besides durwans and servants. Dhunput Singh was in Calcutta in May 1892, and at sometime in that month, went to Azimgunge, where he remained until the month of October, when he left it with his family and servants on a pilgrimage to Palitana, where he was on the 27th of January 1893, on which day he received from Panna Lall in Calcutta a message by telegram "Jute cannot be had, come back sharp." In this telegram jute means money. On the 22nd of the same month, Panna Lall had telegraphed to three of the other kothis of the firm for money, and on the 27th he sent the telegram I have mentioned to his master. On the 28th he sent another telegram, "Bazar very unreliable, start to-day please," and on the 29th a third, "Your message received, market very uncertain, come sharp." Dhunput Singh did not reply to the last telegram, but on the night of the 29th left Palitana for Ajmere, where he remained about three days. On the 30th Panna Lall telegraphed:—"Market favourable just now, cannot say to-morrow's." This telegram was received by Dhunput on the journey from Palitana to Ajmere, and on the 2nd of February he received another at Ajmere, "Don't go Kasaria, immediately come sharp here. market very bad." On Thursday [784] the 6th February, he left Ajmere for Agra, where he was on the 7th, on which day he left for Azimgunge, and arrived there on Thursday, the 9th, and on his arrival received two telegrams which had been sent there by Panna Lall on the 6th and 7th; the first, "Business stopped, no payment to pay, wire other kothis yourself." The second, "Already wired business payment stopped, where is huzsur." Dhunput Singh left Azimgunge for Calcutta by the mail on the night of Friday, February the 10th, and reached Howrah station about 10 o'clock on Saturday the 11th, where Panna Lall met him, and they went together to the kothi at 4, Shama Bye's Lane. As he informed his master in his telegrams, Panna Lall was in great straits at the beginning of February, and on the evening of Monday, the 6th of February, his position was that he had in hand about Rs. 17,000 in cash, and that on that day the sum of Rs. 73,000 was payable to customers in the ordinary course of business, and as it was impossible for him to meet the demands upon him, he on that evening with the Rs. 17,000 still in his possession refused to make any more payments, giving as his reason that he had no money to do so, and from that time forward no payments were, in fact, made at the kothi, except those which I shall presently mention. The moonib gomasta Panna Lall lived in the house 4, Shama Bye's Lane, his rooms being on the third storey, the cashier and the clerk lived in other places. There is no doubt that since the refusal of Panna Lall on the evening of the 6th to make any further payments, no banking transactions of any kind by, or on behalf of, Dhunput Singh have been carried on in Calcutta, and his business transactions as a banker there have ceased from that time; but he was the owner of a sugar factory at Tarpore, a portion of the business of which was conducted in the house in Calcutta, and there is evidence that some small business was done there in connection with the factory after the cessation of the banking business on the evening of the 6th.

From the time when Panna Lall refused to make further payments, it is, I think, certain that the first floor was not used as much as it was when the banking business was going on. The cash room was locked, and I think it probable that the cashier and the clerks were not in the house for the whole day on either the [785] Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday or Friday. Panna Lall remained in the house the whole time, but spent nearly all his time upstairs, though he did from time to time go down to the gadi room, and on the Wednesday certainly, if not on the Tuesday, he saw some persons in that room. He was not, on any of these four days, denied to any one, and anyone who wished to see him might have done so; he did in fact see several persons at 4, Shama Bye's Lane, in the gadi, and some upstairs, and told them that he could make no payments as he had no money, but that the malik would arrive in a few days and would make arrangements. He was not denied to callers, but some persons were told by the durwans that it would be useless to see him, as he had no money to make payments, and this state of things continued until the arrival of Dhunput Singh himself at about 10 o'clock on the morning of Saturday, the 11th. Except for the time occupied in going to the station to meet his master, and in returning from it, there is no evidence that Panna Lall was ever absent from 4, Shama Bye's Lane, from the night of the 6th until the arrival there of Dhunput Singh on the morning of the 11th. Dhunput Singh did not bring any money with him, and payment was not resumed on his arrival; but during the afternoon of Saturday, and during the whole of the day on Sunday, he saw any persons who wished to see him, and endeavoured to persuade them to agree to accept 8 annas of their claims at once, and to give him a year for the payment of the remainder, and at the same time, on the Sunday he instructed Panna Lall to pay the sum of Rs. 15,000 out of the cash in the cash-room to Hurro Lall Bangaj, to whom he owed Rs. 30,000, and who was some connection of his own. This payment was made on that day in accordance with his instructions. On Monday a meeting of the creditors of the firm was held at 4, Shama Bye's Lane, which lasted from 1 to 4, at which Dhunput proposed to pay 8 annas at once, and the remainder in a year; but no money was actually forthcoming and no arrangement was come to. Another meeting took place at Mr. Rutter's office on the 15th, but nothing was done and matters remained as they were until the morning of Thursday the 16th, when the order of adjudication which I have before mentioned was made. Dhunput Singh became aware of the adjudication on the same morning, and he afterwards sent for the [786] books of the kothi, ascertained that the cash which was then in the cash room amounted to about Rs. 14,000, and took possession of and removed the whole of it before the arrival of the persons sent by the Official Assignee to take possession. The question we have to consider is whether Dhunput Singh can be adjudicated an insolvent for what was done by Panna Lall on the 7th and 8th of February.

Mr. Justice Trevelyan in his judgment states that as the construction of the law stands in this Court, he is, he thinks, bound to hold that a person who leaves a gomasta in charge of a business can by that gomasta commit an act of insolvency, and on that view of the law he held that Dhunput Singh committed an act of insolvency by the acts of Panna Lall on the 7th and 8th. The records of this Court have been examined, and four cases, the first being in 1858, the last in 1889, have been found, in which persons who carried on business in Calcutta have been adjudicated insolvents upon petitions which alleged that their gomastas in Calcutta had departed from their employer's place of business with intent to delay his creditors. Mr. Justice Trevelyan has relied on the cases and upon the reported case of In re Hurruck Chand Golicha (1) decided by Broughton, J., in 1880. In the course of his judgment that learned Judge said: "It required no departure from the literal meaning of the words to hold that when a trader has established a business through a gomasta, he departs from the place of business if his gomasta departs, and if he does not come himself or send some one else to carry on business. If, as in this case, the gomasta shuts up the place of business and stops payment, he does in fact depart from his usual place of business, for the usual place of business is inside his house where the business is carried on, and not outside his house with the door locked behind his back, and when he shut the place up and stops payment, he departs from his usual place of business with intent to defeat or delay his creditors." I have had the advantage of seeing Mr. Justice Pigot's judgment, and I do not think it necessary for me to say more on the question whether this particular act of insolvency can be committed by an [787] agent, than that I entirely agree with him that it cannot, and that the decision in the case of In re Hurruck Chand Golicha ought now to be formally dissented from, as whatever interpretation be given to it the decision is not warranted by law. I must, however, add that even if the law, as laid down in that judgment, could be supported, I do not think that the present case is within it. Mr. Justice Trevelyan finds that in spending his time on the third floor on the Tuesday and Wednesday, instead of in the gadi on the first floor, Panna Lall left the business. He thinks that he intended to keep the creditors waiting until his master arrived, and that he retired to the third floor on the Tuesday and Wednesday in order to keep them waiting until that time, and that by doing so he departed from the place of business with intent to delay the creditors of Dhunput Singh and so committed an act of insolvency upon which his master can be adjudicated insolvent with all the consequences which follow on such an adjudication. I am unable to agree in that opinion. I think that the person must go away from his place of business for the purpose of being absent in order that it may be impossible or difficult for his customers or creditors to find him, and that a mere retirement to the private part of the house, because there is no business to do in the office, would not necessarily be such a departure. In this case, even if the retirement to the private room by Panna Lall was literally a departure from his usual place of business, I cannot see how it could by any possibility have had the effect of delaying any single creditor of Dhunput Singh for a moment, or how any intention to delay them by leaving the gadi can, under the circumstances, be imputed to Panna Lall. The position of Panna Lall on the night of Monday the 6th, and until the return of Dhunput Singh on Saturday the 11th, was that of a Bank manager who had been left by his master without funds to meet the demands of his customers and who could only return the documents which were presented to him for payment, and inform the customers of the facts, and that he expected his master in a few days. This is what Panna Lall did, and I do not think his doing so can have delayed the creditors, or that any intent can be imputed to him to bring about something which could not have been brought about by his action. I think that the appeal should be allowed, and the [788] order of adjudication revoked. The petitioning creditor must pay the costs in both Courts on scale No. 2.

PIGOT, J.—The appellant Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur was by an order made on the 16th of February 1893 by the Court for the relief of insolvent debtors adjudicated an insolvent. On the 17th of February he presented a petition praying that this order should be set aside. The matter of the petition was heard on oral evidence given on behalf of the adjudicating creditor and on behalf of the insolvent, and on the 20th of March 1893 the Court made an order dismissing the application to set aside the order of adjudication. The insolvent appeals against the order of adjudication, and the order dismissing the application to set it aside. The act of insolvency charged is stated in the first and second paragraphs of the petition of adjudication, the first four of which are as follows:—

"1st.—That the above-named Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur, who resides at Baluchur in the district of Murshedabad, in the province of Bengal, and who occasionally comes down and resides in Calcutta, heretofore and up to the 6th of February 1893, carried on the trade or business of merchant and banker at No. 4, Shama Bye's Lane in Burra Bazar in the town of Calcutta, through his principal gomasta Panna Lall and other gomastas and servants under the name and style of Bahadur Singh, Pertab Singh, Rai Dhunput Singh, and therefore, as your petitioner is advised and believes, became a trader within the meaning of the Bankrupt laws.

"2nd.—That on the said 6th day of February 1893, at about 9 o'clock P.M., the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur stopped payment of his liabilities amounting to a large sum of money, which was payable by him that day on hundis and receipts, and the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur on the night of the said 6th day of February closed his said place of business, which has since been, and still is closed, and his said principal gomasta Panna Lall and other gomastas and servants departed, and were absent from his said place of business at No. 4, Shama Bye's Lane, aforesaid, on the 7th and 8th days of February 1893, with intent to defeat and delay the creditors of the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur.

[789] "3rd.—That on the 9th day of February 1893, and subsequently, some of the gomastas of the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur attended the said place of business, but no business was carried on nor any payment made to the creditors of the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur, or any of them in respect of the overdue hundis and purjaks or receipts held by said creditors.

"4th.—That on the 12th and 13th days of February 1893, the above-named Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur, who came to Calcutta on or about the 11th day of February 1893, informed several of his creditors, and among them the moonib or head gomasta of your petitioner in Calcutta, that he was unable to meet the claims of the creditors in full, and that he was in insolvent circumstances, and proposed to pay down to his said creditors eight annas in the rupee and to pay the balance within one year from that date."

There is no doubt that Dhunput Singh was a trader within the meaning of s. 9 of the Indian Insolvent Act, under the provisions of which the order of adjudication was made. The provision of that section, under which he has been held to have committed an act of insolvency, enacts as to any person deemed a trader, that " * * if any such person shall depart from within the limits of the jurisdiction of any of the said Supreme Courts with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, or with the like intent depart from his usual place of business or abode within the said jurisdiction," it shall be lawful for any creditor or creditors as described in the section, "to present a petition to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors of the Presidency within which such person shall have resided at the time of such departure," and then follows a provision as to the form of the petition. "Whereupon, and upon such petition being duly verified, it shall be lawful for the Court to adjudge that such person has committed an act of insolvency." Then follows a provision enabling the Court to revoke or confirm such adjudication.

It is not suggested that Dhunput Singh himself departed from his usual place of business or abode within the jurisdiction, nor, of course, that he did so with the intent necessary under the section to render any departure an act of insolvency. Dhunput Singh's chief business is that of a banker, which business he has carried on for many years. His head kothi is at Azimgunge, [790] where he chiefly resides. He has several other kothis in different towns in Bengal. In Calcutta he had a place of business at Shama Bye's Lane, his principal business there being that of banking: he also had a sugar factory at Tarpore, part of the business connected with which was conducted at the kothi in Shama Bye's Lane. His business transactions were very large and he has large landed estates: there seems no question as to this. The banking business of the Calcutta kothi was much greater than that of any of the other kothis. No. 4, Shama Bye's Lane, is a three-storeyed house all of it tenanted by him: on the second floor is the gadi or office: on the third floor Panna Lall lives: and Dhunput Singh when staying in Calcutta without the members of his family used to put up there.

Dhunput was last in Calcutta in May 1892. He then went to Azimgunge his ordinary place of residence. In October he went with the ladies of his family to Palitana, the famous place of pilgrimage of the Jains in the Peninsula of Kathiawar. He went there on pilgrimage and to consecrate a temple, which he did. While he was at Palitana in January, he received telegrams from Panna Lall telling him the business in Calcutta was in a dangerous state, and urging him to come to Calcutta. He left Palitana on the 29th, reached Ajmere on the 2nd of February, proceeded to Agra on the 6th, and on the 9th reached Azimgunge. On that day he first learned that the Calcutta banking business had suspended payment on the 11th of February. On the 10th he left for Calcutta, arriving on the 11th, when he proceeded to the kothi, and on that and the following days saw his creditors there and tried to make arrangements with them: on the 13th there was a large meeting of them at his kothi, attended, he says, by 100 or 125 of them. There was another assembly of them held at Mr. Rutter's office on the 15th. The adjudication was next day.

So that not merely did Dhunput Singh not depart personally from his place of business with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, but on hearing that his firm was in difficulties, he returned from the very remote part of India where he then was, and came to Calcutta. He did not avoid his creditors, but came to confront them, and if possible arrange with them, unsuccessfully as it turned out. Nothing therefore was done by Dhunput Singh himself [791] to bring him within those provisions of the Insolvent Act under which he has been adjudicated an insolvent. The act of insolvency charged in the petition is that "on the night of the 6th of February he closed his place of business which has since been, and still is closed, and his said principal gomasta Panna Lall and other gomastas and servants departed and were absent from his said place of business at No. 4, Shama Bye's Lane aforesaid, on the 7th and 8th days of February 1893, with intent to defeat and delay the creditors of the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur." The departure charged is that of Panna Lall and the other gomastas on the 7th and 8th of February, and the intent charged is their intent to defeat and delay the creditors of the said Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur. The question for determination on the application to revoke the adjudication is thus stated in the judgment of the learned Commissioner of the Insolvent Court:—

"The question which I have to try is whether the act of insolvency alleged in the application for the vesting order was actually committed.

This act of insolvency was not alleged to have been one personally committed by the alleged insolvent, but by the head or moonib gomasta in charge of his banking business at No. 4, Shama Bye's Lane, in Calcutta. The act of insolvency alleged was that this principal gomasta and other gomastas departed, and were absent from the place of business on the 7th and 8th of February 1893, with intent to defeat and delay the creditors of Rai Dhunput Singh."

The finding of the learned Commissioner is: "In conclusion, I find as a fact that on the 7th of February, Panna Lall, acting on behalf of his master, departed from his usual place of business with intent to defeat and delay his creditors, and that the act was continued on the 8th, and that Dhunput Singh ratified the acts of his gomasta on his arrival here. In the result the application to set aside the vesting order must be dismissed."

The questions which chiefly arise on this appeal seem to be the following:—

It is contended that the act of insolvency committed by a departure of a trader from his place of business with intent to defeat or delay his creditors is one which, to constitute an act of insolvency [792] so as to affect him, must be a departure by the trader himself with the intent, harboured by himself, to defeat or delay his creditors: that it cannot be committed by an agent on his behalf. This contention broadly stated impugns the correctness of the decision in the case of Hurruck Chand Golicha (1), which has been followed in different cases by members of this Court when sitting as Commissioners, but which has not hitherto been considered in the appellate Court. It was argued that this decision is not warranted by the terms or scope of the section, or by the decisions in England upon the subject of acts of bankruptcy. It is further contended that this decision cannot be understood as laying down the principle that any gomasta in charge of a place of business in Calcutta may commit an act which will operate so as to be an act of insolvency committed by his employer; that the decision must be understood as at least limited to gomastas having an authority and control over the business conducted by them, of some exceptional character: and that whatever may be the degree of authority and control in a gomasta necessary in order that his acts should operate as acts of insolvency committed by his master, Panna Lall in the present case did not possess it. It is further contended that even if Panna Lall could be held to be clothed with powers of this nature, the acts or omissions by him proved in this case did not amount to departure from his (or Dhunput's) place of business within the meaning of the section.

The last contention to which I shall refer relates to intent to defeat or delay creditors, an intent which is of the essence of the act of insolvency in question in the case. It is said that even if Panna Lall's acts or omissions as proved in the case could be construed as amounting to a departure on his part from the place of business, still no intent to thereby defeat or delay Dhunput's creditors was made out on his part, or could be imputed to him as necessarily to be inferred from his conduct. Further, it is said to be impossible that any intent of Panna Lall, whether proved or inferred, could be constructively imputed to Dhunput so as to make it his intent. And yet intent is an essential ingredient in the act of insolvency to be proved against Dhunput. I shall deal with these contentions in their order.

[793] I take it to be quite clear that the acts of insolvency stated in the part of the 9th section with which we are here concerned are correctly classed as those which under the English Acts relate to the person of the debtor and are evidence of an intention to deprive his creditors of their remedy against his person. The classification of acts of bankruptcy given in Robson's Bankruptcy and referred to in the argument seems quite accurate in placing the acts of this nature (which are more numerous in the English Acts in force when our Insolvent Debtors' Act was framed, than those set out in that Act) in the category of acts "relating to the person of the debtor."

With respect to all of them it is the intention to depart or delay creditors which gives the fraudulent character to the act, and makes "an act of bankruptcy" (see p. 116 of Robson on Bankruptcy, 4th ed.). The manner in which those acts operate to defeat or delay creditors, I understand to be that they do deprive the creditors of their remedy against the debtor's person, whatever that remedy may be, whether by process of law or by other lawful pressure on their behalf, as for instance in the case (not one arising under the Indian Act) of beginning to keep house "generally if a trader seclude himself in his house to avoid the fair importunity of his creditors who are thus deprived of the means of communicating with him, he begins to keep his house and commits an act of bankruptcy." Smith's Mercantile Law, p. 576, citing Dudley v. Vaughan (1), and Cumming v. Baily (2).

These cases and many others were cited in argument upon this subject of defeating and delaying creditors, and I think it may be affirmed that there is no authority in the English reports which casts a doubt upon the correctness of the proposition, that the acts with which we have to deal here, and the cognate acts of bankruptcy of the same class in the English Acts relate to the person of the debtor himself, and that they are connected in all the statutes with the intent to defeat or delay creditors, because they are such as deprive the creditors of all access to or communication with him personally, and by depriving them of this advantage, such as it is, so far defeat or delay them.

[794] It may be, as suggested during the argument, that such acts were made acts of bankruptcy or of insolvency by the Legislature for the reason that they would only be committed by persons in insolvent circumstances; that they were for this reason chosen as convenient badges of insolvency, as rough and ready tests practically sufficient to take the place of an enquiry which could not be summarily made: the object being to ascertain summarily and with reasonable certainty that a state of insolvency did exist, showing it to be desirable that the debtor's property should be withdrawn from him and applied in payment of his debts. However that may be, they are made acts of bankruptcy or of insolvency of themselves, without any reference to the question whether the debtor is or is not actually in insolvent circumstances, save so far as his circumstances may guide the Court in determining whether his intent in doing them was to defeat, &c., his creditors.

I think that for the reason I have stated a departure such as is made an act of insolvency by the section is a departure by the debtor personally, and cannot be committed by any other person on his behalf.

No case has been cited to show that it was ever argued in England that an act of bankruptcy, such as that with which we are here concerned, could be committed by an agent, unless the case of Mills v. Bennett (3), where the agency was that of partners, be such a case. There it was contended that the act of bankruptcy constituted by the English Act of "otherwise absenting himself" was committed by each of three members of a banking firm by reason that the member of it who carried on the business at Collumpton shut up the business, that is, as appears from the report, the place of business and stopped payment. It was held that, as to the two other members of the firm who lived, one in London, and the other at a considerable distance from Collumpton, this was no evidence of an act of bankruptcy. This case was referred to in the case before Lord Eldon of Ex parte Mavor (1), where the proposition was treated as mere matter of course. In Cotton v. James (2) (to which I believe I drew attention during the argument, the question arose whether an act [795] of bankruptcy had been committed by the plaintiff under the 6 Geo. IV, c. 16, s. 3, by making a fraudulent delivery of his property. This, of course, belongs to a class of acts other than those with which we are here concerned, which relate to the person of the debtor. It belongs to the class of dispositions of property with intent to deprive creditors of remedy against the estate, and which no doubt can be done by an agent with his employer's authority; who if he does such an act by his agent with the intent specified by law, thereby commits an act of insolvency. The act the character of which was in question was the delivery by the plaintiff's son, who principally managed the business of the plaintiff in connection with which the question arose, of certain goods within his control at the time. One question in the case was whether the delivery which took place was in any case one which was within the terms of the statute: and Lord Tenterden inclined to think it was not. But he added [see p. 277 of the report in Moo. and Mal.] what is material in this case. "The question, however, does not arise, for the transaction itself is not brought home to the plaintiff, and it is clear that a man cannot commit an act of bankruptcy by the conduct of his agent." No doubt in that case if it had been brought home to him, it would have been his act, and not merely the act of the agent.

I think the general proposition laid down by Lord Justice Brett in Ex parte Blain, In re Sawers (3), only affirms, and is intended to affirm, the rule stated before by Lord Tenterden. "I think a man cannot commit an act of bankruptcy by a particular act of his agent which he has not authorized, and of which act he had no cognizance."

This general rule is, I apprehend, applicable in cases outside those of the class with which we are here concerned, and it seems to me absolutely to govern this case. There are, therefore, two reasons why the acts of Panna Lall in this case, assuming them to amount, so far as he personally was concerned, to a departure, &c., with intent, &c., cannot be acts of insolvency committed by his master, Dhunput Singh. The first is that the nature of the acts themselves, as described in the section, is incompatible with the possibility of their being committed by any one but the debtor [796] himself; the departure must be his departure, and the intent proved must be his intent. The second is that a man cannot commit any act of bankruptcy by an act of his agent which he has not authorized, and of which act he had no cognizance.

I think that the case of Hurruck Chand Goticha was wrongly decided, and that it ought now on this the first occasion on which it has been challenged in the Court of Appeal, to be expressly dissented from, although it has, of course, been followed in the Insolvent Court since it was decided. I shall refer to this consideration later on. The other questions arise with reference to the special facts of this case. Assuming that the case of Hurruck Chand Golicha could be supported, having regard either to special considerations affecting the class of persons whose acts were there under consideration, or because it has been followed in other cases and ought not now to be disturbed, does this case fall within it?

Notwithstanding the general expressions used in that decision, I think they must be read and limited by reference to the facts of the case. In that case the gomasta stopped payment, which of course is no act of insolvency, shut up the place of business, locked the doors, and went away. Those were the acts done. They were done by the moonib gomasta in charge of the business. Now it is a matter of common knowledge that in this country it often happens that a large business is carried on for years by a moonib gomasta or by a succession of them, in the name of principals who never are seen or personally known in connection with the business at all, sometimes in the name of family firms, the members of which are constantly fluctuating from generation to generation, and of which firm it is or may be difficult to determine who are, at any given time, actually members. Such cases are getting more and more rare, but I suppose many of us who have practised at the bar in India have met with some. I have myself known of the case of a great family firm which had lasted considerably over a century with places of business all over India, the members of which by successive inheritance had come to be counted by scores. Many of the kothis were managed by moonib gomastas with practically almost uncontrolled authority, so far as the outside public was concerned, and whose office of gomasta was itself in some sense [797] hereditary and handed on from father to son; that is an extreme case and is no doubt now very rare. Yet the great authority still sometimes entrusted to moonib gomastas, and the great difficulties attending the law of partnership in India with which the Legislature has hitherto found itself unable to grapple, must be taken into account, in my opinion, in considering this decision in Hurruck Chand Golicha's case. It is to be explained, although it cannot, I think, be supported, by reference to these considerations. The proposition stated in the head note of the case is, I think, wholly beyond the scope of the decision, and I read the case as being founded upon the proposition that in India, according to a practice existing in some classes of business, a moonib gomasta is or may be (though in a way not defined with any approach to distinctness by any ascertained custom) so completely the alter ego of his principal that his act in deliberately putting an end to the business, shutting up the house, and departing from the place, may be the act of the principal so as to constitute it an act of insolvency on his part. It does not lay down the conditions under which this anomalous authority may be possessed by the gomasta. Assuming that the decision, as I interpret it, can be supported, as, with great respect, I do not think it can, the present case does not seem to me to come within it.

Panna Lall neither had, nor was he held out to the world as having, any exceptional control or authority over the business. He was the gomasta of a perfectly well-known trader, who himself from time to time, when he came to Calcutta, superintended the business in person and, so far as appears, exercised full control over it, and was known to do so. Everyone who dealt with the business dealt with Dhunput Singh himself and knew that he was doing so. Whatever may be the special conditions of authority, real or apparent, existing in the case of some moonib gomastas, there are none shown in this case. Panna Lall was an ordinary managing gomasta to whom no special powers or position can be attributed of any kind.

Then as to the question whether, supposing Panna Lall's acts could be the acts of his principal, what he did or omitted to do amounted to a "departure from the place of business" within the meaning of the section. In Hurruck Chand Golicha's case and [798] in the case in which Wilson, J., followed that decision, the gomasta shut up the place of business and (in plain language) levanted, leaving the creditors to find him or his master if they could. The latter case was exactly similar to Hurruck Chand Golicha's. I understand Wilson, J.'s note only to mean that he followed that case, thinking himself bound to do so.

In this case Panna Lall never left the house at 4, Shama Bye's Lane at all. The gadi or office was on the second floor; when payment was stopped, the banking business ceased to be transacted there; that is, no further payments were made. Some small business connected with the sugar factory at Tarpore continued to be transacted there; but the chief business undoubtedly stopped.

The durwans continued to attend on the lower floor. No one was prevented by them or by any one from going upstairs to the gadi, the doors of which remained open. Whether Panna Lall was present in the rooms of the gadi or not, on the 7th or 8th, or was wholly absent from them on those days, is the question to which the evidence of the numerous witnesses was greatly directed. It is certain that he was, during those days, a good deal upstairs on the floor where he lived. He had no business to attend to in the gadi except the small business just referred to, and except that, after the suspension, some payments in the banking business seem to have been made to him whether in the gadi or not.

But it is quite clear that access to Panna Lall was not denied to any one who wished to see him, and that he did see several of the creditors upon his master's business after the suspension.

I see no reason whatever to doubt that the course taken by him during these days was that he saw any creditors who wished to see him, told them that he had no funds to meet their demands, told them that he expected his master to arrive shortly, begged them to await that arrival, and expressed his belief that on his arrival Dhunput Singh would be able to make satisfactory arrangements with them. He neither avoided them nor concealed himself from them, nor was any obstacle interposed, in fact or intention, to hinder any of them from seeing him, except so far as that when he was upstairs, such of them as wished to see him had the trouble of going upstairs too. One piece of contemporary evidence not [799] depending on the recollection of a witness is referred to in the judgment. It is the entry in the day-book of Mr. Pittar of the 7th, deposed to by Nobin Chunder Banerji, the clerk, who, on that day, saw Panna Lall with reference to a claim against the firm of a client of Mr. Pittar. The clerk saw Panna Lall on the third storey, who said "until his master comes he can't say anything." This is proof of access to him on the firm's business by a creditor, on the 7th.

In the voluminous evidence which has been examined before us as to the exact degree of attendance, or the absence of attendance in the gadi on the 7th and 8th, a good deal of variance exists. I own that I cannot help the surmise that until it was determined to apply to the Court for an order of adjudication, but little attention can have been paid by any one to the question whether or not Panna Lall was on the 7th and 8th of February sitting in the gadi room doing nothing, or whether he was similarly engaged upstairs on these days. What would engage the attention of the creditors would be the fact that they could not get payment, and that Dhunput was expected to arrive, but that it was not known how soon he would do so. It could not in the least affect their position or their remedies whether the gomasta sat in one room or in another, in his master's house, nor can I suppose any of them to have thought it did, and I think the evidence on both sides must be looked at in this light as directed to a fact of no consequence in their eyes when they saw Panna Lall. It seems to me that what the adjudicating creditor relies on is at the outside a sort of constructive departure by Panna Lall, of a purely technical character. The finding as to the departure is: "That Panna Lall left the business "there is no doubt, that the business was closed there is no doubt, that "payment stopped there is no doubt, that the books were carried upstairs "there cannot be much doubt, and therefore I hold that Panna Lall depart- "ed from the place of business on the 7th and 8th."

It was contended by Mr. Phillips that stopping the business, if manifested by outward acts, would be enough: that the closing of the business, in the fact that the payment was suspended, was sufficient as an act of insolvency and was a departure from the place of business, that if a man is not at his place of business, [800] to pay, he has departed: he also, of course, contended that there was an actual departure of persons; but it is the argument as to the closing of the business that I wish to advert to. I think it underlies the whole case of the adjudicating creditor in this appeal. Stoppage of payment is treated as equivalent to closing the business, closing the business as equivalent to closing the place of business; and that, again, as equivalent to a departure from the place of business within the meaning of the section.

In short, in another stage of the argument it was put, and I think it was a necessary consequence of the reasoning, that if a man continues to sit in his place of business, but stops his business and declines to speak to any one about his business, though he admits everyone, this is a "departure" under the Act.

This would, indirectly, make the mere act of stopping payment an act of insolvency. It is not an act of insolvency under the Act, and it was long ago held by Lord Holt in Hopkins v. Grey (1), cited in Blackstone, vol. II, p. 479 of the 19th Ed., that a banker's stopping or refusing payment is no act of bankruptcy, and by Lord Chancellor King in Burroughs v. Jameneau (2) that stopping payment is no act of bankruptcy.

Then it is argued that Panna Lall's going upstairs being a departure, it was also a departure with intent to defeat or delay creditors.

It is not safe to pronounce an opinion upon the question whether, had what is relied on as a departure by Panna Lall in this case been done by Dhunput himself, this might or might not have been a "departure." The case is not before us. If an intent to defeat or delay creditors were found to be established in such a case as that with which such acts were done by the master of the business, it may be that a Court might hold a departure shown, for the intent itself being proved aliunde, acts of departure apparently trivial, have been held enough to constitute acts of bankruptcy. I express no opinion on this one way or the other, save that I think it would be going a long way to hold it.

(1) 7 Mod. 139.

(2) Moseley, 1 (3) = Sel. Ch. Ca. 69.

The question in this place is as to Panna Lall's intent, which is relied on as having been proved. I find great difficulty in dealing with this subject.

[801] It is clear that intent is of the essence of the act of insolvency, see Ex parte Coates, In re Skelton (1), where it was held that the omission in the petition to allege an intent to defeat or delay creditors was fatal, and that such a defect was matter of substance and not of form, and could not be cured by amendment. Now even if a man could commit an act by an agent without giving him authority, how can he be said to do it with an intent which is that of the agent alone, as it must be in this case; for confessedly, Dhunput never knew Panna Lall was going upstairs on the 7th and 8th, or had anything to do with his doing so? If the act of the agent being one which can be done by an agent, as the delivery of property, were done by the authority of the principal, then the act, and the intent, may well be the latter's. But I do not see how a man who neither did the act nor caused it to be done, nor had any knowledge or intention about it, can have an intent on the part of his agent imputed to him. It is to be observed that the intent alleged in the petition is not the intent of Panna Lall only, but that of Panna Lall and of the other gomastas, a joint intent harboured by them all on behalf of their master. This is not noticed in the latter part of the judgment; it seems to me only to illustrate, and not materially to increase in this case, the difficulty of holding that one man may harbour an intent on behalf of another so as to make that other responsible for it to the extent of plunging his whole estate into insolvency.

But apart from this, I do not think that any intent to defeat or delay a creditor can be connected with what Panna Lall did. He could not pay the creditors, though he was most anxious to do so. His going upstairs did not make him the less able to pay them or affect their position in any way. They had no remedy against him, and recourse to him could not help them. It is true that if he had levanted and sent away all the servants, such of the creditors as might desire to file suits might have been delayed in serving the summons. He did not do this. I do not see what other act of his could have, or be supposed or intended to have, the effect of delaying them. We had highly subtle arguments addressed to us on the subject, but they all come back to this, that he did not, as he could not, pay: that is, he stopped payment, [802] which would not in itself have been an act of insolvency by Dhunput himself had he been there.

It is said in the judgment that possibly where an owner when he heard of an act of insolvency by his agent came down and repudiated the act, it might be arguable whether he could not have the vesting order set aside. I own I do not see how this could be. The agent's act is either an act of insolvency by the owner, or it is not. If it is, it cannot be purged by matter subsequent. It is also found that Dhunput ratified the acts of his gomasta on his arrival here. I am bound, I think, to express an opinion on this. I am unable to find in this case any evidence of ratification of Panna Lall's acts by Dhunput, supposing them to be material. But if they needed such ratification, then they were not themselves acts of insolvency. It is on them alone that the adjudication was had, nor was there in the petition on which the order was made a suggestion of any subsequent ratification completing acts of insolvency incomplete until ratified.

I am of opinion, therefore, that whether the decision in Hurruck Chand Golicha's case (1) should be overruled by us now or not, the order of adjudication in the present case should be revoked. But I think that the decision ought to be now formally dissented from; it seems to me that, whatever interpretation be given to it, the decision is not warranted by law. I do not understand the case referred to before Sir C. Jackson in 1858 as shown to have been decided on the same grounds as the case of Hurruck Chand Golicha; if it was, I think it ought not to be followed. But no argument or judgment in the case are before us, and I am not clear that there may not have appeared to the learned Judge in that case sufficient ground for thinking that a fraudulent disposition of property was prima facie made out. Hurruck Chand Golicha's case has been followed in two or three cases; it is of course binding in cases which exactly fall within it.

I think it ought to be dissented from, on this the first occasion on which it has been challenged in appeal, for the following reasons. 1. Whether the narrow or the wide interpretation be given to it, the decision is, I think, against all authority to be found in the English law. 2. Even if restricted by a narrow interpretation, it [803] cannot be safely applied, for there is no guide either in the decision itself or in defined custom of trade, by which to determine under what circumstances the formidable powers given by it to a gomasta are to be attributed to him. 3. If it is to be read in the widest sense as in the head note of the case, that introduces a tremendous change into the law of agency: an agent employed to supervise and conduct a particular house of business is given the power, by implication from that authority, to destroy it, and all the other houses of business in his employers' hands, and to put his employer in the Insolvent Court without recall. You cannot purge an act of insolvency, if it is completed. If the act of the agent is an act of insolvency on the part of the employer, I do not see with great respect how the subsequent repudiation of it by the employer could remedy it.

Further, if the law established as I understand it to be is to be departed from in the case of that class of agent with no specially defined powers called a gomasta, I do not see where we can stop. It was argued (as I thought with great force) by Mr. Woodroffe that if a partner cannot commit an act of insolvency of this nature on behalf of his co-partner, as Mills v. Bennett and Ex parte Mavor show he cannot, then surely no other agent can do so. The converse may be argued, too, if Hurruck Chand Golicha's case be not now dealt with. It may be argued that, as in disregard of English authority, it is held that a gomasta can, then surely a partner may also (in disregard of those authorities), be held capable of committing such an act on behalf of the firm. This argument was in effect addressed to me in Gisborne's case, last vacation, when the argument upon which the adjudicating creditor has chiefly relied on before us was addressed to me, and Hurruck Chand Golicha's case was relied on. This I think must be the case before me, which is shortly referred to in the judgment in this case. Gisborne and Co. stopped payment, one of the three partners being here, the other two at home, and all the members of the firm were adjudicated insolvents upon grounds which upon examination appeared to me to be bad. One argument in support of the adjudication was founded upon the stoppage of payment by the partner who was in Calcutta and who remained here. It was argued that the closing of the business was a departure within the [804] Act; in fact, a constructive departure such as is, I think, a feature of this case, constituting an act of insolvency either on the part of the firm or on the part of the member of it who continued to remain here. The point was fully argued. I was clearly of opinion that it could not be sustained in that case. But so long as Hurruck Chand Golicha's case remains unreversed, such a point may be otherwise decided under slightly different circumstances, and no firm the principal members of which may be at home, with a managing partner or sub-partner here, can be safe, in my opinion, from this sort of insolvency, so long as Hurruck Chand Golicha's case is an authority.

It must be remembered that although the term gomasta, which is that employed in Hurruck Chand Golicha's case, or moonib gomasta, is very freely used, it is one the precise meaning of which is wholly undefined. Panna Lall is called no doubt properly a moonib gomasta. It means, speaking generally I suppose, a managing clerk of a native firm, but you have not and cannot without legislation have a special law (apart from proved custom) for native firms or particular classes of native firms. Hurruck Chand Golicha's case, if it is to be applied to any, must, as the law now stands, be applied to all managing agents, and hence arises what I think is the danger of it. It may be that the mode in which the business of some classes of native firms is conducted may make it convenient and just that some special rule as to insolvency should be framed which shall apply to them. But this cannot, I think, be properly done except by the Legislature. It may be that stopping payment ought to be made an act of insolvency in itself, but the Legislature has not done this.

I think the adjudication in this case should be revoked.

PRINSEP, J.—I have very little to add, as I completely agree with the judgment of Mr. Justice Pigot. I have had some doubt whether we should be right in upsetting what is said to have been the practice of this Court in insolvency for many years. It does not appear that except in the case of Hurruck Chand Golicha, the matters now raised before us have ever been made the subject of serious contention. At any rate I agree that the mischief which may result from following what we think to be the erroneous view of the law are very grave, and I agree that, sitting in appeal and [805] unfettered by any judgment of a Court of equal or superior jurisdiction, we are bound now to overrule that decision.

In this case there was not in my opinion a "departure" by the gomasta, Panna Lall, within the terms of the statute, and I also agree that even if there had been, there is nothing to connect such an act with the master Dhunput, so as to make him liable for the consequences of the conduct of his servant and gomasta. So far from departing, Dhunput hurried down to Calcutta to meet his creditors, and except that he was unable to provide sufficient funds and there was consequently a stoppage of business, there was nothing at least up to Dhunput's arrival which would amount to an act of insolvency. There was nothing done by Dhunput with intent to delay or defeat creditors. All that can be attributed to Dhunput is the stoppage of business from his not providing sufficient funds, and I agree that this is not an act of insolvency within the section.

Attachment—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 53, 274, cl. (c)—Rights of purchaser of mortgage bond at sale in execution of decree—Amendment of plaint.

Where a person at an execution sale purchases a mortgage bond under which certain immoveable property is given as collateral security for an advance, the fact that he has not attached under s. 274 of the Code will not affect his right to have the collateral security enforced by the sale of the properties mortgaged.

[806] ON the 27th August 1878, the defendants 1 and 5, and the father of the defendants 2, 3, and 4, executed a mortgage bond for Rs. 6,000 in favour of one Bhagawan Sahu, ancestor of defendant No. 6, under which certain immoveable property was hypothecated as collateral security for the debt.

Bhagawan Sahu himself died indebted to one Bishnath Dass; and on the death of Bishnath, his representatives (the present plaintiffs) brought a suit against the representatives of Bhagawan Sahu, defendant No. 6, and one Moyna Bibee, since deceased, and in execution of a decree obtained in such suit on 19th November 1890, attached and in execution sale purchased the bond executed in favour of Bhagawan Sahu for Rs. 670.

On the 22nd December 1890, the present plaintiffs, the representatives of Bishnath Dass, brought this suit against the defendants 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, making defendant No. 6 and Moyna Bibee the representatives of Bhagawan pro forma defendants, to enforce the mortgage bond of the 27th August 1878; stating in their plaint that they relinquished all interest due under the bond, and praying that, in default of payment of the amount of the principal due under the bond, the defendants might be deprived of their right of redemption. There was, however, no prayer for the sale of the mortgaged properties.

The defendants filed written statements which, however, it is unnecessary to refer to owing to the view taken of the case by the Court below. At the hearing, the plaintiffs asked leave to amend their plaint by adding a prayer for sale of the mortgaged properties. This the Subordinate Judge refused to allow them to do, stating that under s. 67 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, the plaintiffs were bound to sue for the sale of the mortgaged properties and that, not having done so, the plaint should have been rejected; and he, on the ground "that the plaintiffs had asked for a relief to which under the terms of the mortgage they were not entitled," held that their suit must fail. He also dismissed the suit on a further ground, viz., that the plaintiffs, having acquired, by their purchase of the 19th November 1890 the mortgagee's right, which was an interest in immoveable property, should have attached the bond under s. 274 of the Civil Procedure Code, and not having so attached, they were, on [807] the authority of the rulings in Srinath Dutta v. Gopal Chundra Mittra (1), Appasami v. Scott (2), Sami Ayyar v. Krishnasami (3), and Bhawani Kuar v. Gulab Rai (4) [preferring the view taken in these cases to that taken in Debendra Kumar Mandel v. Rup Lall Dass (5)], not entitled to maintain the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Twidale, Baboo Umakali Mukerjee and Baboo Manmotho Nath Mittra, for the appellants.

Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee, for the respondents.

For the appellants it was contended that the amendment of the plaint should have been allowed, as the amendment would not have affected the character of the suit; and that no attachment under s. 274 was necessary, having regard to the case of Debendra Kumar Mandel v. Rup Lall Dass (5), which should be followed in Bengal.

For the respondents it was contended that as there was no attachment under s. 274, the immoveable property mortgaged as collateral security was not affected by the sale, reference being made to the cases mentioned by the Subordinate Judge.

The judgment of the Court (O'KINEALY and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs under the following circumstances:—The defendants 1 and 5 and the father of the defendants 2 to 4 had, on the 27th of August 1878, executed a mortgage bond for Rs. 6,000 in favour of one Bhagawan Sahu, since deceased, by which various immoveable properties were hypothecated as a collateral security for the debt. Bhagawan was himself indebted to one Bishnath. Upon Bhagawan's death, the plaintiffs, who represent Bishnath, brought a suit against his (Bhagawan's) representatives (defendant 6 and one Moyna Bibee, since deceased), and in execution of their decree on the 19th of November 1890 purchased the bond held by Bhagawan. They [808] now seek to enforce the bond in question. In paragraph 6 of the plaint they state as follows:—

"Although a large sum would be due to us if calculation is made of the principal and interest of the money covered by the bond in suit, still there being no likelihood of the whole amount being realized from the mortgaged property, we have relinquished the claim for interest and brought this suit for only the principal Rs. 6,000."

And they pray:—

"(Ka). That it may be ordered by the Court that the debtor-defendants do on a day to be fixed by the Court pay the said amount of principal, and in default thereof they be deprived of their right of redemption."

"(Kha). That whatever interest may be due from the institution of suit until the date of realization of the said money under the terms of the bond be awarded (to us)" "(Ga) That the costs of this suit be ordered to be awarded to us."

Having regard to the nature of the bond and the statements above referred to, the object of the suit was clearly to realize the amount secured by the enforcement of the bond according to law.

The defendants in their written statements raised various questions of law and fact, but these have not been gone into as the suit has been dismissed on two grounds, one of which certainly is of a somewhat peculiar character. The Subordinate Judge thinks that the plaintiffs ought to have prayed for the sale of the mortgaged properties, and as they did not do so, their suit must fail. As a matter of fact the plaintiff in the course of the trial prayed for the amendment of the prayer, but the Judge, relying on s. 54, cl. (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, rejected the petition. It seems to us that the Subordinate Judge has acted on an erroneous view of the law. Section 53, cl. (c), distinctly provides that an amendment, so long as it does not alter the character of the suit, may be allowed at any time before judgment. The restriction is only as to the nature of the suit; the law prohibits any such amendment as would change the fundamental character of the suit; for example, a plaint cannot be so amended as to convert a claim based on contract into an action on tort. But an alteration in the relief does not alter the character of a suit.

In the present case it does not appear that any such amendment was necessary, for the relief which the plaintiffs sought and to [809] which, in law, they were entitled, if the facts at issue were established, is sufficiently indicated in the statements in the plaint already set out. Section 54 has nothing to do with the question: it refers to the rejection of a plaint in case it does not fulfil certain conditions. But those elements are not present here, nor was the plaint rejected under s. 54. As we have said above, in our opinion the Subordinate Judge was in error in disallowing the petition for amendment. The second ground on which the suit has been disallowed may be summarized as follows:—The Subordinate Judge thinks that as the plaintiffs claim to have acquired, by their purchase of the 19th of November 1890, the mortgagee's right, which is an interest in immoveable property, and as the mortgage bond was not attached under s. 274 of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs' suit must fail.

The point in question was directly raised and decided in the case of Debendra Kumar Mandel v. Rup Lall Dass (1), where it was held that an attachment under s. 274 was not necessary to make the sale of a mortgage bond carry the lien as well as the debt. The Subordinate Judge has relied, however, on the case of Srinath Dutt v. Gopal Chundra Mittra (2) and certain cases of the Madras and Allahabad High Courts. The Calcutta case referred to does not go further than this, that non-compliance with the provisions of s. 274 in the case of a mortgage bond was an irregularity sufficient to justify the sale being set aside. As their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have often laid down, if the Court has jurisdiction, a mere irregularity will not affect the rights of the parties. But Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee argues that failure to attach under s. 274 is more than an irregularity; that in fact it vitiates the sale and conveys no right whatsoever to the purchaser in the collateral security. No doubt the Madras and Allahabad High Courts have gone to that extent. But, as at present advised, we are not disposed to take a different view of the law from that taken in Debendra Kumar Mandel v. Rup Lall Dass (1).

The question, however, remains, What was sold? in other words, was it the bond or was it the debt? The endorsement on the back [810] of the bond, dated the 6th of December 1890, furnishes little or no indication, and the question can only be answered by a reference to the execution proceedings which culminated in the sale of the 19th of November 1890.

(1) 12 C. 546.

(2) 9 C. 511.

If the bond was sold, we think, following the case of Debendra Kumar Mandel v. Rup Lall Dass (1), the non-attachment under s. 274 would not affect the right of the plaintiffs to have the collateral security enforced by the sale of the properties hypothecated. The order of the Subordinate Judge is accordingly set aside and the case remitted to him to be dealt with according to law. Costs to abide the result.

MOHIUDDIN AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. SAYIDUDDIN alias NAWAD MEAN AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs).^{*} [3rd March, 1893.]

Right of suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 30, 539—Religious endowment—Removal of sajjadanashin—Contentious and non-contentious cases—Act XX of 1863—Mahomedan law—Rule that remuneration of mutwalli should not exceed one-tenth of income of endowment—Sajjadanashin, position of.

Section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies both to contentious and non-contentious cases.

The decision of Best and Weir, JJ., in Subbaya v. Krishna (2) approved.

The interest required to enable a person to sue under that section must be an existing one, and not a mere contingency: the mere possibility of an interest or the mere possibility of succession to the managership of the properties concerning which the suit is brought is not sufficient to give a right to sue.

The right to worship of each worshipper in a Mahomedan mosque or religious endowment is an independent right wholly irrespective of the right of the other worshippers, and, therefore, non-compliance by a worshipper with the provisions of s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not affect a suit for the removal of a trustee of a Mahomedan endowment.

[811] Jan Ali v. Ram Nath Mundul (3), Jawahra v. Akbar Husain (4), Lutifunnissa Bibi v. Nazirum Bibi (5) and Zafaryab Ali v. Bakhtawar Singh (6) referred to.

The rule of Mahomedan law that the remuneration of a mutwalli should not exceed one-tenth of the income relates to such managers or mutwallis as have no beneficial interest in the usufruct of the endowed properties, or are strangers to the endowment.

Taking into consideration the nature of the institution, the character of the grant, and the position of the sajjadanashin, the rule was held not to apply to the Sasseram khankah.

THIS suit was brought for the removal of the defendant Shah Mohiuddin Ahmed, the sajjadanashin of the Sasseram khankah and the mutwalli of the Moulabagh wakf in Arrah, from his office on the grounds of misconduct, breach of trust, misappropriation, and general mismanagement of the trust properties. The facts of the case material for the purposes of this report are as follows:—

and Chieftains made grants of properties for the maintenance of the institution and the support of Shah Kabir's descendants. The first Imperial grant to the khankah was made by the Emperor Farrukhsyar in 1717, and included a large number of villages known as the Farrukhsyari properties. Subsequently other grants were made by various Chieftains and Nawabs, and in 1762 Shah Alam II, endowed the khankah with several other villages, and under that grant 281,000 dams from pargana Sasseram in Bihar, which were tantamount to Rs. 3,000, were "granted as altamgha inam to the holy Saint Sheik Kiamuddin for the expenses of travellers and comers to be enjoyed by him, generation after generation, and descendant after descendant." In 1765 this grant was confirmed by a perwana granted by Nawab Nazimuddin Ali Khan which showed the objects of the grant as follows:—

"The profit (of those villages) he shall apply to the expenses of the khankah and to his own necessary expenses, and continuously make fervent prayers for the prosperity of the kingdom."

[812] Shah Kabir Dervish was succeeded in his office by his son Shah Khululullah Shah Kiamuddin, to whom reference is made in the grants, being the fourth in descent from the dervish.

In the early part of the present century the office of superior of the Sasseram khankah devolved upon one Shah Kalimuddin Ahmed, sixth in descent from the founder of the institution, Shah Kabir Dervish. Shah Kabiruddin Ahmed had two brothers, Shah Fakiruddin Ahmed and Shah Najmuddin Ahmed. Shah Fakiruddin Ahmed died in Shah Kalimuddin Ahmed's lifetime, leaving a son, the defendant Shah Mohiuddin Ahmed, who was nominated by Shah Kabiruddin Ahmed as his successor, and who accordingly, upon the death of Shah Kabiruddin Ahmed in 1864, was installed in the office and was recognized by the Government as the sajjadanashin of the endowment. The plaintiffs were the grandsons of Shah Najmuddin Ahmed.

Shortly after his succession to the office of sajjadanashin in the year 1865, the defendant became involved in a protracted litigation with one Shah Ahmed Hossain, who brought two successive suits against Shah Mohiuddin to oust him from his office. In both these suits the defendant appears to have been successful. In 1875, however, the Government of Bengal ousted him from the office of sajjadanashin, took possession of the properties and placed them in the hands of local agents, allowing to the defendant a stipend of Rs. 150, which was subsequently raised to Rs. 300. On this occasion the defendant seems to have been restored nominally to his office of sajjadanashin, but without any voice in the administration of the properties or the trusts connected therewith.

In 1884, the defendant Mohiuddin brought a suit against Government for recovery of the properties taken possession of by Government, and for restoration substantially to the position of sajjadanashin, and on the 13th March 1885 obtained a decree in the first Court, which was upheld in appeal by the High Court in August 1886. The effect of this decree was to give the defendant the uncontrolled possession of the Farrukhsyari properties, which were regarded as devoted to religious purposes, including the maintenance of the Superior and his family; as regards the Alam Shahi properties, the trusts of which were held to be of a more or less secular character, he was declared to have them restored to him [813] subject to the control of Government under Reg. XIX of 1810. In execution of this decree the defendant obtained possession of the properties nominally in February 1887, but actual possession, at least so far as the Alam Shahi properties were concerned, was not obtained until April 1889. Until then the Alam Shahi properties were under the exclusive control of the local agents, and the defendant was allowed no voice in their administration. The Commissioner's letter, dated the 7th March 1889, sets out very clearly the facts in connection with this matter. After describing the circumstances leading up to the decision of the High Court, and referring to the provisions of Reg. XIX of 1810, in paragraph 10 he described the difficulty of the defendants' position, and in paragraph 13 he concluded as follows :—

"If the Board are of opinion that the control of this endowment be carried out under a system of less direct interference in detail, I would propose that the sajjadanashin be required to submit each year a budget, to be approved by the Board, and that audit of his accounts be made quarterly by the Board of local agents, presided over by the Sub-divisional Officer, and that, in the event of any abuses coming to the notice of the local agents, they be empowered to address the sajjadanashin through their President with a view to their removal. Further direct interference on their part does not seem required, nor could it, I think, be insisted upon legally."

On the 18th of April 1889 the Board of Revenue adopted the Commissioner's recommendation, and wrote as follows :—

"In reply, I am to say that the Board agree with you in the views you have expressed regarding the relations of the Board and the local agents with the sajjadanashin and the nature of control which the Board are intended to exercise. So long as the income from the endowment is expended on purposes in accordance with the wishes of the original donors, the Board think that a reasonable discretion should be left to the managing trustee, and that the local agents should not interfere in matters of details.

"It follows that in the opinion of the Board, the budget framed by the sajjadanashin should be accepted, and for the future the Board consider that the scheme suggested in the 13th paragraph of your letter under acknowledgment will provide as much supervision as is necessary."

As to the Moulabagh properties, it appears that in the year 1833. two Mahomedan ladies by a wakfnama endowed certain lands and premises known as Moulabagh situated in the town of Arrah for various religious and charitable purposes, appointing Shah [814] Kabiruddin Ahmed as mutwalli thereof, and providing that upon his decease the office should devolve upon his heirs and "persons standing in his place." The plaint, except in the first paragraph, contained no specific reference to the Moulabagh endowment. Admittedly no leave was obtained in respect of these properties under s. 18 of Act XX of 1863. The plaint, however, contained an endorsement by the Advocate-General to the effect that he consented to the institution of the suit which apparently referred to both the Sasseram and the Moulabagh properties.

The plaintiffs charged the defendant with various breaches of trust, on the basis of which they prayed that he be removed from the office of mutwalli and sajjadanashin as being unfit therefor; that his son Moyinuddin, who was joined as a defendant, be removed from his office of manager as having been appointed without authority; and that the plaintiff No. 1 be appointed mutwalli. They also asked that a scheme be framed for the management of the two endowments of Sasseram and Moulabagh. The charges alleged were misconduct in the performance of the religious duties connected with the trust; breach of trust in allowing

The defendant Shah Mohiuddin Ahmed joined issue with the plaintiffs on every allegation of fact, and contended that the plaintiffs had no right to institute the suit, and that the permission given to the plaintiffs was not regularly granted. He also stated that the plaintiffs had no right or interest in the Moulabagh endowment, and were, therefore, not entitled to maintain the suit in respect of that property.

The material issues, the second, third, and fourth, were as follows:—

“Was the sanction accorded to the plaintiffs to institute this suit rightly given?”

“Are the allegations of misconduct and misappropriation made by the plaintiffs true; and if so, do they constitute valid grounds for the removal of the defendant No. 1 from the post of sajjadanashin of the Sasseram endowment and the mutwalli of the Moulabagh property in Arrah?”

“In the event of the third issue being decided in the plaintiffs’ favour, is the plaintiff No. 1, under all the circumstances of the case, a fit and proper person to be appointed sajjadanashin and mutwalli?”

[815] The District Judge held that the plaintiffs had not only a right under the law to institute the suit, but that the sanctions granted to them by the Court under s. 18 of Act XX of 1863, and by the Advocate-General of Bengal, were valid and sufficient, and that no further sanction under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code was necessary under the law. He decreed the plaintiffs’ claim, and directed that the defendant Mohiuddin should be forthwith dismissed from the office of sajjadanashin of the khankah at Sasseram and from that of mutwalli of the Moulabagh endowment, and appointed plaintiff No. 1 as his successor.

The defendant Shah Mohiuddin Ahmed appealed to the High Court.

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe), Mr. C. Gregory, Moulvi Serajul Islam and Moulvi Mahomed Ishfak, for the appellants.

Mr. C. P. Hill, Moulvi Mahomed Yusuf, Baboo Saligram Singh, and Moulvi Syed Shamsul Huda, for the respondents.

The following cases on the points in the case material to this report were referred to in the course of the arguments:—

Jan Ali v. Ram Nath Mundul (1), Dhurrum Singh v. Kissen Singh (2), Lutifunnisa Bibi v. Nazirun Bibi (3), Zafaryab Ali v. Bakhtawar Singh (4), Jawahra v. Akbar Husain (5), Wajid Ali Shah v. Dianat-ullah Beg (6), Fakurudin Sahib v. Acken Sahib (7), and Subbaya v. Krishna (8).

The nature of the arguments appears from the judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and AMEER ALL, JJ.), the material portion of which (after stating the facts) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The Advocate-General, who appeared for the appellants, contended in the first place that the plaintiffs have no right to bring this suit in respect of the Moulabagh endowment, and that the suit as regards both the endowments was bad, inasmuch as leave under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code was not obtained. He [816] further contended that s. 539, under which the consent of the Advocate-General had been obtained in respect of both the endowments, did not apply to a contentious proceeding, and in support of the last contention he has relied upon the reasoning given in the judgment of Ayyar, J., in the case of Subbaya v. Krishna (1), who dissented from the other Judges. No doubt, as pointed out by Ayyar, J., the wording of s. 539 is in many respects analogous to that of the English Act known as Lord Romilly's Act (52 Geo. III., Cap. 101). But it must be remembered that in Lord Romilly's Act a special and so-called summary proceeding by a petition is provided for, which has been held not to be applicable to contentious proceedings. In England there has always existed a proceeding by information of the Attorney-General, which proceeding is left untouched by Lord Romilly's Act. There is no reason to suppose that the Indian Legislature under s. 539 intended to provide for non-contentious cases, leaving contentious cases wholly unprovided for. It is clear that were we to restrict s. 539 to non-contentious cases, a large number of trusts of a public, charitable and religious nature not covered by Act XX of 1863 would be left wholly unprovided for. We have therefore no reason to differ from what was held by Best and Weir, JJ., in the case of Subbaya v. Krishna (1), and are of opinion that s. 539 is not so restricted as is contended for by the Advocate-General. Nor do we think that the present suit is bad on the ground that the provisions of s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code have not been complied with. Since the judgment in the case of Jan Ali v. Ram Nath Mundul (2), and the case of Lutifunnissa Bibi v. Nazirun Bibi (3), there has been a material alteration effected in the section, and we think that the reasoning in the Allahabad cases (4), showing that the right of worship of each worshipper in a Mahomedan mosque or religious endowment is an independent right wholly irrespective of the right of the other worshippers, is correct. We think that, having regard to the cases last referred to and the general provisions of the Mahomedan Law, it is difficult to say that the present [817] suit is bad owing to the plaintiffs not having joined in the suit the other worshippers, or not having obtained leave in accordance with the provisions of s. 30.

The question remains—Have the plaintiffs any such interest in the Moulabagh endowment as would entitle them to join in the present action a claim in respect of those properties?

Mr. Hill contended that, under the terms of the wakfnama creating the endowment, the succession to the tauliat of the Moulabagh wakf follows that of the Sasseram endowment: in other words, to use the language of the District Judge, it was a subsidiary endowment to the principal one at Sasseram, and that being so, the possibility of either of the plaintiffs being appointed to the office of sajjadanashin of the khankah at Sasseram, gives them a right to maintain this suit.

There are two answers to this argument equally fatal to the plaintiffs' claim in respect of these properties. First, the mere possibility of an interest or the mere possibility of succession does not and cannot give a right to the plaintiffs to sue for those properties under s. 539. As we read the section, the interest must be an existing one, and not a mere contingency. Secondly, it is by no means clear from the terms of the deed of endowment that the succession to the tauliat of Moulabagh follow the succession to the office of the sajjadanashin at Sasseram. The words in the deed are as follow :—

"The said mutwalli and his heirs and those standing in his place should themselves or by deputation of some trustworthy person perform the aforesaid duties according to their wishes, and appropriate the produce thereof for the expenses mentioned above, and in the administration and management thereof they should act according to my wishes, and keeping the attainment of eternal reward in view, they should discharge all duties, and leave none of the instructions unattended to, so that, by the continuance of these charitable acts, the good reward may be attained. Therefore we give in writing these few lines in the form of a deed of endowment (wakfnama) and deed of trust (tauliatnama), that it may be of service when necessary."

Had the succession been given to the successive sajjadanashins of Sasseram, the word "warisan" would seem hardly necessary. The [818] use of the word "warisan" in the deed would lead to the inference that the donors did not contemplate a succession exclusively confined to the mode of succession followed in the Sasseram endowment. It might so happen that any one of the sajjadanashins might die leaving only a female heir, who would, in consequence of her sex, be disqualified to hold the office of sajjadanashin, and yet be perfectly competent to hold the office of mutwalli of the Moulabagh endowment.

Again, from the nature of the ceremonies provided for by the wakfnama of 1833, it would seem that the Moulabagh endowment is a Shiah rather than a Sunni institution, and it may so happen that any one of the sajjadanashins of the khankah, which in the main is a Sunni institution, might not feel inclined to carry out to the full extent the ceremonies usually performed in a Shiah institution. This circumstance also indicates the difficulty of regarding the Sasseram and Moulabagh endowments as so intimately connected as to give to any person interested in one an interest in the other. We think that the plaintiffs have not succeeded in showing that they possess any interest in the Moulabagh endowment such as would entitle them to join in this action a claim as against it. The suit, therefore, in so far as it refers to the Moulabagh properties, must stand dismissed, and consequently we express no opinion on the merits of the various allegations made, in the course of the trial, regarding the management of that trust.

We now come to the Sasseram endowment. As premised already, the endowment owes its origin virtually to the grant made by the Emperor Farrukhsyar in 1817.

In the year 1836 the British Government brought a suit for the resumption and assessment of the Farrukhsyari properties, which was dismissed in June 1836. About the same time another suit was brought for the resumption of the Alam Shahi properties. The Government was successful in this suit, and a decree was made in its favour on the 27th of February 1837. At this time Shah Kabiruddin was the sajjadanashin of the endowment, and accordingly on the 24th of November 1840 a letter was written by the Secretary to the Government of Bengal to the Secretary to the Board of Revenue regarding the disposal of the resumed [819] lands. Paragraph 3 of that letter is to the effect that the Government waives its right under the resumption decree to the resumed lands, and the lands are allowed to remain as before attached to the endowment.

On the 22nd February 1842 there was a further communication from the Government of Bengal to the Board of Revenue in respect of this endowment. Paragraphs 4 and 5 of that letter are important and have a material bearing on the present case. They are as follows :—

"His Lordship agrees with the majority of the Board, upon a full reconsideration of the case and of all the documents submitted, 'that this institution is subject to the control of the local agents under the provisions of Reg. XIX of 1810, and that it is consequently within the power of Government to institute such enquiries and to frame such regulations as it may deem necessary for the due administration of its funds,' and accordingly it is pleased to direct that no time be lost in carrying the orders of the 24th November 1840 into effect.

"As a supplement to those orders His Lordship further directs that those portions of the lands which appertain to the valid grants unresumed by the resumption Courts be assigned to the sajjadanashin, so long as he may be allowed to continue in charge of the wakf, as his personal remuneration for the duties performed. No enquiry need be made at present into the extent and assets of these lands, and no account need be rendered by the sajjadanashin of the income derived from them or to the mode in which that is expended. But a distinct list of the villages so assigned must be kept on record."

Apparently from that time until his death Kahiruddin managed the properties in accordance with the views expressed in the letter of February 1842. Apparently also the Government drew a broad line of distinction between the two sets of properties, and that distinction was clearly recognized in the judgment of the First Court in the suit of 1884 as well as in the judgment of the High Court on appeal.

Mr. Hill contended that the Government had no power to make that distinction or to lay down any such rule as is contained in paragraph 4 of that letter, because, he said, not having resumed the properties covered by the Farrukhsyari grant, it had no power to widen or vary the purposes pointed out in the original trust, and that the defendant was guilty of breach of trust in not submitting any account of the income accruing from the Farrukhsyari [820] properties and in taking what remained after the performance of the purely religious trusts.

From the year 1842 up to the year 1875, when the Government ousted the defendant, no question seems to have been raised as to the competency of the Government to lay down the rule in question. The High Court followed that rule, and in directing the restoration of the properties to the defendant, gave their directions in accordance therewith.

"It would thus appear," said the learned Judges, "that in 1842 the sajjadanashin, Shah Kahiruddin Ahmed, had the management of the khan-kah properties subject so far as the resumed properties were concerned, to the control of the local agents and the Board under Reg. XIX of 1810, but as regards the unresumed properties he was allowed to enjoy the income thereof without rendering accounts." And again "on the 2nd March 1849, on the recommendation of the Board, the control of the Local Authorities on the part of Government over the Sasseram endowment was withdrawn: Government at the same time reserved the right of interference at any future time in case of abuse or misappropriation of the trust. The whole of the endowment property appears, then, to have been made over to the sajjadanashin and to have remained in his uncontrolled possession for 15 or 16 years."

And in p. 164 of the paper-book the following words are found:—

"From these papers it would appear that the plaintiff only submitted accounts with reference to the property in Schedule B, and that he all along treated the other properties as they were ordered to be treated under paragraph 4 of Government letter, dated 22nd February 1842."

Matters thus continued until 1875, when the defendant was ousted from possession. It seems to us too late to consider whether the Government had or had not the power to lay down a rule which the High Court stated and adopted in so many words in their judgment of the year 1886. Even had the Government acted ultra vires, the long course of practice would, in our opinion, be a sufficient justification on the part of the defendant in not rendering any account in respect of the unexpended portion of the income arising from the Farrukhsyari properties.

The defendant is charged in the plaint with having misappropriated the Rs. 20,000 paid to him by Government; but, as will be seen later, he never received any portion of this sum. Nor is the [821] allegation correct that he appointed his son as manager on a salary of Rs. 50 from the Alam Shahi properties to the detriment of the trust, for, as a matter of fact, the appointment was made by the local agents.

But it has been strongly urged by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that, as mutwalli, the defendant was not entitled to more than one-tenth of the income, and that as he has admittedly taken more, he is guilty of a breach of trust. And this view has been accepted and endorsed by the Judge in the Court below; and it forms one of the grounds upon which he has directed the defendant's removal from his office of sajjadanashin. In our opinion, even had the rule of one-tenth relied upon by the plaintiffs referred to an endowment of the kind in question, the rule laid down by Government, affirmed by the High Court, and acted upon for a number of years, would have furnished a sufficient defence against removal on the ground of breach of trust. It may furnish a ground for admonition but not for dismissal.

The rule of the Mahomedan Law that the remuneration of a mutwalli should not exceed one-tenth of the income, does not seem to us to have been rightly apprehended in the Court below. It relates, as we understand it, to such managers or mutwallis as have no beneficial interest in the usufruct of the endowed properties or are strangers to the endowment.

For example, where a wakf is created and no mutwalli is appointed or no provision is made for his allowance, the Kazi is directed, in making the appointment or in fixing the allowance, not to allow the stipend to exceed one-tenth of the rents and profits of the wakf properties. But this provision does not and cannot apply, from the nature of the institution and the position of the sajjadanashin in relation to it, to the endowment in dispute. In considering this question, we have to bear in mind the character of the person to whom the grant was made, the nature of the institution of which he was the founder, and the rites and ceremonies connected therewith.

Richardson defines a khankah, sometimes also called a khangah, to mean a monastery or religious structure built for the Eastern Sufis, or dervishes. Meninski defines it thus:—"domus propter Deum extructa in usum sophorum aut religiosorum, cœnobium." And [822] in the Burham (a Persian dictionary of great repute) and Majalis-ul-Aarifin (a work describing the tenets of the Sufis) it is defined as a place where dervishes and other seekers after truth congregate for religious instruction and devotional exercise. These khankahs exist in all parts of India and, so far as can be gathered from the works relating to them, have come into existence under the following circumstances:—A dervish or a Sufi of particular sanctity has settled in some locality; so long as he has not attained sufficient importance, his place of abode is called a takia or astana, according to his position in public estimation. His pious life and teachings attract public notice, disciples gather round him, and a place is constructed for their lodgment, and the humble takia grows into a khankah. After his death his grave becomes a shrine and an object of pilgrimage, not only for his disciples, but for people of distant parts, both Hindus and Mahomedans. The process of development indicated here is observable in the very khankah which forms the subject of dispute in the present case. As has been pointed out in the case of Piram Bibi v. Abdul Karim (1), these dervishes professed esoteric doctrines and distinct systems of initiation. They are mostly Sufis or Eastern mystics. Some of them were followers of Mian Roushan Bayezid, who flourished about the time of the Emperor Akbar, and who had founded an independent esoteric brotherhood, in many respects differing from the Sufis, in which the Chief or Pir occupied a peculiarly distinctive position. So long as he lived the founder himself was the sajjadanashin, "the one seated on the prayer mat;" in other words, the Chief or Superior. After his death some one among his heirs, indicated by him as qualified to initiate the murids into the mysteries of the tarikah or holy path, succeeds him in his office of sajjadanashin. He is not only a mutwalli but also a spiritual preceptor, and in him is supposed to continue the spiritual line (Silsilla). There are abundant indications on this record that this is exactly the case with the khankah of Sasseram. Shah Kabir was, as his title shows, a dervish, and from the evidence of the defendant it is clear that the doctrines supposed to be inculcated by these men are, as he calls it, of tassawuf or sufism. We have dwelt so far on the [823] character of the institution, in order to show how materially it is connected with the personality of the sajjadanashin or Superior. He is an integral part of the institution and the central figure, so to speak, therein. Its existence depends on his personality. This is evident from the very terms of the grant in question—

"That one lakh of dams, which is tantamount to Rs. 1,197 of Imperial coin, shall remain a grant from Purgana Haveli, Sasseram, in the Province of Behar for the expenses of the khankah of Sheik Kabir Dervish, from the season of the rabi "Y until" (year of horse) as inam, as per specification given. It is required that the highborn, noble and illustrious scions, the noble amirs, the clerks of affairs, the jagirdars and kuraris of present and future times, shall leave those dams to be enjoyed by him generation after generation and descendant after descendant, and consider it in every respect and by all means as an item of the remission and exemption."

The grant no doubt is to the khankah, but the enjoyment is given to the dervish and his descendants, generation after generation. The works they have to perform, and the disciples they have to maintain, are all part and parcel of their own selves. The Urs, the Fatehas, etc., are of their deceased ancestors. It was this view which was practically enunciated by the Government in its letter of the year 1842, and substantially reiterated by the High Court in its judgment. Again, from the nature of things it would be impossible to spend more than a certain amount for the various religious purposes which, admittedly, ought to be performed in the khankah, the imambara, and the masjid, or in respect of the students who live there. There is no provision for accumulation, and in the absence of any sufficient evidence to show that the rites and ceremonies have not been properly performed, there is nothing in the Mahomedan Law which warrants our saying that in taking the balance of the income for his maintenance and the maintenance of his family and relatives, the defendant committed a breach of trust such as would justify his removal.

It was stated that the defendant starved the religious trusts in order to live in affluence. The fact of his living in affluence seems to us beside the question. If the defendant wilfully neglected to perform the duties which were incumbent on him, and misappropriated the amounts which ought to have been spent [824] in the performance of those ceremonies; if he starved the students or turned any of them out for the purpose of increasing his own allowance, in that case no doubt the question of malversation would arise. But, as we said before, though there is a general allegation that the Urs and Fatehas, etc., are not performed, and other religious duties are neglected, the evidence on this point is meagre, unsatisfactory, and unreliable. No respectable Mahomedan of Sasseram, no member of the family, who undoubtedly was in a position to speak to the performance or non-performance of these ceremonies, has been called. The two men who have spoken to the non-performance of the Urs, have contradicted themselves so materially, and their evidence is so vague that little reliance can be placed upon it. The plaintiff, who was exceptionally in a position to depose to these facts, has carefully abstained from giving his evidence. On the other hand, there are a number of witnesses who speak to the due performance of those religious ceremonies. From the Farrukhsyari grant a few students who learn by rote the Koran are maintained. This appears to have been the case for some years past. Other branches of learning are taught in the madrassa, which is supported with the income of the Alam Shahi properties. None of the Koran readers are called to say that they are starved, and there is no evidence that any one of them was wilfully turned out with the object of appropriating so much of the money as used to be spent on him. Taking into consideration the nature of the institution, the character of the grant, and the sajjadanashin's position, we are clearly of opinion that the rule of one-tenth does not apply to this endowment; and having regard to the total absence of any reliable or satisfactory evidence that any of the religious ceremonies have been neglected or "starved," it is impossible for us to say that the defendant was not justified in appropriating for his own maintenance and that of his family the balance of the income of the Farrukhsyari properties. When the Government was in possession of these properties, an allowance of Rs. 100 seems to have been made for the performance of these ceremonies. There is no evidence that the sum spent by the defendant, which is considerably more, is insufficient. So far therefore as this particular charge is concerned, we must hold against the plaintiff.

[825] (After dealing with the evidence on the other charges made against the defendant, and finding they were not proved, the judgment continued):—

Therefore, so far as the specific charges attempted to be established to make a case for the removal of the trustee are concerned, they, in our opinion, have failed signally. Even if this Court was in a position to remove the defendant from his position as sajjadanashin, independently of his secular duties as mutwalli, there does not appear to us to be any evidence tending to show that the lower Court was right in appointing the plaintiff in his place as sajjadanashin. As we have already noticed, the office of sajjadanashin is that of a spiritual preceptor, and as such, no doubt, he is in charge of the properties connected with the institution of which he is the Superior. He has certain spiritual duties to perform. In him the spiritual line of his ancestor, the founder of the institution, is continued. He teaches his murids the doctrines which are supposed to be communicated to the disciples of the saint. Besides knowing the tenets and rules of his religion, he has presumably to know something of those doctrines and the rules of initiation. There is no evidence in this case that the plaintiff is a murid of the present sajjadanashin, or of any other person competent to teach him those doctrines. There is no evidence that he has any knowledge such as would qualify him to make murids or disciples. Admittedly he has no knowledge of Arabic. No ground is shown in the lower Court's judgment, or upon the evidence, for holding that the plaintiff is a fit person for the office of sajjadanashin. And his capacity to manage the properties has been discounted by the Judge, as he has associated with him a manager.

On the whole, therefore, we think that the plaintiff's case for the removal of the trustee and for his own appointment in the place of the latter has failed, and the suit must therefore be dismissed with costs.

MAHOMED ABDUL HAI (Defendant No. 1) v. GUJRAJ SAHAI (Plaintiff) AND ANOTHER (Defendant No. 2).
[25th January and 11th February, 1893.]

Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880)—Irregularity of proceedings—Ground for setting aside sale—Presumption.

The Collector having received a report from the tehsildar that arrears of road cess (Bengal Act IX of 1880) were due in respect of villages, took proceedings purporting to be in pursuance of Bengal Act VII of 1880. In the certificate of unpaid demand, the names of the persons described as debtors were those not of the present proprietor, but of former proprietors, and the copy and notice were addressed to them.

Held, that, even if the certificate and the proceedings following it had been duly authenticated, and intimated to the present proprietor, which had not been the case, they could not affect his right of property in the villages, inasmuch as the Act only authorized the attachment and sale of the property of the persons who were described as debtors. This of itself was a ground for cancelling the sale. Their Lordships also concurred in the view taken by the High Court that there was no evidence showing that the certificate had been duly signed; and were of opinion that the High Court had rightly found payment of the arrears before the sale.

APPEAL from a decree [2nd August 1889 (1)] of the High Court, reversing a decree (10th May 1888) of the District Judge of Tirhut.

The plaintiff in this suit was the present respondent, Gujraj Sahai, and the defendants were the appellant Mahomed Abdul Hai and the Secretary of State for India in Council. The object of the suit was to obtain a declaration of the invalidity of an auction sale held on the 15th April 1886, the result of proceedings taken by the Collector of the district under the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880) in reference to villages Ghouspore, Kadirpore, and Suratpore, in Mozufferpore, for road cess alleged to be due (Act IX of 1880).

[827] The first defendant now appellant, had been declared to be the purchaser at that sale, and insisted on his right to possession of the villages.

The appellant was substantially the only defendant; the other person sued, the Secretary of State for India in Council, now named as a respondent on the record, but who did not appear, had taken no part in the defence.

The facts of the case appear on the report of the appeal below, in I.L.R., 17 Calc. 414, as well as in their Lordships' judgment.

The suit was dismissed with costs by the District Judge; but on appeal a Division Bench of the High Court (PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ.) reversed that decree, finding that the arrears had been paid; that thereupon it became the duty of the Collector, under the provisions of ss. 21 and 22 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, to enter satisfaction upon the certificate; and that a sale after that payment had been made was invalid. The Court also held that independently of the above, and apart from the question whether payment had or had not been made before the sale, the latter had not taken place in virtue of a certificate duly issued and completed against the proper person, so as to place the plaintiff, the proprietor of the villages sold, in the position of a judgment-debtor under the Act; and that the result had been that the subsequent proceedings were irregular and defective and the sale was invalid. A decree was therefore obtained by the plaintiff. See I. L. R., 17 Calc. 419, where the judgment is given at length.

On this appeal,

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that, on the facts, the District Judge had rightly presumed that the certificate was duly signed in accordance with the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1880. It was endorsed by the Deputy Collector five days after it was filed, with the direction that notice should issue, and the acceptance of it as properly made, in conformity with the requirements of the Act, was correct. The decision of the District Judge as to the non-payment of the arrears, was well founded, on reference to facts in evidence which were brought forward, and his decree should not have been reversed. Reference being made [828] to ss. 8 and 22 of the Act, it was contended that, when a certificate had been made by the Collector, payment of the amount stated could only be made in the manner prescribed for the deposit of decretal amounts in execution and upon notice to the Collector. Even if the judgment of the High Court was right, it should have been made on terms of the appellant, as auction-purchaser, being repaid the purchase-money with interest. Reference was made to Sadhusaran Singh v. Panch Deo Lal (1); and Rash Behari Mukerjee v. Petambori Choudhrani (2).

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondent, Gujraj Sahai, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was given by

LORD WATSON.—This suit, which relates to three villages, Ghouspore, Kadirpore, and Suratpore, situate in the district of Mozufferpore, in Tirhut, was brought by Gujraj Sahai, one of the respondents, in the Court of the District Judge, against the Secretary of State for India, and other defendants, including the present appellant, Abdul Hai. The plaintiff prays for confirmation of his right and for cancelment of a certificate dated the 13th January 1886, issued under the Act No. VII of 1880, and of an auction sale in execution of that certificate upon the 15th April 1886. The appellant defends, on the ground that he acquired a valid right to the lands as purchaser at the sale sought to be cancelled. The Secretary of State applied for an extension of the time for lodging his written statement, but made no further appearance in the action, although his name appears as that of a respondent in this appeal.

Gujraj Sahai, who may be properly described as the respondent, in May 1882 purchased the three villages in question from the Land Mortgage Bank of India and in October 1884 he was entered as proprietor in the land register kept for the Muzufferpore district. The previous proprietors were Bibi Amina, Bibi Nisar Fatima, and Bibi Manzural Fatima. Notwithstanding the purchase and subsequent mutation of names in the land register, these ladies continued to be treated by the Collectorate as the proprietors liable for road cess; and the form of the proceedings taken by the [829] Collector under Act No. VII of 1880, which are the subject of controversy in this case, is obviously due to that circumstance. Demands of road cess made against Bibi Amina were duly met by the respondent from the time of his purchase till the end of 1884; but none of the three instalments of cess falling due in the year 1885 were paid. Accordingly Jogeswar Sahai, a tehsildar, to whom the collection of these instalments had been entrusted, reported to the Collector that the arrears of road cess in respect of the three villages amounted with interest and commission to Rs. 43-4-6. The only names mentioned in the report are those of Bibi Amina and Bibi Nisar Fatima as the holders of the estate for which the arrears were due.

Thus far there is really no dispute as to the facts of the case. After he received the tehsildar's report, it appears that the Collector did take certain proceedings for recovery of the arrear, which were meant to be in pursuance of Act No. VII of 1880, and which terminated with the exposure of the three villages to auction sale on the 15th April 1886. With regard to the actual tenor as well as the legal effect of these proceedings, the parties are widely at variance. In substance, the respondent's case is that these proceedings were in themselves informal and ineffective to displace his title as owner; and that, assuming them to be formal, the sale was illegal by reason of his having previously paid the arrear due to the Collector.

The appellant disputes the fact of payment, and maintains that the whole procedure was in conformity with the provisions of the Act of 1880, and that the property of the three villages has been duly vested in him as auction purchaser at the sale of the 15th April 1886. Two of the issues adjusted for the trial of the case sufficiently raise all the questions which were argued in this appeal; these being,—

"4th.—Before the 15th April 1886, did plaintiff pay the amount due by him to any person authorized to receive the same?

"6th.—Was the certificate of the 13th January 1886 informal? If so, what is the effect?"

The District Judge answered both these issues in the negative, and dismissed the suit. On appeal his decision was reversed by a [830] Divisional Bench of the High Court at Calcutta and the suit decreed with costs to the present respondent, both against the Secretary of State and against the appellant.

It will be convenient to begin with the sixth issue, and first of all, to consider the evidence on record of the precise terms of the proceedings which were taken by the Collector for recovery of these arrears of cess under the Act of 1880. The initial step prescribed by the Act is the making of a certificate by the Collector in statutory form, setting forth the amount and particulars of the arrears demanded, and the name and address of the debtor by whom they are owing. The Act requires that the certificate shall be signed by the Collector. When completed and duly filed, the certificate has, in so far as regards the remedies for enforcing it, the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court, the Secretary of State being the judgment-creditor, and the person therein described as debtor being a judgment-debtor. There has been produced from the Collector's office a document bearing date the 13th January 1886, which is in the form of a statutory certificate of demand. When produced, it was in a tattered condition, and that part of the paper upon which the Collector's signature should have been written was wanting. It will be necessary to consider hereafter whether it ought to be presumed that, as originally prepared, the document was completed by his signature, that being one of the points upon which the Courts below have differed in opinion. The amount of arrears, and the property in respect of which they had accrued, are stated in terms similar to those of the tehsildar's report of the same date. The names of the defaulters are given as "Bibi Amina, Bibi Nisar Fatima, and Manzural Fatima regarding the property purchased by Baboo Gujraj Sahai."

When the certificate has been filed, the Act prescribes that the Collector shall serve a copy thereof, together with a notice in statutory form upon the judgment-debtor. The notice contains an intimation that if the debtor fails to show cause within 30 days, or does not show sufficient cause why the certificate should not be executed, it will be executed in the same manner as if it were a decree of a Civil Court, unless the amount certified as being in arrear is paid into the Collector's office. Upon due service of [831] the copy-certificate and notice, the certificate binds all immoveable property of the judgment-debtor within the jurisdiction of the Collector, to the same effect as if it had been attached under s. 274 of the Civil Procedure Code. There is produced from the office of the Collector a notice dated the 21st January 1886, which bears that a copy of the certificate was annexed. There is a dispute as to its service, but assuming the document to have been duly served upon the respondent, it is open to the same observations as the certificate. It is addressed not to the respondent Gujraj, but to the ladies who had been previous owners of the property.

No one having appeared to show cause why the certificate should not be executed against the judgment-debtors, a sale followed, on the 15th April 1886, at which the appellant appears to have made the highest bid of Rs. 560. That is evidenced by a memorandum of bids, produced from the office of the Collector, which is signed by the appellant as highest bidder and purchaser at the sale. The subjects exposed for sale on that occasion are described in the memorandum as "the right and interest owned by Mussammatt Bibi Amina, Bibi Nisar Fatima, and Bibi Manzural Fatima, in the property purchased by Baboo Gujraj Sahai, in Mouzah Ghouspore, &c." Any certificate of sale issued to the purchaser would presumably, and certainly ought to have run in the same terms. But the appellant has not produced a certificate, and he has neither alleged nor attempted to prove that he paid the price; yet he had the courage to argue that, in the event of his failing in this appeal, he ought to have a decree against the respondent for repayment of the Rs. 560.

Assuming that the certificate of the 13th January 1880, and the steps of procedure which followed upon it, were authenticated in terms of the Act and were duly intimated to the respondent, their Lordships are of opinion that they could not in any way affect his right of property in the three villages for which arrears of cess were due. If they were directed against the respondent, and were meant to attach his interest, these proceedings were unwarranted by the provisions of Act VII of 1880, which only authorize the attachment and sale of property of the persons who, on the face of them, are described as the judgment-debtors. The [832] Act gives no authority to attach and sell the estate of any other person in satisfaction of the arrears due by the judgment-debtors. The certificate upon which the appellant relies could not have the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court for the purpose of execution, except against Bibi Amina, Bibi Nisar Fatima, and Bibi Manzural Fatima. If, on the other hand, the property sold in execution of the certificate was merely the interest of the three ladies, as the memorandum of bids very strongly suggests, the respondent's title and proprietary possession remained unimpaired.

These considerations are in themselves sufficient to dispose of the present appeal. But their Lordships desire to express their concurrence with the view taken by the learned Judges of the High Court, that there is no evidence to show that the certificate of the 13th January 1886 was ever signed by the Collector in compliance with the requirements of the Act. Direct evidence there is none; but the District Judge found, as a matter of fact, that it had been signed, applying the maxim omnia rite et solenniter acta. According to the learned Judge's own showing the circumstances of the case are not very favourable to the presumption. Of one writing produced, he says:—"Like everything else which has come under my cognizance from a road cess office, it is a most slovenly document." The certificate in question he does not seem to have regarded as an exception from the general rule. He describes it as drawn up "in the usual slovenly manner;" and he ascribes the error of inserting the ladies' names as debtors, after mutation in the land register, to "oversight and general slovenliness." When the extant parts of an incomplete writing exhibit such traces of careless preparation, their Lordships think it would be straining the maxim too far to presume that the parts which have disappeared must necessarily have been free from error.

Their Lordships are also of opinion, with the learned Judges of the High Court, that the respondent has proved payment of the arrear of cess specified in the certificate before the date of the sale proceedings; and that the fourth issue ought therefore to be answered in the affirmative. The receipt is proved to have been delivered to the respondent's mukhtar, in exchange for the money, by Laldhari Singh, who at that time was admittedly one of the tehsildars employed in the collection of cess. The District Judge [833] negatived the payment because of the impossibility of separate receipts for the same cess having been issued to two different tehsildars, as deposed to by the Deputy Collector. Now the evidence of the Deputy Collector hardly goes that length. He only says that "it is never the custom to write the same demand in more than one cheque book," which is very different from saying that such a thing could not occur. Had the evidence of payment rested simply upon the receipt, there might have been some room for doubt. But the important evidence comes from the office of the Collector. The money was paid into the treasury by Laldhari Singh, accompanied by a chalan under his hand, dated the 1st February 1886, which states the payment to be on account of cess of mouzah Ghouspore, &c., remitted by Bibi Amina, one of the judgment-debtors. The payment thus made was entered in the register of receipts of the treasurer of Mozufferpore treasury for the month of February 1886, reference being made to the chalan for particulars. Whether Laldhari Singh had or had not proper authority to collect the arrear is really a matter of no consequence, because it is clear that more than six weeks before the auction sale the money was paid into the Government treasury, along with a distinct statement that it applied to the arrears of cess for the three villages now in dispute.

Upon the arrear being paid into the treasury, it became the statutory duty of the Collector, under s. 22 (b) of the Act, to enter satisfaction upon the certificate of the 13th January 1886, under his hand and signature, which he failed to do. The appellant argued that there being no such entry upon the certificate on the 15th April, his purchase of that date was valid. It would be a singular result if a Collector's neglect of his statutory duty gave him statutory power to sell in execution the property of a person who owed nothing to the Government. That such was not the intention of the Legislature is abundantly clear. By the terms of the notice served upon the judgment-debtor, along with a copy of the certificate, all that the debtor is required to do, in order to prevent execution of the certificate, is to pay the amount of arrears demanded into the office of the Collector.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the judgment appealed from ought to be affirmed. The appellant [834] Abdul Hai must pay to the respondent, Gujraj Sahai, his costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT :

*Lords Watson, Hobhouse and Morris and Sir R. Couch.[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]*ISMAIL ARIFF (Plaintiff) v. MAHOMED GHOU (Defendant).

[1st and 18th February, 1893.]

Declaratory decree, suit for—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Mere possession on the one side and unjustifiable dispossession on the other—Right of the possessor dispossessed by a wrong-doer, as against the latter—Injunction—Wakf.

Lawful possession of land is sufficient evidence of right as owner, as against a person who has no title whatever, and who is a mere trespasser. The former can obtain a declaratory decree, and an injunction restraining the wrong-doer.

In such a suit the defence was that the land was wakf, and the defendant mutwalli of it. Both Courts found that the plaintiff was in possession as purchaser from some of those who were entitled to sell. But the first Court did not find a fact, which the appellate Court found, viz., that the property had been constituted wakf. Both Courts, however, concurred in the finding that the defendant at all events was not the mutwalli, and had no title.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaratory decree against this defendant as to his right, and an injunction restraining him from interfering with his possession. For the purposes of the plaintiff's claiming such a decree, it was not necessary that he should negative the wakf, as to the validity of the endowment no decision being needed. This could not be decided either way in this suit, as parties interested were not before the Court.

APPEAL from a decree (27th July 1888) of the Appellate High Court, reversing a decree (27th March 1888) of the High Court in its Original Jurisdiction.

The main question between the plaintiff-appellant and the defendant-respondent, was whether, on the state of facts that [835] the plaintiff's possession of his purchased land had been interfered with by the defendant, who had no title to it, and was acting of his own wrong, it was or was not sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that he was in quiet possession when the interference took place, without negating an alleged defect in his title. The Courts below had differed as to whether the claim for a decree declaring the plaintiff's right, and restraining the defendant from interfering with his possession, had been made out.

The plaintiff was in possession of the land, about two bighas in Machua Bazar in Calcutta, which he had purchased in 1885 from Anna Baba Saheb, who had previously purchased from the descendants of one Sheikh Khubulla. His plaint alleged that after he had obtained possession, the defendant served notices to quit on some of the tenants, acting as if he, the defendant, was the owner, and involved the plaintiff in a claim that the land had been made wakf by Khubulla, and that the defendant had been appointed mutwalli thereof. The prayer was that the plaintiff should be declared the sole and absolute owner of the land, which had not been dedicated or made wakf, and that it should be declared that the defendant had no right in the land : also that the latter should be restrained from interfering with the plaintiff's possession.

The defence was that the land having belonged to the Sheikh above named, he had made it wakf by a wasiatnama executed by him on the 3rd of May 1850, having dedicated it for the purpose of defraying the expenses of lighting and repairing a musjid in mauza Bara Bati, and of the support of poor persons, directing that his five sons should in yearly rotation act as mutwallis, or curators of the dedicated property. Khubulla died in 1854, and it was further stated that his eldest son, Ramzanulla, had confirmed the wakf by executing a wakfnama to the same effect as his father's wasiatnama in this respect. It was also stated for the defence that, in 1877, the sole surviving son, Sheikh Enayetulla, had appointed one Abdulla Ghogari to be mutwalli of the wakf property. This last person had on the 9th March 1882 appointed the defendant to that office. The defendant also alleged that some of Khubulla's descendants had in 1881 and 1882 fraudulently executed deeds purporting to convey the land to Anna Baba Sahab. At the original hearing Trevelyan, J., [836] having fixed issues as to the title of the parties, and the existence of a wakf, was of opinion that, in the view which he took of the case; it was not necessary for him to decide whether or not the wasiatnama of Khubulla, and the wakfnama of Ramzanulla, his son, created valid and subsisting trusts. He, however, made the following observations :—

"I think it is clear law that the mere fact of the execution of a document which purports to devote land to religious or charitable uses does not preclude a person contesting the operation of the trusts of such document from contending that the so-called 'wakf' was a device for the purpose of providing for the wakif's family. The question is whether this endowment is a nominal one, or a bona fide one.

"Owners of property have in India, as in other countries, frequently been anxious to prevent their descendants from alienating their property, and in this country the means attempted to be used for this purpose have often consisted of so-called deeds of endowment. This has been the case with both Hindus and Mahomedans.

"If a settlor, settling property by means of a so-called deed of endowment, is simply and solely intending to benefit his family, and only uses the form of a religious trust for the purpose of benefiting that family and of preventing the property from being alienated by his descendants, or from being seized and sold at the instance of creditors of his descendants, then the endowment is, I think, not real, but sham.

"For the purpose of ascertaining whether the endowment is real, one may, I think, look not only at the document itself, but one may also see how the settlor himself and his descendants after him have treated the so-called trust."

The Judge then considered the evidence in the suit, and found nothing to show that the alleged wakfnamas were ever acted upon ; that the sons of Khubulla received the rents of the property until the sale to Baba Sahab : and that there was no evidence of the application of the rents to the purpose of the wakf. If anything, the evidence was the other way. In 1873, before there was apparently any intention to sell the property, the brothers, without any mention of the wakf, gave to Hafiz Mahomed Hossein a muktearnama to collect the rents of this property ; and the evidence intended to show the application of the rents to religious objects failed. On the 2nd December 1881, Piruzulla, son of Kudrutulla, and the other descendants of Khubulla, conveyed the property to Baba Saheb, who was put into possession before any disputes arose with Mahomed Ghous. There was nothing [837] to show that Abdula Ghogari was ever appointed mutwalli. He seemed to have been simply a tenant on the property.

After a full examination of the evidence, the judgment concluded thus:—

"On the 10th March 1883 Enayetulla conveyed his interest in the property to Baba Saheb.

"On the 24th of September 1885 Baba Saheb sold this property to Ismail Ariff, who on the 11th of September 1886 brought this suit.

"Some sort of suggestion was made in cross-examination that the purchases by Baba Saheb and by Ismail Ariff were not bona fide. I have no reason for supposing that these purchases were in any way unreal. If they were not real, the persons entitled to the property would be the heirs of Khubulla. Mahomed Ghous would have had no answer to a suit by these persons, and there is, as far as I can see, no reason why they should have put up other persons to sue on their behalf.

"There is no doubt that before this suit was brought the plaintiff had not got a title from all the heirs of Khubulla. Since the suit has been instituted the plaintiff has obtained releases from the other heirs, but on behalf of two such heirs who are minors their mother, who has no authority so to do, has released the plaintiff.

"The question is this. Is the plaintiff who purchased from some of the persons entitled, who received possession from the persons then in complete possession either for themselves or on behalf of themselves and others, and was actually, as I have found, in complete possession, entitled to have his rights declared as against a mere trespasser who, without any shadow of title, is contesting the plaintiff's right?

"I think he is, and I think that he is so entitled whether or not the will of Khubulla and the wakfnama of Ramzanulla created a good wakf.

"The defendant has no title of any kind, and the plaintiff has at least a title subject to the wakf. I must make a decree in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of the prayer of the plaint."

An appeal was heard by a Bench of three Judges (PETHERAM, C.J., NORRIS and BEVERLEY, JJ.). They were of opinion that the main point was as to the will of Khubulla, whether it constituted an endowment, and as to this, that it in effect did so; with the result that the plaintiff's title through Khubulla's heirs was not proved. As to the respondent, they were of opinion that he was shown by the facts not to be the mutwalli; and they found that his action in interfering with the tenants, and in preventing them from paying their rents, was illegal and unjustifiable. They considered the effect of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877, and [838] were of opinion that the suit could not be maintained under it, the plaintiff not having shown a good title in himself. They referred to the alleged dedication of the property having been by will, which could only affect one-third of the property, as the consent of the heirs had not been shown. But they decided that the suit had not been framed to obtain any declaration of such an interest as this might afford to the plaintiff, who had not made out a title; and that the suit should, on this defect of title, have been dismissed.

On this appeal

The Attorney-General (Sir C. Russell, Q.C.) and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, appeared for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

For the appellant it was argued that the decree of the first Court ought to have been maintained by the appellate Court and should now be restored. There was no proof of a valid wakf having been constituted, so as to prevent the heirs of Khubulla from conveying a good title to a purchaser, as Baba Saheb was. The arrangements in the wasiatnama or will of Khubulla appeared to be only intended for the purpose of securing the property in the family of the testator, and there had been no genuine dedication for religious objects or charitable uses. On the subject of attempts to perpetuate property in a testator's family by means of an unsubstantial wakf, reference was made to Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (1). Also in reference to the title to sue of a person who was not connected with a religious institution otherwise than as a person professing the religion supported by it, and who desired to secure the carrying out the trusts of that institution, Panchcowrie Mull v. Chumtoolall (2) was cited. The effect of some of the heirs of Khubulla not being shown to have consented to the appropriation was a question. Baillie's Mahomedan Law, Book X, Chap. 1. was referred to. The principal point, however, was that the appellate Court had overlooked that the plaintiff was entitled to have his lawful possession protected as against a mere wrongdoer. Both the Courts below had concurred in finding that the defendant had no title whatever, while, on the other hand, it was apparent, from what had been found by [839] the appellate Court, as well as by the original Court, that the plaintiff was in quiet possession at the time when the defendant interfered with him. The general power of the Courts to give relief against such unlawful interference still remained, notwithstanding the enactment of remedies in the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877. This point had been rightly disposed of by the judgment of Garth, C.J., in Mohabeer Pershad Singh v. Mohabeer Singh (3), who said that, where the plaintiff had been dispossessed by a person who was found to have no title, and to be a trespasser, it was sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that he was in quiet possession at the time; and this was sufficient to establish a prima facie case against the defendant, entitling the plaintiff to a decree. That this was so had been stated as their opinion by the Judges in Purmeshur Chowdhry v. Brijo Lall Chowdhry (4), though they felt bound in the latter case to follow recent rulings of the High Court, which went to this, that mere possession would not entitle the plaintiff to a decree for recovery of possession, except under the special Act or Statute which might entitle him to recover possession. The Judge who delivered the judgment in that case said that he would have preferred to follow, but for those rulings which it was now submitted were incorrect, the decision in Enaetoollah Chowdhry v. Kishen Soondur Surma (5), also the judgment of Garth, C.J., in the case of Mohabeer Pershad Singh v. Mohabeer Singh (3); and the judgment of Westropp, C.J., in Pemraj Bhavaniram v. Narayan Shivaram Khisti (6).

It was submitted that for this last reason the judgment of the appellate Court should be reversed, and that of the first Court should be restored.

JUDGMENT.

SIR R. COUCH.—The suit which is the subject of this appeal relates to land and premises in the town of Calcutta, which were purchased by the appellant from one Baba Saheb and conveyed to him on the 24th September 1885. Baba Saheb had purchased the property from the heirs of one Khubulla, the former owner, [840] who died in 1852, and had taken conveyances from them, the first being made on the 2nd December 1881. He was then put in possession, the heirs having previously been in possession, and receiving the rents of the property. Baba Saheb remained in possession until the sale to the appellant, who then received possession and had it when the suit was brought. Both these purchases were bona fide. The suit was brought by the appellant, and the cause of bringing it is stated in the plaint to be that all the tenants of the property had attorned to the plaintiff and paid rent to him except four, who, at the instigation of the defendant, the respondent in this appeal, had refused to recognize the plaintiff's title, and alleged in collusion with him that the land had been dedicated to religious and charitable purposes, and that the defendant was the mutwalli thereof, and as such alone entitled to recover the rents; that collusive suits had been brought by the defendant in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes against the four tenants, and decrees for possession obtained therein by consent or non-appearance; and the plaint prayed for a declaration that the plaintiff was the sole and absolute owner of the land, that the same was not dedicated for religious or charitable purposes, and that the defendant had no sort of right, title, or interest therein, and for an injunction and damages. The defence stated that the lands belonged originally to Khubulla who, by a deed of wakfnama dated a native date corresponding with the 3rd May 1850, granted and dedicated the lands for the purpose of defraying the expenses of lighting and doing the repairs of a certain mosque in mouzah Bara Bati, and for the support of travellers, mendicants, &c., and widows residing in the house, and by the deed further provided that his five sons therein mentioned should be the mutwallis in rotation every year; and that the defendant had been appointed mutwalli of the wakf lands and property. It also stated another wakfnama by Ramzanulla, the eldest son of Khubulla, made about four years after his death.

The suit was heard by Mr. Justice Trevelyan on the Original Side of the High Court at Calcutta. In his judgment, after a careful examination of the evidence and a finding that the wakfnama was executed by Khubulla, he said he had come to the [841] conclusion that there was nothing in the evidence to show that the wakfnama was ever acted upon; that the brothers and their descendants received the rents of the property until the sale to Baba Saheb, and there was nothing to show that the rents were applied for the purposes of the wakf: that in the view which he took of the case, it was not, he thought, necessary for him to decide whether or not the wasiatnama (meaning a dedication by will) and a wakfnama made by one of the sons created trusts which were valid and subsisting; but that, as evidence had been taken, and there had been much discussion on the subject, he thought he ought to make certain observations. The learned Judge appears not to have intended these observations to be a decision upon the validity of the wakfnama. The actual judgment is contained in the passage at the end of the judgment, where the learned Judge says: "The question is this. Is the plaintiff who purchased from some of the persons entitled, who received possession from the persons then in complete possession either for themselves or on behalf of themselves and others, and was actually, as I have found, in complete possession, entitled to have his rights declared as against a mere trespasser, who without any shadow of title is contesting the plaintiff's right? I think he is, and I think that he is so entitled, whether or not the will of Khubulla and the wakfnama of Ramzanulla created a good wakf. The defendant has no title of any kind, and the plaintiff has at least a title subject to the wakf. I must make a decree in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of the prayer of the plaint." By the decree as drawn up, it is declared that the plaintiff is "the sole and absolute owner of the land and premises in the plaint mentioned," and that the same have not been dedicated for religious or charitable purposes, and that the defendant has no interest therein or in any part thereof." It is to be observed that, according to the judgment, the decree apparently was not intended to declare that there had been no dedication. The defendant appealed, and the case was heard before the Chief Justice and two other Judges. They were of opinion that there was a dedication, and that consequently the property could not be alienated by the heirs of Khubulla as their own; that the persons [842] from whom "the plaintiff" purchased had no title to convey; and that, although "the plaintiff" had been in possession for the last six years, he had been in possession without title. The judgment proceeds as follows:—"The position of Mahomed Ghous, the defendant, appears to be this. He claims to be the mutwalli, but the evidence upon this record not only does not show that he is the mutwalli, but it shows that he is not, so that, so far as Mahomed Ghous is concerned, he had not absolutely any more interest in this property, and any more right to interfere with it, than any coolie in the street, and his action in interfering with the tenants and in preventing them from paying the rent was absolutely illegal, and absolutely unjustifiable upon the evidence as it appears before us. Then we have this state of things: we have a person in possession of this property for six years past without any title, and we have him wilfully, improperly, and illegally interfered with by a person who has no title himself. Under these circumstances the plaintiff claims relief under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and we then have to consider what his rights are under that section. That section, as I said just now, was passed for the purpose of enabling persons who have a title, and whose title has been threatened, to bring this action for the purpose of having that title declared, but such an action seems to us to be absolutely inappropriate in cases in which the person has no title whatever, because we cannot give a declaration of something that is untrue; we cannot declare that this person, the plaintiff, has a title, when, as a matter of fact, it is shown he has none."

It appears to their Lordships that there is here a misapprehension of the nature of the plaintiff's case upon the facts stated in the judgment. The possession of the plaintiff was sufficient evidence of title as owner against the defendant. By s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act (Act I of 1877), if the plaintiff had been dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law, he could, by a suit instituted within six months from the date of the dispossession, have recovered possession, notwithstanding any other title that might be set up in such suit. If he could thus recover possession from a person who might be able to prove a title, it is [843] certainly right and just that he should be able, against a person who has no title and is a mere wrong-doer, to obtain a declaration of title as owner, and an injunction to restrain the wrong-doer from interfering with his possession. The appellate Court, in accordance with the judgment above quoted, has dismissed the suit. Consequently, the defendant may continue to wilfully, improperly, and illegally interfere with the plaintiff's possession, as the learned Judges say he has done, and the plaintiff has no remedy. Their Lordships are of opinion that the suit should not have been dismissed; and that the plaintiff was entitled in it to a declaration of his title to the land. It was not necessary for him to negative that the land was dedicated to religious or charitable purposes, a question upon which the original and appellate Court have differed, and which, as the only defendant was not entitled to maintain the wakfnama, and other persons would not be bound by an adverse decision, their Lordships do not decide. That declaration should be omitted from the decree. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the appellate Court, and order the defendant to pay the costs of the appeal to that Court, and to affirm the decree of Mr. Justice Trevelyan, substituting for the words "the sole and absolute owner"—"lawfully entitled to possession," and after the words "in the plaint mentioned," omitting "and that the same have not been dedicated for religious or charitable purposes." The respondent will pay the costs of this appeal.

Champerty—Agreement to share property the subject of suit—Claim for payment for work done and expenses properly incurred.

The English law of champerty is not in force in India. Agreements made by claimants of property in litigation to share it with others on their [844] obtaining decrees in consideration of funds being supplied by the latter for carrying on their suits, are not in themselves opposed to public policy, nor are they necessarily void. But such agreements, when extortionate, are inequitable; and in that case should not receive effect. Although the present suit failed for this last reason, still reasonable compensation, under the claim for general relief for work done and expense properly incurred, could be awarded, as it had been by the appellate Court below.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by Kunwar Ram Lal, now represented by the appellants, on an agreement to obtain proprietary possession of 6³/₄th annas share in some villages in the Kheri district. To this property the defendants together with Hira Lal had become entitled in 1882, as heirs of one Basant Singh. In order to obtain the recognition by the revenue authorities and the Government, of their claim to succeed against other supposed claimants, the defendants, with Hira Lal, employed Kunwar Ram Lal, making on the 3rd November 1882 the agreement on which this suit was brought. The agreement was that when Nil Kanth and the other claimants should have been put into possession of the property, they would, in consideration of the expense incurred by Kunwar Ram Lal, and his exertions in their cause, convey to him by sale-deed a 9-annas share. It was alleged in the plaint that Hira Lal had performed his part of the agreement, but that the defendants had refused to perform their part.

The agreement recited that the Government had taken possession of the estate of Basant Singh, and many claimants stood in the way of the promisors' legal rights, continuing (as translated) thus:—

"Whereas Kunwar Ram Lal has taken upon himself the liability to pay all expenses, the prosecution and conduct of suit in its course from the Miscellaneous Revenue Side up to the Civil Court, therefore we, the promisors, agree in writing that as soon as we, or any of us, are put in possession of the property, either from the Revenue Department, or Civil Court, we shall immediately sell outright to the said Kunwar Sahib, his heirs and representatives, 9-annas share (hakkiat) of the entire estate, in lieu of the expenses to be incurred by him, and his exertions, and prosecution of the suit, by duly executing a separate sale-deed."

[845] The defendants did not deny the execution of the agreement, but contended that it was obtained from them by fraud and undue influence, and that there was no opposition to their claim, so that there had been no consideration adequate to their promise. At the hearing it was shown that Kunwar Ram Lal had paid Bansi Lal, the vakil, who appeared for the claimants, Rs. 5,500.

The District Judge dismissed the suit with costs. He was of opinion that, though the defendants might have given their consent freely to the agreement, they had been led to believe that their legal expenses would be approximately an equivalent to the value of the share which they agreed to transfer. He found that the consideration which the defendants had expected to be given was not given; but the expenditure had been mere waste on the part of Kunwar Ram Lal, not having been required for the occasion; and that little work had been done, not much having been necessary.

The Judicial Commissioner varied the decree of the first Court by awarding to the appellant the sum of Rs. 1,000, with proportionate costs; but refused to decree specific performance of the agreement. He considered that Kunwar Ram Lal, in obtaining the execution of the agreement, had taken advantage of the defendants' ignorance; and that he, although bound to disclose to them the real state of the case, had misrepresented it; making out that the claim was contested, and precarious. Accordingly, save as to the extent above stated, he affirmed the judgment of the first Court.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellant, argued against the view that an extortionate bargain had been attempted, and referred to Ramcoomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee (1) as showing that the English law of champerty was inapplicable.

The respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

LORD MORRIS.—This case comes on appeal from the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, and the respondents have not appeared to defend it. It is a claim by Kunwar Ram Lal, the predecessor of the appellants, to have a sale deed executed and for delivery of proprietary possession of $6\frac{3}{4}$ annas share of certain villages. [846] It appears that one Basant had been the grantee of and in possession of the property in question, and that on his death his widow, Mussumat Maikan, became the possessor. She died in 1882; on her death one Hira Lal, who was the first cousin of Basant, claimed the property; the first respondent Nil Kanth, the father of Mussumat Maikan, also claimed. In October 1882 certain persons petitioned the Government, alleging that they were old hereditary zemindars of part of the property, and praying to be restored to the possession of it. That petition was rejected on the 8th of December 1882, and possession was given by the Government to Nil Kanth and Hira Lal, who had agreed to divide the property in the proportion of $4\frac{1}{4}$ annas to Hira Lal and the remaining $11\frac{3}{4}$ annas to Nil Kanth and other relatives of Mussumat Maikan. The plaintiff in this suit sought to enforce against Nil Kanth and other relatives of Mussumat Maikan an agreement dated 3rd November 1882; Hira Lal, one of the parties to the agreement, not being made a defendant to the suit on the ground that he was alleged to have performed his part of the agreement. The agreement provided that, in consideration of the plaintiff having taken upon himself the liability to pay all expenses of the prosecution of the suit of the defendants and Hira Lal to get possession of the property, they agreed with him that as soon as they were put in possession they would sell to him a 9-annas share of the property, in lieu of and in consideration of the expenses to be incurred by the plaintiff in the prosecution of the case. This agreement was signed by the defendants and Hira Lal.

The District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim, on the ground that the agreement was unfair, that the defendants were misled into the belief that the expenses would be approximately equivalent to the value of the share agreed to be transferred, and consequently that it would be against public policy to enforce it. The Judicial Commissioner, on appeal, arrived at the same conclusion, but under the prayer for general relief in the petition of plaint he awarded the plaintiff a thousand rupees as compensation for any expenses legitimately incurred by him.

The English law of champerty is not in force in India, and documents which set up agreements to share the subject of litigation if recovered, in consideration of supplying funds to carry [847] it on, are not in themselves opposed to public policy; but such documents should be jealously scanned, and when found to be extortionate and unconscionable, they are inequitable as against the party against whom relief is sought, and effect should not be given to them. The plaintiff in this suit was a money-lender, and was dealing with illiterate persons; he must have represented to them the likelihood and the necessity of extensive litigation, a representation unwarranted by the facts; further, the fee paid to the vakil,

No evidence was given that the assertion made in the agreement of the 3rd of November, to the effect that to recover possession for the defendants would require large sums of money, was true, or that the plaintiff had any ground for believing it to be true. In fact, the proceedings were brief and simple. The widow died on the 27th September 1882; the zamindars' claims were rejected on the 8th of December; the controversy between the widow's heirs and her husband's was settled by agreement before the 3rd of November, and the parties were put into possession in December. In such circumstances their Lordships concur with the view of the transaction taken by the District Judge and the Judicial Commissioner. Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal be dismissed.
